"The pain can vary from hour to hour, day to day, week to week. It can be everywhere or all throughout your body. The pain can be stabbing. It can be burning. It can be deep, deep aching."

HUMAN NUTRITION INSTRUCTOR

Above: Sharon Morcos laughs while holding her godson Jaydon Thomas in the living room of the house she shares with her husband Medhat. Sharon is unable to pick up or carry Jaydon but loves to hold him. Jaydon's mom, Jennifer Rettele Thomas, was a student of Sharon's who she now considers to be their daughter.

Doctrine of hope

Sharon Morcos keeps faithful spirit despite severe chronic pain

Story by Sarah Rice | Photos by Nicole Coleman

You can't tell by looking at her.

She sits in an arm chair with her legs folded beneath her, almost child-like. Her eyes sparkle as she talks without a moment of pause. She talks of her work, her God and her husband with such passion that you would never know anything was wrong.

But, looking closer, you start to notice. She begins to adjust her posture as she gently rubs her legs, knee to ankle. She cradles her hand against her chest without even realizing it. She gets up, restlessly, to turn on the ceiling fan or check the answering machine as an excuse to stretch her aching body. The light in her eyes seems to fade.

Sharon Morcos, 50, a K-State human nutrition instructor, lives with severe chronic pain from more than a dozen ailments. Just sitting and talking for a few hours will wear her out for days.

Voting gap might be shrinking

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

More women in the 1990s and 2000 voted for Democrats than Republicans, whereas men were more likely to vote Republican.

This split has been labeled the gender gap.

Out of the total number of voters in 2000, 53.5 percent were female and 46.5 percent were male, according to the U.S. Census Bureau, making the female vote an important one to obtain.

But this year the gap may not be as wide.

James Franke, professor of political science, said the gap will likely not be as noticeable.

"There was a big difference in 1992, '96 and 2000," he said. "It doesn't appear to be there compared to the '92, '96 and 2000 elections."

The reason for this possible change is a shift in what issues are important, Franke said.

"The so-called 'soccer moms' of the 90's and 2000 have turned in the 'security mom' of 2004," he said. "They can't decide who's better."

During the Clinton era, Franke said, social issues such as crime, violence and drugs were more important, but now the more important issues involve war and terrorism.

However, Kerry is still working to Program encourages voting

Manhattan elementary school children recently voted on whether to have anchovies in their ice cream and when to read a Halloween story.

Woodrow Wilson Principal Katha Hurt said the Kids Voting Kansas program uses a variety of tools to educate children on their rights and responsibilities as citizens.

"We hope to spark some kid's interest in civics and good citizenship," she said. "They get a hands-on experience that can help them learn more about voting and elections."

The Kids Voting Kansas program was established in 1988 in Arizona with the goal of educating children and thus creating a higher voter turn out in the future.

Hurt said there will be polls set up for the children so they can vote while their parents do.

"In some areas, it increased the adult turnout in the polls 3 to 4 percent," she said.

"If they cannot make it to the polls, the child can fill out an absentee ballot here at school."

Your guide to this weekend's entertainment

1 | BLUES MAN

He might have Georgia on his mind, but if you're a lover of blues music, you've had the movie "Ray" on your mind ever since you heard about it going into production.

The biopic, which examines the life of Ray Charles, stars Jamie Foxx in the title role.

The film chronicles Charles' struggles after going blind at age seven, as well as his rise to stardom, where he revolutionized the world of jazz and tried to keep afloat amid a drug addiction that threatened to ruin his career and life.

The film, rated PG-13, opens today in theaters nationwide.

2 | TAKING TEXAS DOWN

Coming off a victory over Nebraska last week, the Cats gear up for a showdown against Texas Tech.

The game, which will bring to a close the annual All-University Homecoming, is the first between K-State and Texas Tech since 2001. With this weekend's game the Cats look for their first two consecutive wins this season.

Kickoff is at 6:10 p.m. Saturday at KSU Stadium.

3 | GOING INCOGNITO

Show your spirit in honor of the Halloween season Sunday by carving a pumpkin or going trick-or-treating. Many last-minute costumes can be inexpensive and cheap (if you have spare bedsheets, think Charlie Brown's cliche ghost costume). Or, if you're up for a quiet evening at home, waiting for the Great Pumpkin to arrive, keep a big bowl of candy by the door in case the neighborhood children come by — if you're not the generous type, you can always scare them away by playing dead on your front doorstep.

4 | MORE TREATS, LESS TRICKS

Get some mileage out of your Halloween costume before wearing it to Saturday's football game by wearing it to the Union Program Council's After Hours program tonight.

After Hours this weekend features a costume party in the Union Courtyard, where pirate and ghost, angel and demon can meet in a Halloween-themed social setting. While there, scare up some ghoulish grub with free Halloween treats.

At midnight, prepare to be scared silly when UPC screens the movie "Gothika," in which a psychologist (Halle Berry) awakens from a coma to find she's a prisoner of the mental institution in which she works — and that she's been accused of murder.

All After Hours events are free and open to the public.

Speaker denounces PATRIOT Act

ACLU president stresses issues of civil rights during lecture

By Kristi Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Nadine Strossen stressed the changes the PATRIOT Act has brought to civil liberties in America in the 10th annual Dorothy Thompson Civil Rights Lecture.

Strossen was the first Dorothy Thompson Civil Rights Lecture speaker in 1994.

Strossen, American Civil Liberties Union president, presented "Current Challenges to Civil Liberties" Thursday night at McCain Auditorium. She said there are two provisions in the PATRIOT Act that are issues to be considered when lobbying to elected officials.

Forty-three states and 358 communities have passed pro-civil rights bills, Strossen said. Lawrence is the only Kansas city that has passed such a bill.

"We've seen an astounding success with this, but the Kansas constituents have not shown their concerns enough with preserving civil liberties," Strossen said.

Strossen called the "sneak and peek" provision in the PATRIOT Act a dangerous measure if passed by the Legislature.

The typical congress Strossen described was not present on the vote for the provision. She said it was supported by both "the most liberal democrats and the most conservative republicans."

Strossen called the availability of private information through the PATRIOT Act an infringement upon civil liberties.

"The key problems with this have nothing to do with the availability of information, but instead that the sweeping new powers are the worst of both worlds," Strossen said. "They make us less free and not any safer, this is diverting the attention from the real problems in America."

With the passage of the aforementioned provisions in Congress, Strossen said campus library, bookstore and computer labs information can be requested at will by the government. She said the provision jeopardizes members of the campus community.

"There's a resolution right now to send warnings to students about these infringements on their rights and calls for libraries, stores and computer labs to destroy their records more often," Strossen said.

A lawsuit was filed April 6 by the ACLU against a provision of the PATRIOT Act, and Strossen said she was not told about the lawsuit until April 28. She said one of the lawyers for the ACLU had to consult with her before allowing any disclosure of the information.

"I still get chills knowing it wasn't until several weeks later that I found out about a lawsuit," Strossen said.

Strossen said her speech is not a campaign strategy because both parties have supported and rejected provisions of the PATRIOT Act.

"Don't hold the infringements against me, but instead against every government official including the Kansas representatives who have voted for the PATRIOT Act," Strossen said.

Planning Board approves Miller Ranch rezoning for 134 new homes

By Tony Herrman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan soon will get 134 new homes.

The housing units will be available in a 79-acre section of Miller Ranch that was approved for rezoning during the last Urban Area Planning Board meeting.

All of the 134 lots will be low density, or one to 11 dwelling units per acre, and will be one- or two-family homes. Before being rezoned, the land was zoned for agriculture use.

Mike Toy, vice chair of the board, said it is all a case of supply and demand.

"It's staying with the trend of strong growth over the last couple of years," he said.

Roger Shultz, whose company will develop the land, declined to comment until contract finalization on Dec. 7.

Mike Kratochvil, board member, said there was little response about the rezoning at the hearing.

"There were several who spoke about increased traffic in the Amherst area, but nothing negative about new homes being built," he said.

Part of the rezoning included a conical zone airport overlay.

"It's related to airport height restriction," Steve Zilke, senior city planner, said. "All trees and any structures built in the area have to be reviewed by the FAA."

Before the board makes a recommendation, it considers a set of standards including conformance with the comprehensive plan created by the city.

Low-density property is one of the standards. Another is a conservation and drainage easement that prohibits residents from altering the property.

Kratochvil said he understood the reasons for the easement, but was still weary.

"I hate the government being able to tell people what they can do and cannot do to their own property," he said.

Toy said he did not think the easement would keep people from purchasing units.

He mentioned the neighborhood north of Kimball Avenue that includes St. Christopher, St. Michael, St. James and St. Andrew Circles as a wetland – similar to Miller Park – in Manhattan that has been developed.

"I'm sure the developer looked into (selling the units) since he has more exposure with the issue," Toy said. "There are some pretty good-sized lots up there that are really attractive."

Board member Loren Pepperd is a real estate agent with G & A Real Estate, and he said the easement should have been zoned as public so homeowners don't have to pay taxes on unusable land.

He said some properties are about two acres large, but homeowners have access to only about 11 percent due to the easement.

From the realtor's perspective, he said the easement can cause disclosure problems. It is the real estate company's responsibility to disclose all of a properties material defenses.

"I know of homeowners who unknowingly built a fence in a drainage easement, and a few months later the city told them to move it," he said.

"They told the real estate agent, 'I want you to help me move it,' and they had to because they were required by law."

TO THE POINT

Civic education for children aids young, old alike

Second graders in Riley County are learning to do things many adults don't know how to do – vote.

Through a program called Kids Voting Kansas, school children of all ages are learning about the electoral process and taking part in mock elections.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Numerous studies have shown that programs like this have been effective at promoting active involvement in the process by exposing children to voting at a young age.

In addition to this, when ballots for children are available at the polls, it can serve as motivation for the parents of involved children to vote, as well.

Programs like this are a prime example of ways that elementary schools and elementary school teachers can work wonders by educating children in things beyond just reading, writing and arithmetic.

This program, its founders and administrators should be commended for the job they do to encourage our young people to become active and informed members of our society when the time comes.

Also, this program and others like it should continue to examine why children lose their enthusiasm to vote by the time they actually reach voting age.

Celebrating fright

Halloween parties, costumes not just for children

ABBY HILES

Just between you and me, I'm a little freaked out about the next week or so.

The presidential election happens Tuesday, which could very well decide the fate of our great nation. On Wednesday, I have a presentation on Tennessee Williams to give in one of my classes. And I finally will get my midterm back in American Lit, something I'm pretty much dreading.

The truth is, though, those three things are really not even comparable to the stress mounting on me for Saturday. That's right. This Saturday is the night of drunken collegiate debauchery known as the Halloween costume party.

And this year, my anxiety level has risen to an all-time high. My friends have expectations of me to out do previous years of dressing up (my angel costume two years ago was bank, complete with feathered wings and halo).

And I have expectations of myself, as well, to out shine others. Although the chances of my beating my friends as they parade around as the cast of "A Nightmare Before Christmas" is pretty slim, that doesn't mean I'm not going to try.

You see, last year I didn't have this stress. I didn't even dress up. I just went to Fat's, had a fishbowl and played pool with some friends. I thought I was over Halloween and dressing up and making a general fool of myself.

However, on the way we walked by Rusty's just to get a peek of their festivities and to see what others had come up with for their annual costume contest. And let me tell you, I had never been more jealous of anything in my entire life.

People showed up in groups dressed as the Ghostbusters, or as couples dressed as Adam and Eve, and even two girls walking around with an inflatable penis and blue sweatshirts on, claiming they had come as "blue balls."

If you aren't heading to a particular spookified party this weekend, I would suggest heading down to the 'Ville and checking out one of the bars' costume contests.

Drinks are cheap, the crowd is crazy and any chance to possibly see your recitation GTA in drag, complete with fishnets, is worth it. Plus, if you decide to partake in the contest itself, the prizes are pretty good and you can walk around knowing your version of the "Naughty Nurse" is better than anyone else's.

And if you haven't yet thought about your costume, don't worry about it. There is still time before the weekend to run out and pull something together.

The year I was an angel, my date decided to be the devil at the last minute and ran out three hours before the party to Wal-Mart and grabbed a kid's devil costume-in-a-bag (complete with horns and a tail) and ended up looking fine.

The point is, whether you are completely stressing out about the perfection of your costume (like me) or are planning on throwing on a sheet and being a ghost at the last minute, taking part in this holiday is still be a pretty good time. After all, who said Halloween hijinks has to stop after puberty? Certainly not I.

So as I head to the mall to get the last nuance of my costume – a cigarette holder, (after all, Cruella DeVil would not be complete without one), my stress level lowers a few notches.

I still have that presentation next week and the country (hopefully) will have a new president to inaugurate, but for the moment I am just awaiting Saturday and all the madness that, I hope, ensues.

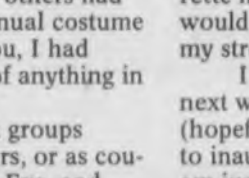
JONAS HOGG

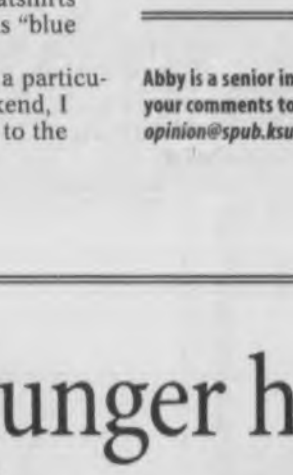


Jonas Hogg contemplates the idea of the United Nations as a global landlord.

JEREMY PARKER

Jeremy Parker believes that, like it or not, gay marriage is inevitable.

World hunger has many viable solutions



LETA REPPERT

Coming soon to a grocery store near you – new and improved guinea pigs!

That's right – guinea pigs. And I did say "grocery store."

Scientists in Peru have begun breeding a larger guinea pig and has even begun to export them to the United States and other countries, as reported by the British Broadcasting Corp.

I'm not entirely convinced this will be a successful marketing move, since most of us think guinea pigs should either be pets or lab animals, but in countries like Peru, guinea pigs can be an important part of the diets of poor families.

In places like the United States, we have the luxury of being grossed out by the idea of eating "pets," but in many other parts of the world, food is food, even if it is cute and furry.

I'm not advocating we all start eating fluffy little rodents; rather, we should remember people in other parts of the world have no other choice.

According to the World Food Programme, run by the United Nations, one person dies every five seconds from lack of food.

This is not the way it has to be. Even with close to seven billion people in the world, the World Food Programme says there is enough food for all of us. In spite of this, "over 800 million people remain chronically hungry." That means some of us are taking more than our share.

There are things we can do to make a difference.

The Hunger Site, www.thehungersite.com, is a Web site which helps get food to hungry people.

By clicking on the "Give free food" link, you will be taken to a page with links to the sites of donor companies. These companies will donate food for each person who clicks to donate; that way, the company gets advertising, and hungry people get food. It doesn't cost you anything.

Of course, there is a limit to the amount corporate donors will do. But giving food is surprisingly cheap.

According to the World Food Programme, $34 can "feed a poor student for an entire school year," which comes to 19 cents a day, by their calculations. That means that for every phone call you make from a payphone, you could be feeding a child for two days.

The World Food Programme is in urgent need of donations. According to the Independent Online, a South African news organization, the Programme has just been forced to reduce the amount of food it provides to refugees in Tanzania because of lack of support. Donations can be made online or by mail, by going to www.wfp.org.

Another thing that we can do is make our concerns known to our elected officials. Let's face it; donating food will help in the short term, but major development needs to be done in poor countries so that they can support themselves for the long term. You know – give a man a fish and all that.

Our government needs to be involved in promoting self-sufficiency in poor nations and promoting the peace that will make this possible. If we don't make this an issue, no one else is going to.

All this writing about food has made me hungry. I wonder where my guinea pig went.

To James Hurla and most of the Collegian staff, don't criticize bias and then print your own.

I'm confused. On which day did God create marriage?

Hey, the quote was, "If you don't like how left-wing the Collegian is, then you can git — G-I-T — out. Don't you guys watch "South Park?"

Can somebody please make the bikers choose whether they're pedestrians or vehicles?

Way to go, greek people. You can paint a billboard of Willie giving birth to a Powercat. Alright.

I just want to say that Allen Webb is one hell of a quarterback.

Shanna Hajek, if I had a full beer, I'd dump it on you.

Hey, Altaf Karim: the INS just called. They want their visa back.

Everybody wear your costumes to the game Saturday.

Hey, I was wondering if the announcer at the K-State games could say the Pledge of Allegiance a little faster this weekend.

Nobody is put on this earth to tell two people they cannot be happy. Go gay marriage.

I got so high today, I actually laughed at "Everybody Loves Raymond."

Pant the Chant is the worst thing ever.

Pant the Chant wasted three hours of my life. Thanks a lot, homecoming.

I hate homecoming week.

I thought Gumby's had fast, free delivery. Oh, not on Wednesday. Real nice.

If I were a Fiji or a Tri-Delt, I'd have my letters under my collar, too.

Actually, there's nothing more pathetic than jealous wives who blame other women for their husbands' wandering eyes.

Hi, I'm the woman who's supposedly destroying marriages and friendships. Just an FYI: I'm not desperate, and if you paid more attention to your husband, then he wouldn't be paying attention to me.

Hey, FarmHouse and the rest of your partners: last time I checked, KU had the yellow goal posts, not us.

I think somebody needs to get Rusty's back on the right track because, boy, they ain't on it.

Lights flickering on and off, punching bags swaying and cups moving across the table. If it's not someone playing a prank on you, it could be a ghost.

It's said that K-State has its fair share of ghosts running around the campus and fraternity houses. Here's a few spooky stories just in time for Halloween.

PURPLE MASQUE — SOMETHING LURKING IN THE SHADOWS

The most famous ghost of K-State is the ghost of the Purple Masque, Nick.

The story behind Nick varies from person to person, but Charlotte McFarland, associate professor of theatre, said Nick died because of an accident.

"At the time of Nick's accident, there was not a football team at K-State, and it's believed that Nick was on an intramural team," McFarland said. "He had an accident on the field and died in – what was at that time – the cafeteria before his parents could get there."

Nick has been known to move things, lock doors, turn lights on and off and even appear as a shadow. McFarland said she has had her share of experiences with Nick since she came to K-State.

"I was once rehearsing a play and had all the doors locked with all my actors either on stage or in the chairs when I saw figure appear behind the backdrop," McFarland said. "I saw the silhouette and I figured it was someone playing a prank on us.

"I eventually interrupted the scene and asked who was there. The actors on stage turned around, saw the shadow and screamed and ran off the stage. I went to see who was there and as I got closer the figure vanished."

McFarland said she was never one to believe in ghosts or the paranormal and even after this incident she didn't believe in Nick.

"The next day I was teaching a class and was telling them about what had happened," McFarland said. "I then said out loud, 'Well, Nick, you sure scared me last night, but I still don't believe in you.' Just as I said that, the light bulb above me broke and glass fell."

McFarland said this caused her to reevaluate her belief.

"No one can just disappear. I experienced something there," McFarland said.

THE GHOST OF PI KAPPA PHI

The ghosts of K-State reach beyond the campus.

Duncan is said to be the ghost that haunts the Pi Kappa Phi fraternity house.

Duncan, according to legend, was a pledge and is believed to have been killed during an initiation while the house was still Theta Xi.

Brian Keeley, junior in construction science, who now lives in the house, elaborated the story of Duncan.

"Duncan is said to have been killed while being paddled in the ceremony," Keeley, president of Pi Kappa Phi, said. "They had hung the paddle on their wall. After Theta Xi moved out, Phi

Keep it simple when explaining sexual history

LACEY STORER

When you are dating somebody, you share things with them. You share your feelings, your dreams, your penchant for "Full House" reruns. Most likely you tell them about the people who came before them – why he was insensitive or how she always needed attention.

But when you start talking about how many of those people you slept with, you start getting into dangerous territory. The number of people you've had sex with is a revelation that has the potential to start a serious conflict in your relationship.

To me, knowing your partner's number isn't necessary for the relationship to flourish. As long as you know the important facts, like whether they've had sex before and if they're free of sexually transmitted diseases, you're covered.

I don't see the need for many more specifics than that.

The kind of sexual lifestyle you had before you met your current partner doesn't dictate the type of person you are now, but it can cause people to judge you. It may even give them grounds for rethinking the relationship. This is especially true if it's early in the relationship.

If their number is a lot higher than yours, or a lot higher than you'd like it to be, you might think they're a slut or a manwhore. You may start to wonder what kind of morals they have.

If it's a number that's a lot lower than yours, or lower than you'd like it to be, then you wonder why they aren't more experienced. Are they just picky about whom they sleep with (hopefully), or is it because the opposite sex doesn't find them attractive?

And you never know when jealousy will come into play. People may say they'll be fine with your answer, and they probably believe they will be, too, but things can change once you tell them. This is the kind of question where people want only one answer and if you tell them something they don't like, they get upset.

But I digress. I know this doesn't always turn out badly. Some people have no problem with sharing their number and it does nothing to hurt the relationship. They may even feel closer because they're comfortable enough to share this bit of information.

My advice is to proceed with caution when this issues arises. Think about how you'll react and consider whether or not you really need this piece of information.

And in the end, who they were with before doesn't matter, as long as you're the only one they're with now.

Sharon relies on fai

Through life of struggles, nutrition instructor leans on Catholic faith, loving husband

Sometimes she wakes up screaming. The pain is so great she no longer can hold it in.

"The pain can vary from hour to hour, day to day, week to week," she says. "It can be everywhere or all throughout your body. The pain can be stabbing. It can be burning. It can be deep, deep aching."

Sharon has what doctors say are two of the most painful conditions a person can have – fibromyalgia and coccydynia. Fibromyalgia is a soft tissue disease that causes severe chronic pain in the tendons and muscles. Coccydynia is chronic pain resulting from an injury to the tailbone.

It all began in 1999.

After a few accidental falls on campus – once a slip after stepping on an acorn and another tripping down a stairwell – Sharon thought she had healed. But pain in her neck and shoulders intensified, and her hips and lower back began to ache.

"I felt like someone had given me an injection, bruised me and then came and kicked me," Sharon says. "I would try to get out of a chair and freeze because I felt like a knife was cutting through me."

Fibromyalgia affects the transmitters that tell the brain to stop experiencing pain.

Sharon has weekly appointments with a pain management doctor, Steve Peloquin.

"The signal that causes pain has a portion that tells it to shut off. People with fibromyalgia don't have as good of a shut-off switch," Dr. Peloquin says.

But that's not the end of Sharon's medical problems. The list is so long she says she sometimes forgets. In addition to fibromyalgia and coccyx pain, Sharon suffers from spinal arthritis, arthritis in her hands and knees, an acid-reflux disease, carpal tunnel syndrome, bone spurs in all 10 fingers, osteoporosis, fatigue, thyroid disease, heart disease, a congenital heart defect and elevated cholesterol levels.

Sharon's doctors tried everything – ice packs, heat, electric shocks and weekly massage therapy. Nothing could reduce the pain, yet Sharon continued to teach.

"The pain was so severe, I would finish class and get to my car. I would grab the steering wheel and deep breathe so I wouldn't vomit. It was that bad."

At Mayo Clinic, Sharon found her pain was hard to talk about. She was asked to categorize her pain on a scale of one to 10 – she gave it a five or six. Doctors knew she was lying, that the pain she was experiencing was much more severe, but it was too hard for Sharon to admit her pain had reached unbearable levels.

"It erodes you. It's like a water faucet dripping. Drip by drip, it drains you. It's hard to never feel good," she says.

Sharon now has found some relief. She had a morphine drip surgically implanted in her abdomen in December. The machine gives her a tiny amount of powerful pain medicine each day. But it's not enough to relieve the majority of her pain, and increasing the dosage only makes Sharon's 5-foot-tall body sicker.

Dr. Peloquin will be the first to admit that Sharon's pain is not under control. For years, he has seen her walk through his doors, sometimes breaking down in tears.

"It just never goes away," he says. "Sharon doesn't ever have any hope she is going to be pain free. It never goes away."

She needs help teaching her two basic nutrition lecture classes with a total of 400 students. She can't twist the cap on her water bottle, and she often has to sit down or lean against a table.

"It's hard to admit," she says. " I don't like to say I can't do, I just do different."

Now, Sharon goes to work when her pain is up to an eight on the pain scale. It's those days when she can barely keep from vomiting.

She does her best to stand tall and teach without the pain showing through.

"I tend to fall apart on weekends. If I don't have to be somewhere, I give in."

Sharon has weekly appointments with Dr. Peloquin to adjust her medication or try new pain relieving techniques. She sits in the waiting room for up to two hours – plenty of time for her to hand out encouragement and advice to her fellow patients.

"My eyelashes have never hurt, have yours?" Sharon asks Carol, who is visiting the clinic for the first time. "When things get really bad, just think about your eyelashes."

Dr. Peloquin treats more than 500 patients all of whom experience severe, often chronic, pain. Most give up working when they experience even a fraction of Sharon's pain.

"She's unbelievable," he says. "She looks at it from the perspective of 'crying, whining and complaining isn't going to fix my problem.' There are times when she breaks down. She picks up and keeps going."

While her physical pain is great, Sharon's life story consists of loss and emotional pain that is sometimes even greater.

As a junior at Texas Tech University, Sharon dropped out of the college atmosphere she loved to take care of her dying mother in her hometown of Midland, Texas.

"It's hard to leave, but I didn't even think about it very long," Sharon says. "My adviser said if you leave, you'll never come back, and I said 'watch me.'"

Sharon did come back and graduated in 1977. Although her mother died, she still had a hand in Sharon's future. Her mother would always talk of this boy that she knew her daughter would marry someday.

That boy, Mark Hearne, by then a man, called to express his condolences and asked Sharon to dinner. Nine months later, they married.

Mark was compassionate and had the greatest sense of humor Sharon has ever known. She called him her Prince Charming.

They had secret signs and inside jokes, like most couples. When walking hand in hand, Mark would stroke the inside of Sharon's palm three times, just to remind her of his love.

But after five years of marriage, Mark started forgetting his wife's name. He would smell and taste foods that weren't there. His speech started to slow.

A few months later, Mark was diagnosed with a brain tumor and given one year to live. The couple discussed funeral plans and Sharon's future without her other half.

"We were so truly wedded," Sharon says. "It was often hard for me to figure out where he left off and I began."

Mark lived only three weeks after his diagnosis. In that final week, Sharon sat with him and read Psalms from the Bible to calm his anxious heart rate. Sharon held Mark's hand in the hospital as she prepared herself to say goodbye.

Mark had been unresponsive for days, lying limp in his hospital bed, when suddenly he stroked her palm – three times.

Sharon recalls the doctors telling her, "You will never know this side of heaven what it cost for him to do this."

Sharon buried her husband on her 27th birthday.

But being in his hospital room for his last breath is a memory she looks back at with awe and reverence.

"It's one of the most intense, intimate things you can share with a person," she says. "I realized that curtain between life and death is so sheer and how very close we are to our loved ones."

Sharon eventually found her second Prince Charming, eight years after Mark's death. Sharon had settled at K-State as a dietetics instructor.

Through a mutual friend, she met Medhat "Medo" Morcos, professor of electrical engineering. They married in 1989, just nine months after they met.

Medo, who suffered from a life-threatening heart attack in June, often serves as Sharon's hands, her energy and her strength.

"We really try to take care of each other," Sharon says. "His hands don't hurt, so he doesn't mind bringing in the groceries. He helps me in so many ways. He's my cheerleader."

Sharon and Medo always find time for love in the midst of so much pain. He watches her closely, telling her to slow down when she pushes herself too hard. He helps her sit, carefully positioning his hands to catch her if she falls.

To keep their love strong and spirits high, the couple makes time for a weekly ritual – an ice cream cone date at McDonald's.

"We smash them together, like they are kissing," Sharon says, giggling. "He is my real supporter, and I am his. As we are going into this period of our lives, we learn to slow down, but maintain excellence."

Sharon talks about the blessings in her life before she will even mention her loss and physical suffering. She's careful to balance every negative word with a positive one. Sharon says it is her faith in God that gives her the will to live such a thankful life.

"The essence of who I am is my faith," she says. "He's called me to live out my faith in a world that's broken."

Sharon recently converted to Catholicism and attends mass at St. Isidore's Catholic Student Center.

In their Manhattan home, Sharon and Medo have built a room for morning prayer time. The bright blue carpet and large windows enhance Sharon's moment of solitude when some mornings she thanks God for her life and on other days ask for the strength to live it.

"I know that after this, there is a resurrection," she says. "I've read the final chapter. I know what's going to happen."

Sharon's prayer partner, Anne Carpenter, said it is evident that no matter what pain Sharon feels, she is always optimistic with faith.

"One of the things about being a believer is you are never without hope," Anne says. "No matter how much she is hurting, she has her hope in the Lord. He promises that He will never give us more than we can take and that He will never leave us."

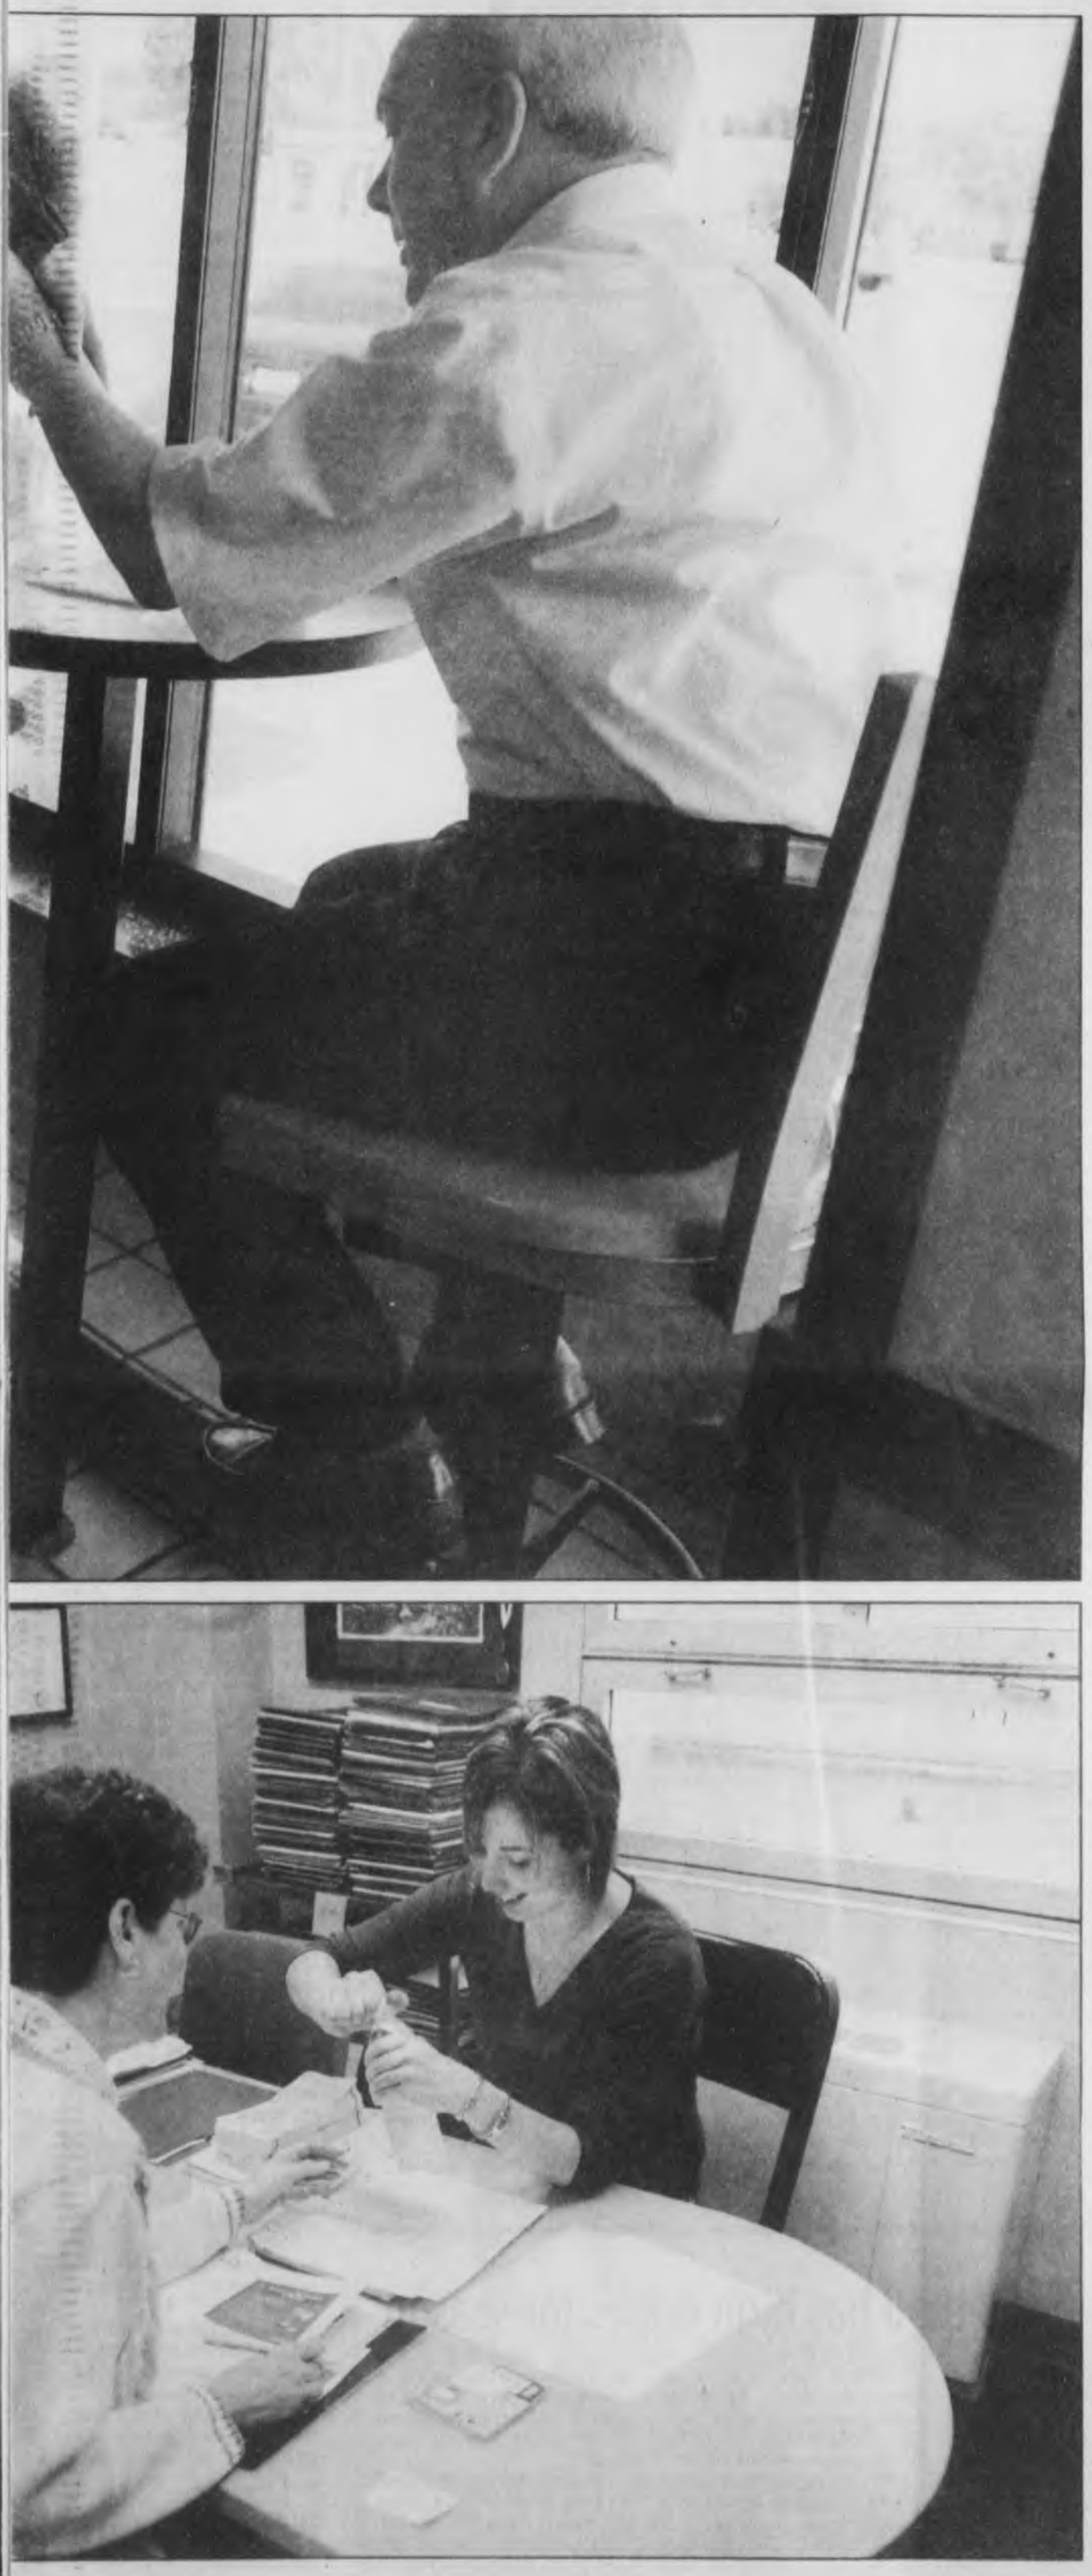
There are bad days, though. Days when Sharon can't get out of bed or when the pain is so great she cries out. She says it's hard to say the word – suffering – it makes her cringe.

"I have hope when He tells us that there will be a time when there will be no more pain, no more sorrow and no more tears," she says.

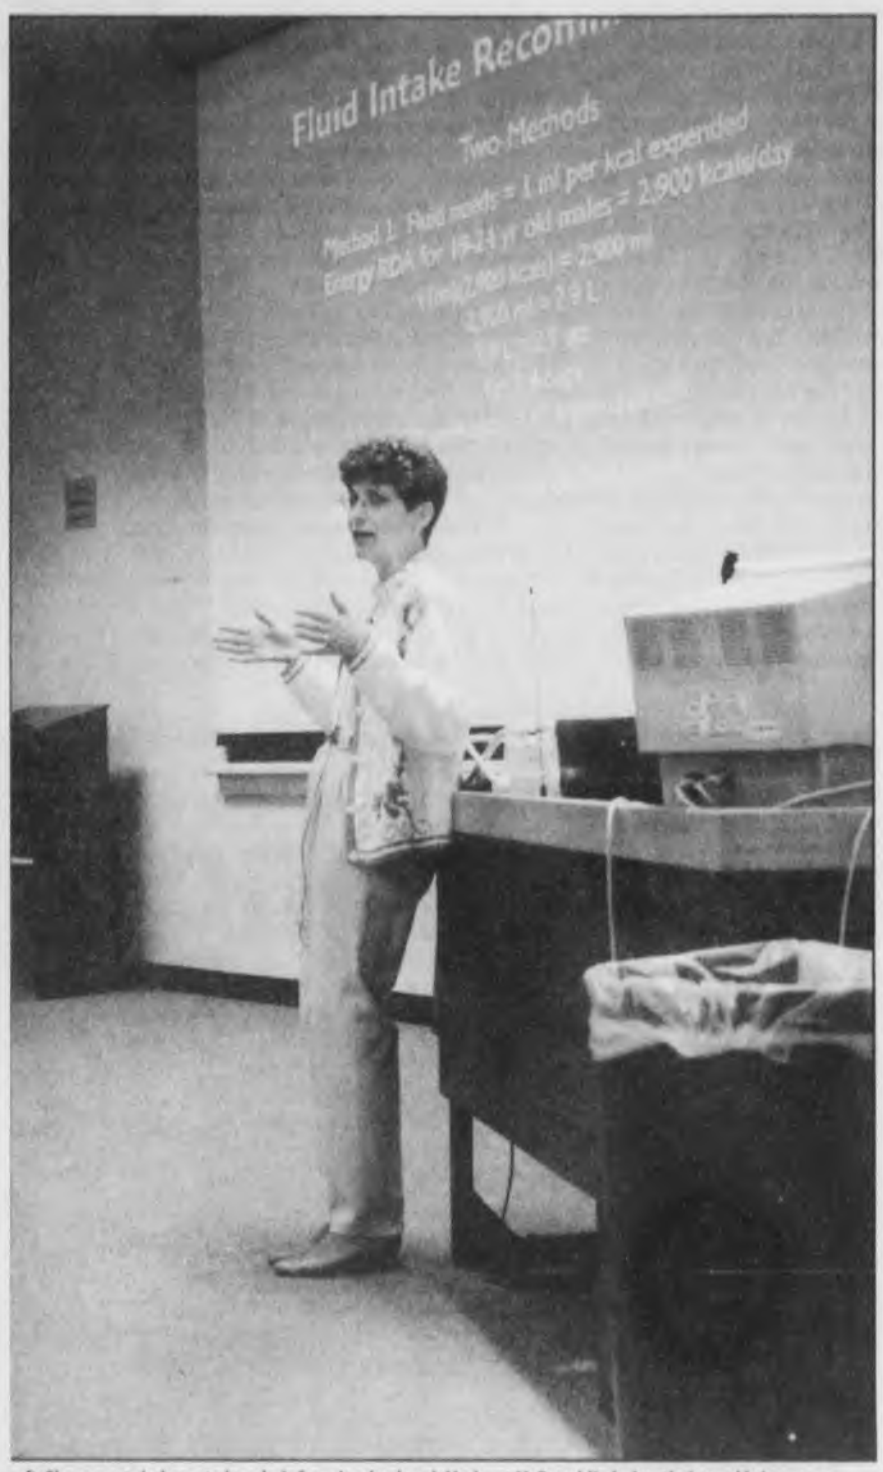
But Sharon knows that it might not get any better. Her body might never be able to handle the right amount of medicine and her medical conditions could eventually get worse.

Her eyes well with tears as she talks about that possibility. But she quickly comes back to her faith – the energy she has to live a life when most people would have given up.

"When I mediate and allow myself to think about the suffering of my Lord, it gives me strength," she says.



"If it doesn't get any better, it's going to be OK."



"One of the things about being a believer is you are never without hope. No matter how muc He promises that He will never give us more than we can take and that

She used to teach one large class in Umberger Hall, but the slanted floor and distance to the parking lot made it difficult for Sharon to teach once her chronic pain developed. She now teaches two classes, each with 200 students, in Justin Hall. Sharon says it's a good day when she can lecture without having to sit down to rest.

Left: Ashley Callewaert, Sharon's undergraduate student assistant, helps open her water bottle while the two work on grading class work in Sharon's office in Justin Hall. Sharon as difficulty teaching her basic nutrition lecture classes because of the intensity of her pain. She says it's often hard for students to understand why their tests are not graded quickly because Sharon's doctors limit her computer time to 45 minutes per day.

Above: Sharon holds her rosary with rosary beads her husband gave her. Sharon is a recent convert to the Catholic Church and attends mass at St. Isidore's Catholic Student Center. She shares that faith with her husband, who is originally from Egypt, and says that praying with her husband is a privilege. It is Sharon's Christian faith to which she credits her strength to go on.

Sharon works on stretches that she is able to do but with great pain at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex. With all the exercises she does, she must do her stretches slowly. Sharon also has weekly massage appointments as well as appointments with her pain management doctor. Although the treatments often cause her great pain, they help loosen her muscles to reduce pain throughout the week.

Cats ready for match with KU

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's Sunflower Showdown part two for the women's volleyball team, as K-State takes on Kansas at 1:30 p.m. Saturday in Ahearn Field House.

The Wildcats topped the Jayhawks earlier this season in Lawrence, winning a tightly contested match, 3-2. No. 18 K-State comes into the rematch with a 13-7 overall record, and a 7-4 record in the Big 12 Conference. Kansas is 13-7 overall and 4-7 in the Big 12 after beating Iowa State 3-0 on Wednesday.

Coach Suzie Fritz said Tuesday K-State will have another tough challenge in their quest for a 20th straight win over the Jayhawks.

"We beat Kansas the last time in a five-game contest, and they played us very, very well," Fritz said. "We're not overlooking the match in any way. We're preparing, and we're trying to put our focus into trying to become a better volleyball team right now."

The Jayhawks feature middle blockers Josi Lima (3.55 kills per game) and Ashley Michaels (1.54 blocks per game), libero Jill Dorsey (4.54 digs per game) and setter Andi Rozum (11.83 assists per game).

Fritz said it is different facing a team for the second time in a season, because each team is familiar with the other's style of play.

"We know what works, we know what didn't work," Fritz said. "We have more information, because we played them the first time. So I think we're better prepared going into it, but I think they probably are as well."

K-State had all week to prepare for Kansas after a bye Wednesday.

Fritz said the break came at a great time because it offered her team a chance for rest at what can be a very tiring time at the halfway point of the conference season.

"It's far enough in that you can't see too far back, and it's far enough out that you can't see too far forward," Fritz said. "There's still a lot of season. What I have found is, this is the time of year that is very hard to keep your team centered and focused and motivated about playing volleyball."

The Cats should be able to find some of that motivation from their in-state counterparts, Fritz said.

"Any time Kansas plays Kansas State it's a rivalry," she said. "This one for sure has something special, because it's the two major universities in the state of Kansas battling, and people get really excited for that."

Vali Hejjas puts down a spike against Baylor during the Cats' match on Oct. 20. K-State's next home match is at 1:30 p.m. on Saturday against Kansas at Ahearn Field House.

Big 12 championship competition should test Cat runners' abilities

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Coach Michael Smith said the race this weekend is what his team has been preparing for all season.

"This is the meet that matters to us," Smith said. "This is what we aim for. This is what we care most about."

The Wildcats will have their work cut out for them, as the Big 12 Conference is host to some of the top ranked teams in the country.

On the men's side, Colorado is ranked third, Oklahoma State follows at 21st, and Texas is ranked 29th. Similarly, three women's teams are ranked. Like the men, Colorado comes into the meet ranked third. Missouri ninth, and Baylor is ranked 31st.

Senior Trisha Culbertson said the team will have to give their best effort in order to be successful on Saturday.

"The Big 12 is really competitive," Culbertson said. "We are going to have to go in there knowing that it is going to be competitive, and even though we've done fairly well in the past, we are going to have to work hard."

Since the Wildcats are hosting the meet, the teams have had a chance to train on the course they will run Saturday. The Wildcats raced on the course in the Wildcat Invitational on Sept. 11.

Coach Smith said his runners' knowledge of the course will give them an edge over the other teams in the field.

"We've practiced out there a number of times and we're probably the only school that has," Smith said. "(The runners) know what to expect and when to expect it. We'll have a race plan suited to what we think other teams are going to do and what we know we can do based on our training and the course itself."

Culbertson will lead the way for the women, as they look to improve upon their seventh place finish a year ago. Culbertson has been the top finisher for the Wildcats in all four meets this season.

Culbertson said it will take a total team effort to meet the Wildcats' goal of finishing in the top half of the conference.

"Our top five are going to have to finish really close together," she said. "I think if we got every one in the top 40, that doesn't sound super great, but it would help us a lot because the field is really challenging."

The men will welcome back number one runner Mathew Chesang. Chesang had not raced the previous two meets due to his involvement in a car accident. Expected to follow

Fan's death looms over celebrations

KENT HILDEBRAND

Congratulations, Red Sox fans.

You've finally seen your 86 years of failure come to an end. With Boston's sweep of the St. Louis Cardinals completed Wednesday night, you no longer have to worry about the "Curse of the Bambino," the ground ball through first baseman Bill Buckner's legs in the 1986 World Series or even your hated adversaries, the New York Yankees.

The moment is yours. Enjoy your first World Series win since the Woodrow Wilson administration. You've earned it. Go out and party likes it's 1918, the last time you had a title. Have a ball. Many of you have never experienced a championship in your life.

But while you're whooping it up, keep another member of your Red Sox Nation in mind. She spent 21 years waiting for this moment, but she never did see the Sox win a a championship in her lifetime.

Her name was Victoria Snelgrove. She was a journalism major at Boston's Emerson

Men's basketball has high hopes for season

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

KANSAS CITY, MO. – In what is becoming commonplace for a conference not even a decade old, several Big 12 teams are once again considered contenders on the national stage.

A Final Four team from a year ago, Oklahoma State returns four of five starters. The Kansas Jayhawks are No. 1 in the preseason USA Today/ESPN Coaches poll.

Then there's the wealth of talent at Texas, and an Oklahoma team expected to rebound after missing the NCAA Tournament last season.

Despite the excellence at the top of the conference, K-State Coach Jim Wooldridge said he feels this could be the year the Wildcats move up.

"I think there are five or six teams that might be in the same category we are in," said Wooldridge at Day Two of Big 12 Conference Media Days.

"If we catch a break, if we have the right leadership, the right mental toughness, if those things all come together for us, yes, I think we can move forward and move up in this league."

K-State made several positive steps last season, as the Wildcats had their best year in Wooldridge's four seasons, going 14-14 overall and 6-10 in the conference. One of those steps was on the road, with the Wildcats snapping a 21-game conference road losing streak at Nebraska and adding a win at Baylor later in the year.

Asked if improved road play would be critical to this season's success, Wooldridge said though it distinguishes the top teams from the rest of the pack, the worth of a Big 12 team should not be judged on its performance away from home.

"It's very difficult to win on the road in this league. It's a real beast," Wooldridge said. "The teams winning on the road are in the very top tier – one, two, maybe three, because they're so powerful."

Wooldridge said it's defending the home court that will be the key to success.

The Wildcats were 4-4 against conference foes in Bramlage Coliseum last season. One of those losses was a 57-56 defeat to Oklahoma State.

"Had we done better at home, had we beat Oklahoma State in that tight game, just two more wins at home would

CFB | Nebraska, Missouri square off in key game

The Missouri-Nebraska game on Saturday is the epitome of the mess that is the Big 12 North.

Both teams are 4-3 overall and 2-2 in the league — one game ahead of the other four teams in the division and the winner gains the inside track to the conference championship game.

Callahan

Since the Big 12 began playing football in 1996, no division champion has had more than two league losses. With Nebraska still having to visit second-ranked Oklahoma and Missouri yet to play an improved K-State, a three-loss champion could emerge in the North.

"If we win this game, it won't clinch it, but it will put us in the driver's seat to be happy, but not satisfied," Nebraska quarterback Joe Dailey said. "Right now we really just look forward to winning this game.

Nebraska is coming off a 45-21 loss at K-State, while the Tigers have dropped two straight after a 4-1 start.

Missouri has not won in Lincoln since 1978, broke their 24-game losing streak in the series last year with a 41-24 win at home.

Nebraska coach Bill Callahan said he is challenging his team to play at a higher level. The Huskers' seven-game record is their worst since the 1961 team opened 2-4-1.

Despite the struggles, Callahan said his team still has plenty of motivation because it remains in contention for a berth in the Big 12 title game.

"The vision is always there to win a championship," Callahan said. "We'll never come off that mark. We're always striving to get there, and sometimes we don't get there. we take a step back and we learn from those experiences and move on."

MLB | World Series is the highest rated in five years

Boston's 3-0 World Series championship-clinching victory over the St. Louis Cardinals on Wednesday night relieved a 18.2 rating and 28 share, the highest for Game 4 of a Series since 1995.

The average audience of 28.8 million was the largest for a Game 4 since 1991, when Minnesota and Atlanta went seven games.

In Boston, the game averaged 59.0/77, beating each of the New England Patriots' Super Bowl victories but falling short of the 59.9/77 for Game 7 of the 1986 World Series against the New York Mets.

Although overall postseason ratings were down six percent from last year, the Red Sox's sweep was rated 23 percent higher overall than last years Series and was the highest rated since the New York Yankees swept the Braves in 1999.

MLB | Sox collectibles to be put into Hall of Fame

Nearly a dozen items commemorating Boston's first tile since 1918 are headed to the Hall of Fame.

Among the memorabilia on the way to Cooperstown are Derek Lowe's jersey, the glove used by shortstop Orlando Cabrera and the hat worn by starting pitcher Pedro Martinez in his Game 3 win.

Schilling

Also going on display will be Keith Foulke and Curt Schilling's spikes; Johnny Damon's hat, and a bat from Game 4; and MVP Manny Ramirez's bast used in Game 4.

The artifacts will added to the museum's postseason exhibit, Autumn Glory, and will remain on display until the end of the World Series next year.

MLB | Texas' Francisco faces a lesser charge

Texas Rangers reliever Frank Francisco will face a misdemeanor assault charge charge rather than a felony for breaking a woman's nose when he threw a chair into the stands during a game.

While Francisco still faces a maximum three years' probation and one year in county jail if convicted, he escaped the three years in state prison connected to a felony conviction.

Francisco threw the chair into the right-field box seats and hit two spectators in the head during a Rangers-Oakland Athletics game Sept. 13.

Francisco was suspended 15 games by Major League Baseball.

Fans delight at 9th annual Fright Night

Thursday night Halloween alternative draws youthful audience

By Melissa Baier
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Cobwebs and spiders hung from the doorways Thursday evening at Bramlage Coliseum as children from the Manhattan community entered the arena to participate in the ninth annual Fright Night.

Each year, parents bring their children to Fright Night to enjoy the festivities in a safe and inviting atmosphere. The decorations, the costumes and the scary music all gave the arena the aura of Halloween.

"The kids love it, we've been to it every year since it began nine years ago," said Vicky Shimp, a parent and a nurse at Mercy Regional Hospital. "I enjoy it because it's safe, I know where my kids are, and I know everything they get is also safe. We don't even take them out on Halloween because we have this as an alternative," Shimp said.

Among the characters in attendance were Snow White, Harry Potter, K-State cheerleaders and football players, Superman, Darth Vader, a piece of pizza and a tube of toothpaste.

One boy was even dressed as Bill Snyder. He was dressed in full K-State gear, complete with a headset and gray hair.

Toddlers and infants were able to attend because of the safe environment provided and the activities that were age appropriate.

The booths were created by homecoming pairings in competition to see who could provide children with the most fright and delight at the event. The booths included a Tunnel of Terror, pin the tie on the scarecrow, bobbing for pumpkins and make your own paper jack-o-lantern.

The residents of West, Marlatt, and the Strong Complex provided personalized K-State bandannas for kids, a rock toss, face painting, badges and candy.

"We've been preparing for this since the end of September. It's been a lot of fun and everyone's been great to work with," said Triston Neeson, freshman in psychology, who lives in West Hall.

Also in attendance Thursday evening were the Classy Cats and K-State cheerleaders, who handed out T-shirts and candy bags.

After the children and their parents circled the corridors of the coliseum, they reached the final booth. The men and women's basketball teams were there, with Willie the Wildcat to sign autographs for fans.

Justin Williams was among the basketball players autographing pictures and rosters as he smiled and joked with each child.

"It's nice to see all of our fans. I love talking to the kids and everything. It's just a great way to kick off our season," Williams said.

The players made their season debut after the festivities.

Fright Night allowed students to reach out to the community. It also provided a safe and fun atmosphere for children of all ages, even college students who can't seem to give up trick or treating said Erin Hoppock, sophomore in elementary education.

"It was really nice that college students came out to support what we're doing. I think Halloween is a great holiday. It doesn't matter if you're 23 or 3, everyone can have a fun time," Hoppock said.

Senators approve clock tower in Bosco's honor

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student senators approved Thursday a $15,000 allocation to construct a 21-foot tall clock tower in the Bosco Student Plaza. The project honors Dean of Student Life Pat Bosco.

Faculty Senate Representative Bill Muir said the project will cost $30,000 total, but the second $15,000 will come from construction and other budgets within the university, as well as some private donations, including a $5,000 donation from Ag Press.

The allocation, Muir said, comes from a K-State Foundation account specifically set aside for one-time allocations for student benefits.

Though the account is a Foundation account, the project is an entirely student-run initiative, he said.

The bill, which was on final action, passed 48-5-2.

Tim Weninger, engineering senator, said the students he had spoken to were not in favor of such a monument.

"The people I've asked aren't so thrilled about it, it'll probably pass tonight, that's just the people I've talked to about it," Weninger said. "Everyone was kind of luke warm about it."

David McCandless, arts and sciences senator, said he admired Senator Weninger's courage to speak against the bill and to serve his constituents appropriately, but he felt the allocation was prudent.

"I think this is an appropriate thing to do and an appropriate time to do it," McCandless said.

The monument is slated to be finished before the Thanksgiving Holiday, Senate Vice-chair Tyson Moore said.

Moore said Bosco's daughter is to be married around that time, so they wanted it to be ready for the the dean's family members, who would be in town.

Poll shows students' electoral intentions

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Recent Collegian polls reveal that out-of-state and international students are divided on whether to vote for John Kerry or George W. Bush, with international students leaning more toward Kerry.

Nearly 52 percent of out-of-state students surveyed support Bush, 43 percent support Kerry and 5 percent support a third party candidate or won't vote.

When asked why other states were torn on the issues, students came up with several theories.

"Political beliefs are based on a number of things," said Josh Smith, senior in psychology and anthropology. "I think one's background. Family, education, and state really play a heavy role in the process."

	No Answer	In-State	Out-of-State	International
George W. Bush	10	314	34	0
John Kerry	1	141	28	4
Ralph Nader	0	14	1	1
Michael Badnarik	0	7	0	1
Other	0	11	0	1
Not Voting	0	56	2	3

"I consider myself to be a very liberal person. That is just the way I grew up, in a more diverse area in Missouri."

Kansas is one of those states that has a big rural perspective, Smith said.

"I am not surprised that 57 percent of K-State student surveys said they support Bush."

Like Smith, other students were not surprised by the survey results.

Two international students, Melinda Au, freshman in mechanical engineering, and Priya Visavadia, non-degree undergraduate in psychology, said Kansas is very conservative.

"As long as people are educated about the candidates, supporting either party is ok," Visavadia said.

If given a vote, both Au and Visavadia expect that they would support Kerry.

Through the Collegian poll, no international students said they supported Bush. Most international students supported Kerry or third-party candidates.

"Who knows? Maybe if I were more educated about America, I would vote for Bush, but so far, I do not really like him," Au said. "I support Kerry and his ideas."

Visavadia said she likes Kerry for programs he supports, including a $3.5 million dollar after-school program he is promoting.

Au said she believes the war is a key issue in the election. She supports Kerry based on his plan of promoting peace.

"Since Bush has taken office, the rich-poor and gender-wage gaps have grown, taxes for the middle class have increased, and issues like healthcare and privacy are ignored."

"He could have done a lot better. I think Kerry can outdo Bush, and if I were given the privilege to vote, I would vote for Kerry, a candidate that makes sense."

Voting demographics

The Collegian surveyed 639 K-State students on voting demographics. The surveys were distributed to various organizations and living groups, to students in the K-State Student Union and to tailgaters at the K-State/Nebraska game. The Collegian strived to obtain as accurate representation of campus as possible; however, this is an unscientific survey. All answers are given in percentages.

Canned goods drive set for Saturday at football game

By Josh Heck
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Attendees of the football game Saturday afternoon at KSU Stadium might be greeted by a group of students in the parking lots looking for food.

The students, who are also athletes, will will be collecting cans and donations to benefit the Flint Hills Breadbasket during the ninth annual Cats for Cans.

Walter Goffigan, program director for diversity, said the food drive has been a big success. "The goal for this year is to surpass last year's donations," Goffigan said.

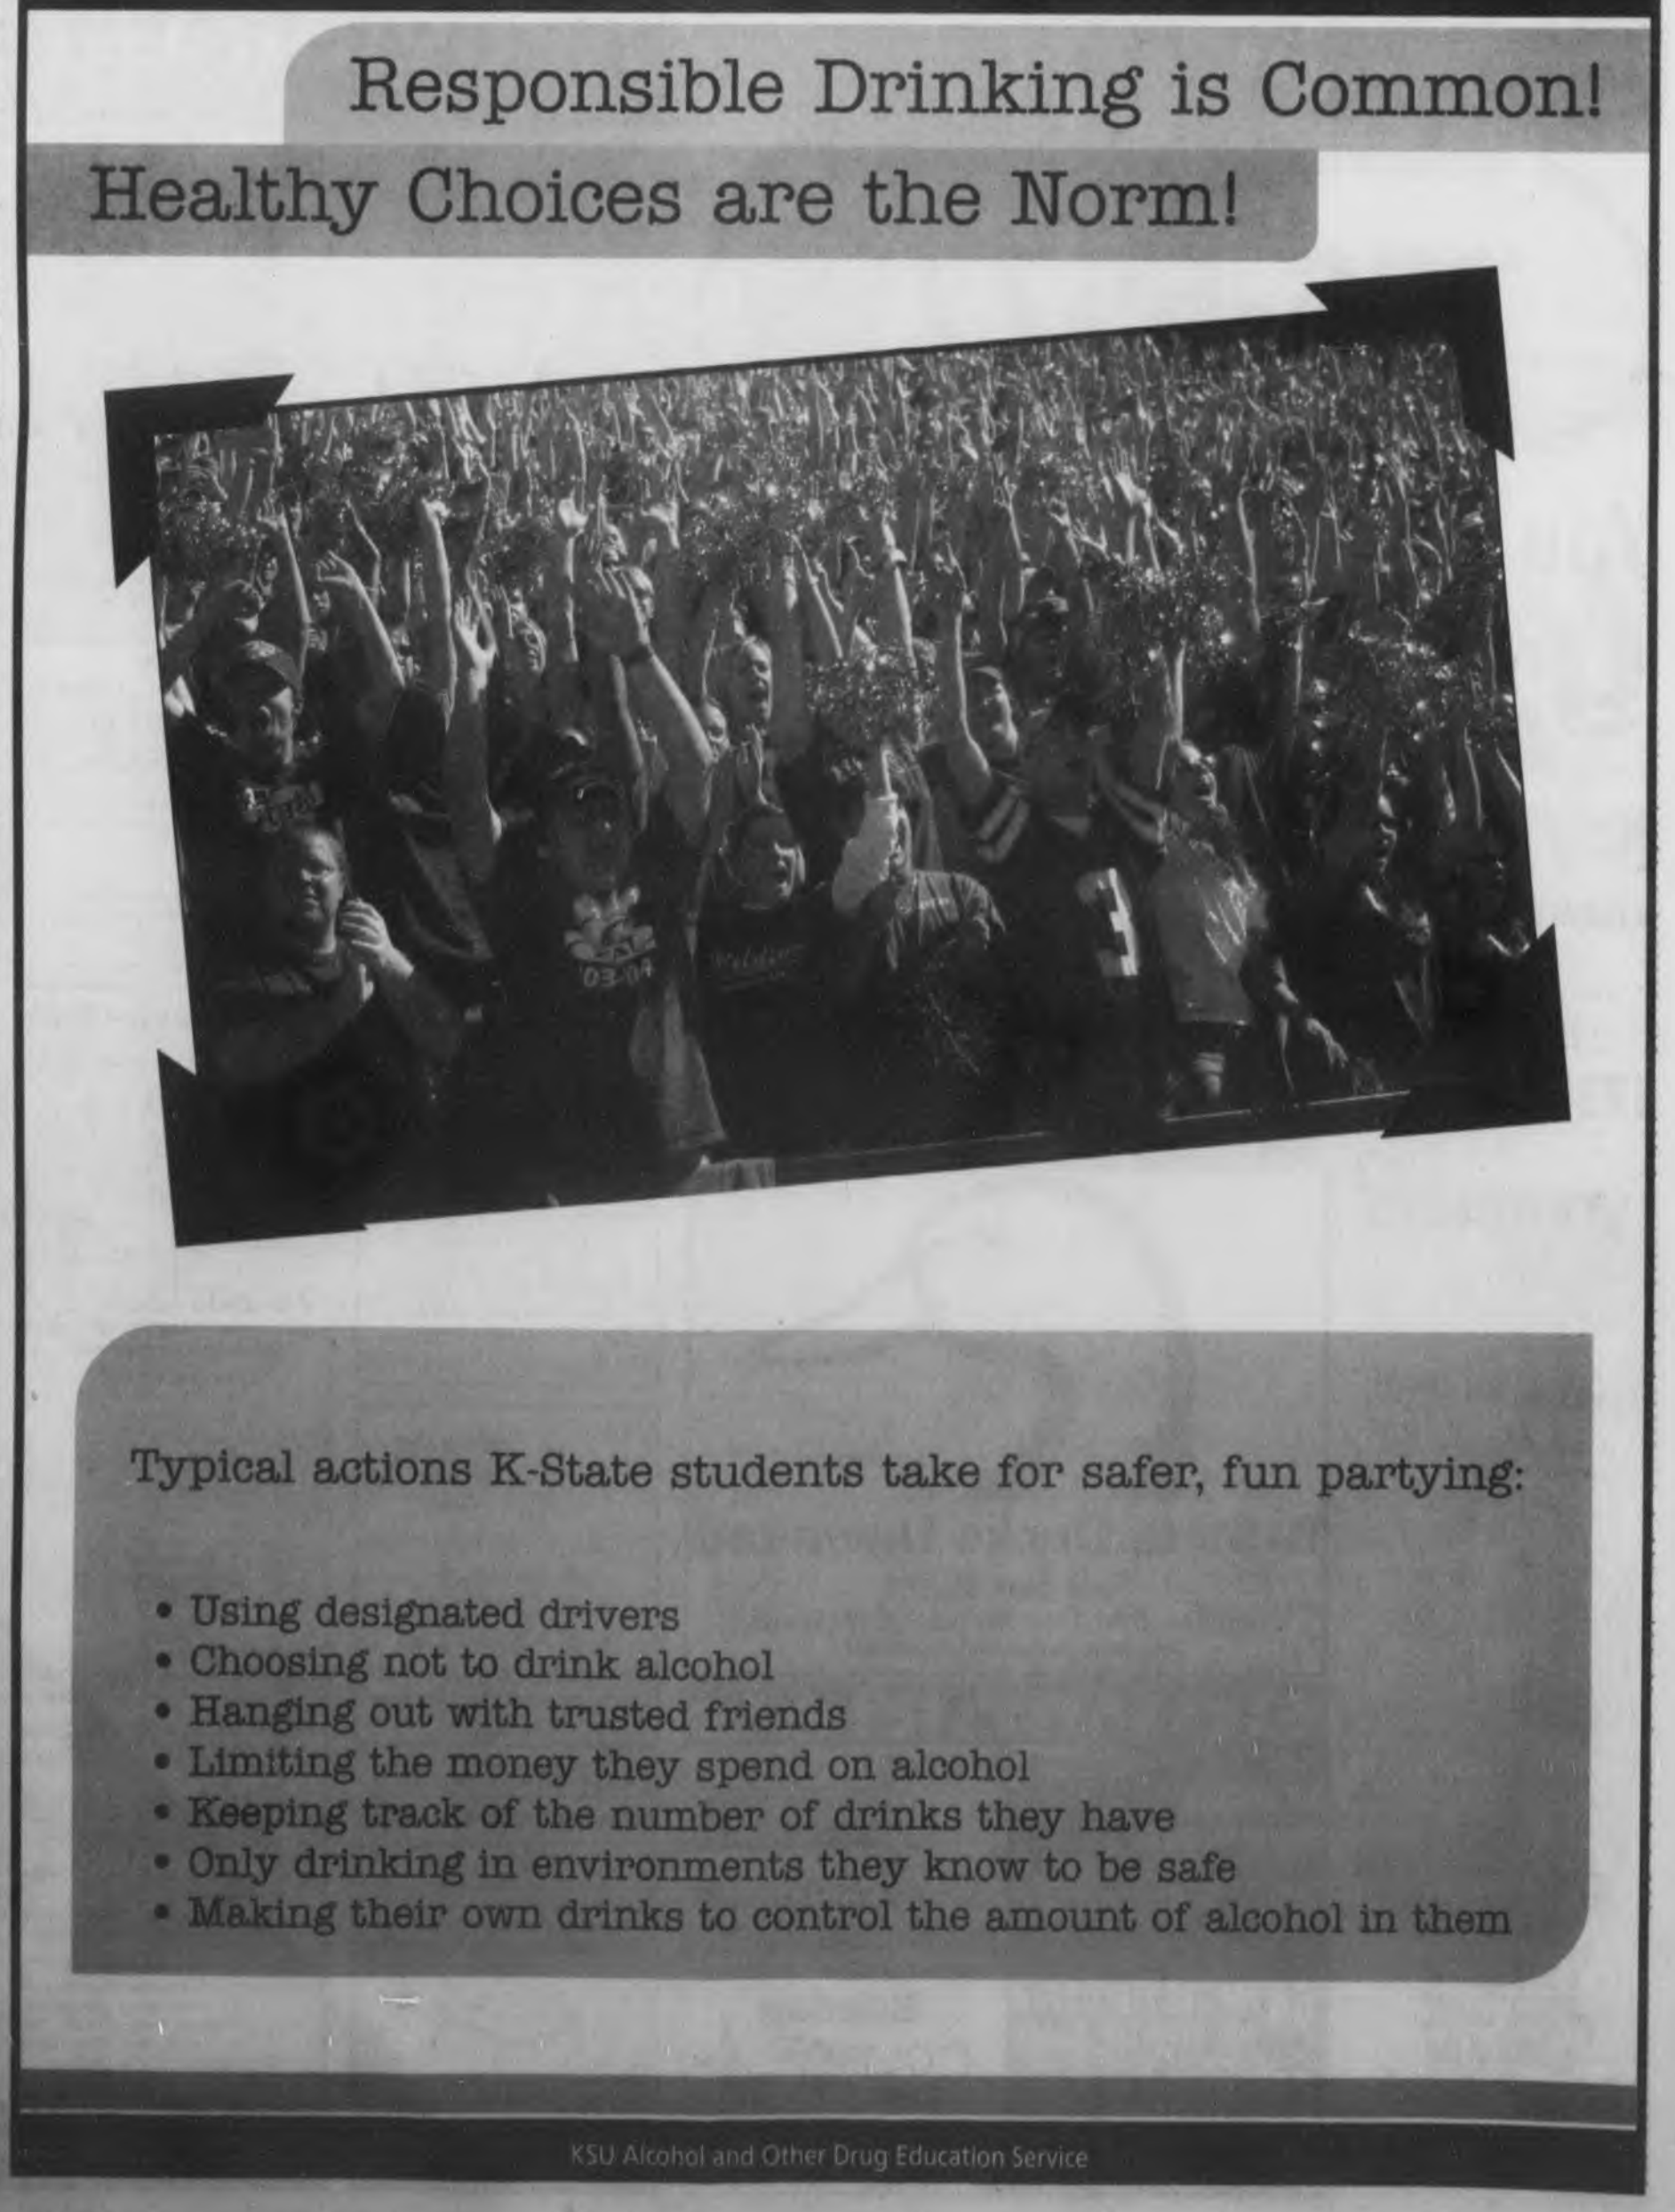
Last year Cats for Cans collected 8,192 pounds of food, received $4,000 in donations and served more than 2,000 families.

If you go
Ninth Annual Cats for Cans

What: Bring canned food items to support Flint Hills Breadbasket Collection
When: 4 p.m. Saturday
Where: KSU Stadium

Goffigan said the event is a great way for K-State to give back to the community and to help those less fortunate.

Gabby Guerre, senior volleyball player said she feels the same.



"It is a terrific opportunity for all K-State student-athletes to volunteer and work together at an event that makes a substantial impact on the Flint Hills Breadbasket and their holiday drive to feed the less fortunate in the community," Guerre said in a press release.

College, known as "Torie" to her friends. After the Red Sox's game seven win over New York, she was among many of you out celebrating early last Thursday morning. You had just watched your team come back from a miraculous 3-0 deficit in the American League Championship Series to defeat your biggest rival and earn a trip to your first Series since 1986. All was well with the world and the party had just begun.

Then the firing started.

You weren't extremely worried. These weren't bullets, they were just plastic "non-lethal projectiles" used by police to disperse rowdy crowds, and you definitely were rowdy.

But then one of the projectiles hit Torie in the eye. And all of a sudden they weren't so "non-lethal" anymore. That Thursday afternoon, Torie died of a head injury.

You didn't know what went wrong. There's an investigation pending. It may have been because a couple of the police officers weren't trained to use the guns, or maybe the projectile was faulty, or just maybe it hit her at the exact right spot with exactly the right force.

You may never know.

It doesn't really matter, does it?

Sure, it was unfortunate, but bad things happen. It was a freak accident, maybe because of a mistake by the police, but it wasn't your fault. There's no way you could've prevented it. Never mind that the police felt threatened by your unruliness. After all, your team was going to the World Series, and your only responsibility was throwing the biggest party Boston had seen since they threw tea in the harbor.

Yes, Boston fans, you did what you had to do. You ran around in the streets, built your bonfires, threw a trashcan through a restaurant window, and just for kicks some of you threw beer cans and flaming toilet paper at police. After all, that's what sports fans do after their team has a monumental victory, right?

Sure, just a year earlier you also lost a New England Patriots fan in the post-Super Bowl melee when a vehicle ran into a crowd of rioters, but that was different. This was an 86-year-old curse broken.

So now you've all seen your Sox win the Series. Well, almost all of you. Not Torie – she never did. But she was a big fan; she would've wanted you to celebrate. She probably also would've wanted you to handle yourselves better than you have.

Yes, it was 86 long, frustrating years. It was baseball, and in Boston baseball is huge. But large enough to warrant hurting one of your own?

I don't think so, Red Sox fans. Hopefully it won't take you another 86 years to figure that out.

have put us at 8-8," Wooldridge said. "Then you're looking at the NIT, and the perception is you're moving forward."

For Wildcat senior forward Jeremiah Massey, playing on the road is key to their success.

"The teams that win the road games in the Big 12 are the teams that make it to the tournament," Massey said Thursday. "Being on the road you have the fans screaming in your ear, and that helps me out a lot. It might not help everybody, but it helps me."

This season, K-State faces several tests away from home. The Wildcats will travel to Austin, Texas, to play the Longhorns and Stillwater, Okla., to take on the Cowboys, as well as their usual road contests against schools from the Big 12 North Division.

Wooldridge said the Cats hope to win on the road, but it will have to defend the home court better than in years past.

"The formula is you got to protect that home floor, you got to build such a tough place for teams to come in and win, and then clip somebody on the road every so often," he said. "Then you've built your season, you're moving up in the league, and you're looking at postseason play."

Chesang is sophomore Tyler Roark and junior Joe Moore.

Roark said the team is out to make a move up in the conference and to prove the doubters wrong.

"Our team goal is to be competitive and pass some people," Roark said. "I don't think a lot of people think of K-State as being a real good team, but I think we do have a real good team and we can end up a lot higher than people expect."

Smith said with a complete squad, the men's team will all run faster than they ever have, but trying to predict where they will finish is impossible.

"We'll have Mathew Chesang back, and that makes a huge difference," Smith said. "The other guys have continued to get better and they're running faster. The results should be they all run faster."

"Where that puts us, a lot of that depends on Baylor and Nebraska and these other schools. I could guess where we are going to be, but it's a crapshoot."

VOTING | Civic program for children brings young, old alike to the polls

Charlotte Conglegon, second-grade teacher at Woodrow Wilson, said she has an entire voting center set up in her class.

"They are just loving this new curriculum," she said. "We want the children to learn to be responsible in their voting."

Another activity second graders can participate in is a take-home coloring sheet.

"They took home an American flag to color," she said. "Every time they hear on TV, or even from adults around them, about the election, they color in another part of the picture."

The curriculum changes with different age groups.

Dorothy Claussen teaches sixth graders at Woodrow Wilson. She said she made a few minor changes to better explain some of the concepts.

"We discussed political cartoons, the debates on TV, and Web pages on voting," she said. "This has helped kids think about what the candidates stand for."

By sixth grade, Claussen said students make decisions about for whom they would vote.

"They are pretty opinionated about who they would vote for," she said. "We talk about how the candidates sell themselves, and look deeper for the issues they stand for."

Claussen said she hopes what they learn in grade school will have an effect on their decisions when they reach voting age.

"When they turn 18, I hope they register to vote and stay informed on whom to vote for," she said.

"My goal is to teach them how to be high-quality voters."

GENDER GAP | Regular voting trend may not exist in upcoming election

get women's votes, he said.

"If females or a block of females move together, it only makes sense to try to pitch your side to them," Franke said.

Joseph Unekis, associate professor of political science, said issues such as deficits and job losses are overlooked as the war has taken precedence.

"He (Bush) is not talking about those issues," Unekis said. "He's saying, 'would you be safer with me or safer with Kerry?' He's arguing you'll be safer with him."

Melissa Divine, instructor of women's studies and English, said the reason why women tend to vote more democratically is because Democrats appeal to issues that concern them more, she said.

Gender differences

The Collegian surveyed 639 K-State students on voting demographics. The surveys were distributed to various organizations and living groups, to students in the K-State Student Union and to tailgaters at the K-State/Nebraska game. The Collegian strived to obtain as accurate representation of campus as possible; however, this is an unscientific survey.

	Male (367 total)	Female (268 total)
George W. Bush:	58 percent	56.7 percent
John Kerry:	25.1 percent	30.6 percent
Ralph Nader:	2.5 percent	2.6 percent
Michael Badnarik	1.9 percent	0.4 percent
Other:	2.7 percent	0.7 percent
Not Voting:	9.8 percent	9 percent

"If women vote on the issues they tend to care about, then, yes, we will see a big gender gap," Divine said.

Divine said middle- to upper-class women women tend to vote for Republicans, whereas working-class white and minority women vote more for Democrats.

"We don't see as much of a gap in terms of racial difference than class," she said.

Another factor when weighing in women voters is who the first ladies are. Divine said Theresa Heinz Kerry has strong supporters and critics, which could play a role in this election.

"Some women love her, and some women really dislike her," she said. "She's kind of the unknown factor, whereas Laura Bush is soft spoken, quiet and tends not to offend anyone."

GHOSTS | Stories of haunted fraternity houses persist through the years

wall. After Theta Xi moved out, Phi Gamma Delta moved into the house. They tried to paint the walls, but the paint would not cover the area where the paddle was. Finally, the house walls were redone and that problem was fixed."

Duncan, however, has not left the house. There are stories about things falling over and things moving on their own.

"Also, just recently, there was a cup set at the table while someone was eating, and the cup moved on its own," Keeley said. "We were downstairs and had the charter down and leaned against the wall. All of a sudden it fell back away from the wall and hit the floor."

KAPPA SIGMA

Another fraternity house supposedly haunted by past brothers is Kappa Sigma.

Irving is the ghost that supposedly haunts this fraternity.

Austin Petry, senior in mechanical engineering and president of Kappa Sigma, said Irving's story is quite simple.

"There was an accident, and Irving fell down the back stairwell and died," Petry said. "There have been a few situations here and there with Irving, but nothing too big."

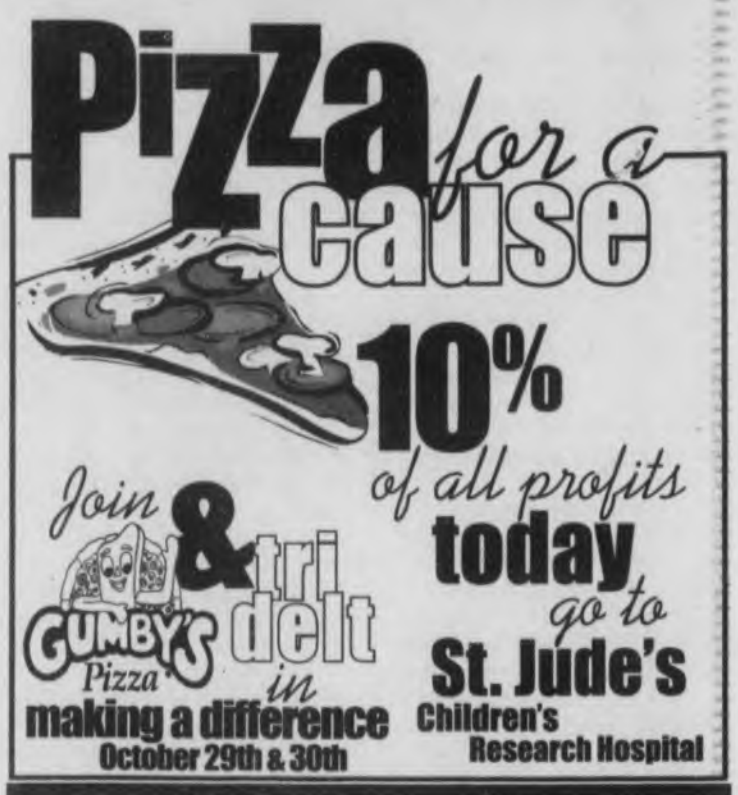
Petry said he has had one experience with Irving but has also heard of other activity that is out of the ordinary.

"I was once downstairs alone doing laundry a few years ago, and we have a punching bag and it started swinging on its own."

DELTA SIGMA PHI

Delta Sigma Phi's fraternity house was once a hospital. The supposed specters are a nurse and a patient from the hospital.

Dayne Moreton, senior in biology and agricultural engineering, said the two ghosts don't really do a lot to people in the house.



"We have two ghosts here. One was a nurse, and the other was a patient," Moreton, president of Delta Sigma Phi, said.

"The nurse died when she was backing a cart into what she thought was an open elevator," Moreton said. "When she backed through, she fell to the bottom of the shaft and died. She haunts a part of the house that we call Nurse's Hall."

The other ghost at the house was a patient who was forgotten.

"There was a patient who was in bed and the nurses were moving patients from one wing of the hospital to another," Moreton said. "He fell between the bed the wall and the nurse didn't see him."

"The only report of activity we have had is lights turning on and off and televisions, usually the activity is electrical," Moreton said.

Potent Texas Tech offense to challenge K-State's improving defense with combined passing, rushing attack Saturday

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The inventors of the forward pass never imagined a passing attack quite like Texas Tech.

Through seven games of the 2004 season, the Red Raiders (4-3, 2-2) lead the nation in pass offense, averaging 424.1 yards per game. They have attempted 406 passes, thrown for 2,969 yards and will be the biggest test for the K-State (3-4, 1-3) secondary this season.

"They are just good at what they do," Coach Bill Snyder said. "They have excellent concepts, the players understand it and they do things different from other offensive programs."

Along with leading the nation in passing yardage, the Red Raiders also rank third in the nation in scoring, averaging 36.6 points per game, and have scored 70 points twice this season.

After missing last week's game, Dylan Meier will be the starting quarterback on Saturday. If Meier struggles, don't be surprised if back-up Allen Webb gets in the game. In last weeks win, Webb passed for 124 yards and rushed for 147 including four touchdowns.

Cats solving the Big 12 North puzzle

JOSH WITT

The Big 12 North Division is a mess. You know it. I know it. Everybody knows it.

Entering the home stretch of the season, the division is completely up in the air, as Missouri and Nebraska sit at 2-2 and the rest of the pack hangs out at 1-3.

So with four games left, let's have some fun. Let's try to break down the remaining four games of the season and see if K-State can come back from a dismal start to the season and make a return trip to Kansas City, Mo. I say odds are in the Wildcats' favor.

THE FRONT-RUNNERS (SORT-OF):

Despite their technical tie for the Big 12 North lead, Missouri and Nebraska look to be going anywhere but up.

Missouri:

The Tigers are coming off a demoralizing 20-17 loss at home to Oklahoma State. Not only did the Tigers blow a lead to lose their second game in a row, but Missouri is now short a starting tailback.

Did junior Damien Nash get hurt in the Oklahoma State loss? Nah. He just chose to speak his mind to a columnist about the questionable play-calling of Coach Gary Pinkel.

Apparently, that wasn't a good move, because Pinkel suspended Nash indefinitely.

The Tigers are in complete disarray right now. A game in Lincoln this weekend against a ticked-off Nebraska team coming off its own embarrassing loss in Manhattan does not look like a recipe for recovery for Pinkel and the gang.

Despite having the versatile Brad Smith at quarterback and an improved defense, the Tigers are on the way down.
Predicted conference finish: 3-5

Nebraska:

The Cornhuskers aren't exactly playing phenomenal football either.

Their 45-21 loss to K-State last weekend showed us a couple of things.

1) Sometimes rankings are meaningless. I don't care if Nebraska came into Manhattan the No. 2 rush defense in the nation – a good defense does not give up almost 300 yards on the ground.

2) Quit calling it the West Coast offense. If the West Coast offense is throwing the ball 12 times and completing just three of them, like in the K-State game, I must have its definition confused.

Nebraska might beat Missouri this weekend, but Oklahoma is on the horizon, as is the always-tough season finale against Colorado. Sorry, Bill Callahan, you aren't going to the Big 12 Championship game.
Predicted conference finish: 4-4

THE 1-3 GANG:

Colorado:

Missouri wasn't the only team to blow a lead and lose to a Big 12 South team last Saturday. Colorado missed a great opportunity in losing in overtime at Texas A&M. Now the Buffaloes and their defense that gives up 448 yards per game face Texas on Saturday. Have fun keeping Vince Young and Cedric Benson under wraps, guys.

After starting the season off strong at 3-0, Colorado seems to be making a gradual decline. With their final three games at Kansas, at home against K-State and at Nebraska, the Buffaloes might not even win two.
Predicted conference finish: 2-6

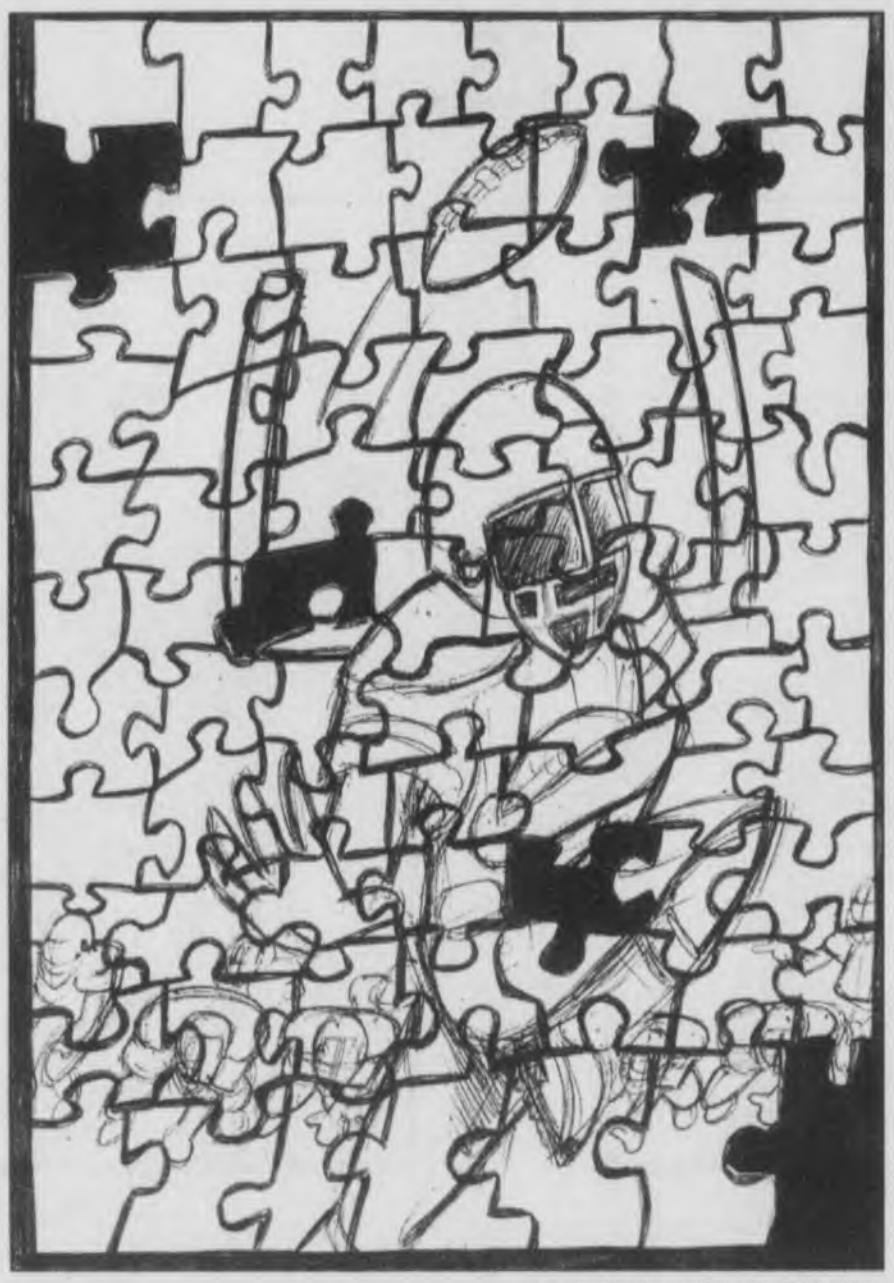

Illustration by Jordan Mizell | COLLEGIAN

Iowa State:

All aboard the Iowa State bandwagon. Hey, the Cyclones are just one game back, they're coming off a win and they have the reigning Big 12 Defensive Player of the Week in senior linebacker Brandon Brown.

Iowa State all the way, baby!

(That was my impression of an Iowa State fan about 20 beers deep in his Natty Light case.)
Predicted conference finish: 1-7

Kansas:

This could have been Kansas' division to lose at this point in the season. Key phrase – could have.

The Jayhawks second-half collapse leading to the one-point loss to Texas Tech and the 14-8 defeat in Lincoln have put Coach Mark Mangino in a difficult spot.

A brutal schedule has not helped the Jayhawk cause. Already falling to Oklahoma 41-10 last week, Kansas has to play Texas on Nov. 13. The Jayhawks should win three of their next four – losing to the Longhorns – but that still puts them at .500 in the conference.
Predicted conference finish: 4-4

That'll be one game back of ...

GAMETIME

Edge — OFFENSE — Edge

So far this season, the Wildcats have shown they can pass and run the ball with success, doing both in last week's win over Nebraska. Quarterback Dylan Meier will return Saturday, but Allen Webb proved against Nebraska he is capable of leading a productive offense. Senior running back Darren Sproles got back on track against the Huskers with 135 yards rushing. K-State continues to hold the ball longer than the opposition, with an average time of possession of 34:53. That will be important if the Cats want to keep Texas Tech off the field.

No element of surprise here. The Red Raiders will pass the ball — a lot. The nation's leading air attack features quarterback Sonny Cumbie, who averages 417.7 yards passing per game and can spread the ball around to many receivers. Texas Tech has six wide receivers with more than 20 catches on the season, led by Jarrett Hicks (6 touchdowns, 127.7 yards per game) and Nehemiah Glover (52 catches, 10.9 yards per catch). The Red Raiders run the ball only when they have to; averaging 74.4 yards per game, good enough for 116th in the nation.

DEFENSE

Outside of a few isolated plays on Saturday, the defense had its best game yet against the Huskers. Linebacker Marvin Simmons has stepped up as the unit's leading tackler, and linebacker Brandon Archer and defensive ends Kevin Huntley and Tearrius George are making their presence felt as well. This week the spotlight will be on the secondary. Oklahoma exploited the K-State for four touchdown passes, and this will be the stiffest test yet for the defensive backs.

The Red Raiders defense has plenty to prove this week after giving up 51 points and 358 rushing yards to Texas. Linebacker Mike Smith leads Tech with 50 tackles, and the secondary has nine interceptions, including five in Tech's 70-10 win over Nebraska. This Saturday, the unit's job will be to hold Sproles in check who rushed for over 100 yards for the first time in three games and keep the K-State offense off the field as much as possible so the Red Raiders air attack is out there that much longer.

SPECIAL TEAMS

The special teams is improving, including punter Tim Reyer, who has upped his average to 39 yards per kick. Punt coverage also has been strong, but the exchange from long snapper to punter has been an adventure all season. The punt return game has been virtually nonexistent, averaging only 5.5 yards per return.

Punter Alex Reyes averages 40.7 yards per punt and kicker Alex Trlica is 4 of 6 on field goals and perfect on extra points. Kickoff specialist Keith Toogood has 14 touchbacks in 28 tries on the year along with one of the coolest last names around. Tech also averages nine yards per punt return. Texas Tech is ranked 24th nationally in punting.

PREDICTION: K-STATE 34 - TEXAS TECH 31

K-State is coming off a big win, Tech off a tough loss. Both teams will get their points, and the outcome will come down to field position and special teams. K-State has won 14 straight Homecoming games. Make that 15 after Saturday.

Cats hope to control clock

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State has been a stingy football team this year.

When it comes to keeping the football out of the opposing teams' hands, the Wildcats have been the best in the Big 12, averaging almost 35 minutes in time of possession each game this season.

As K-State prepares to take on Texas Tech this Saturday, keeping the football away from the potent Red Raider offense will be crucial to K-State's success.

Texas Tech, known for its high-powered passing attack and quick-strike ability, has had no trouble scoring points in a hurry this season. They average 36.6 points per game and have the third-lowest time of possession in the Big 12 at just under 29 minutes per game.

Coach Bill Snyder said having an edge in time of possession can only help when playing a prolific offense like Texas Tech's.

"I think it can become an important number," Snyder said, referring to time of possession. "It can certainly make a difference. You would think that statistic would be an important one to have in your favor against a team like Texas Tech. It makes sense."

One way K-State plans to control the clock is through the use of a strong running game.

Last week, K-State pounded Nebraska with 294 yards rushing in a 45-21 win over the Huskers. Going into the game, Nebraska had been ranked second in the nation in rushing defense, giving up only 67 yards rushing per contest.

Meanwhile, in its 51-21 loss to Texas last week, Texas Tech gave up a staggering 351 yards rushing to the Longhorns. Behind Vince Young's 158 rushing yards, Texas was able to keep Texas Tech's offense off the field by controlling

Defensive backs prep for Tech

Red Raiders' passing attack to challenge Cats

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State defensive backs have every reason to be scared going into this Saturday's game against the Texas Tech Red Raiders.

Even though K-State is ranked 16th nationally against the pass and only gives up 170.3 yards per game, Texas Tech's high powered passing attack comes into Manhattan averaging a whopping 424.1 yard per contest, which leads the nation.

However, the Wildcat defensive secondary is not shying away from the challenge.

Safety Maurice Mack said he is ready to prove the doubters wrong.

"Any team or any coach or anybody that doubts this team, that's all we can do as a defense is just go out and prove them wrong," Mack said. "Prove them wrong again like we did last week. As a secondary, this is the type of game you love to play, against teams that throw the ball."

Texas Tech quarterback Sonny Cumbie has passed a total of 400 times in seven games this season. He already has thrown for 2,924 yards, which leads the nation by far.

In comparison, K-State quarterback Dylan Meier, who is expected to start against the Red Raiders, has thrown 145 times for 1,063 yards.

With Texas Tech throwing the ball so much, the K-State defensive line will be looking to put pressure on Cumbie in order to take pressure off the Wildcat secondary.

Defensive end Tearrius George said putting pres-

After start on bench, Simmons returns to form

Linebacker leads K-State defensive unit in total tackles in 6 games this year

By Anthony Mendoza
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Marvin Simmons has all the tools to be a great linebacker.

He has a nose for the football, the strength to bounce off blocks and the speed to chase down running backs. He is nearly the complete package and almost gave it all up at the beginning of the year.

A Parade Magazine All-American out of Long Beach Poly High School in 2000 and an All-American once again at Compton College, the Compton, Calif. native found himself buried deep into Coach Bill Snyder's dog house.

Prior to the second game of the year, no one knew what was wrong with him or if we had seen the last of him. Defensive coordinator Bob Elliott wasn't even sure if Simmons could turn it around and get back on the field.

"There's a lot of guys out on the street corners today that could've been, would've been, should've been great players. But the difference is, Marvin's here," Elliott said prior to the Fresno State game. "He's earned a chance, and if he can just get himself in the right, then he's got a chance to help us."

For now, Simmons has got himself in the right, turning his doubters into believers.

The junior was arguably the best defensive player on the field for K-State in the last three games. Since the start of Big 12 play, Simmons has been credited with 30 tackles, ranking him 11th in the Big 12.

In his last three games, Simmons has collected 27 tackles including a game and career-high 13 against Oklahoma. He leads the team in total tackles this season with 43, even though he has played in only six of the seven games.

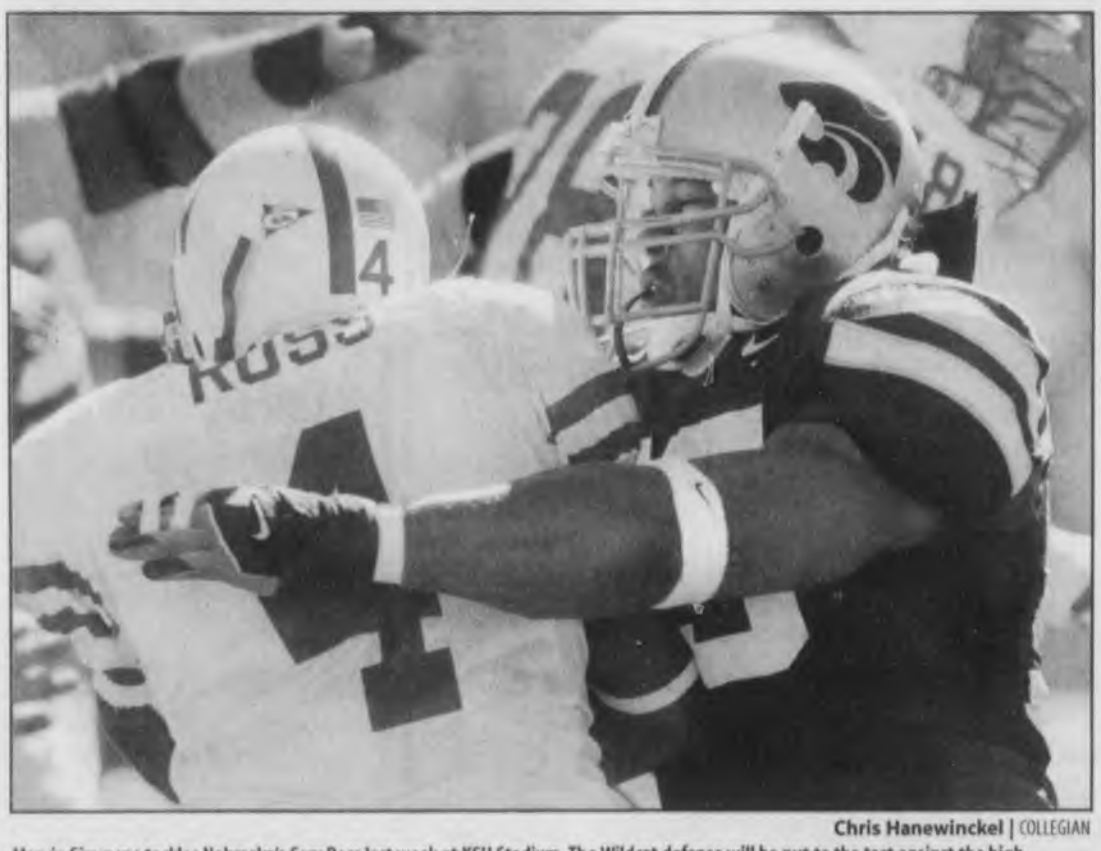
"Marvin's really made some headway," Snyder said. "I like the way he's playing right now. I think all of us had known that Marvin could be a very, very fine player. He has good capabilities in that direction and the important thing was to get him to understand how to play the game, because he has the talent."

Since missing the opening game against Western Kentucky, Simmons has started four of the last six games, including two starts at middle linebacker in place of injured Matt Butler.

"I like the way he's playing right now. I think all of us had known that Marvin could be a very, very fine player."

Bill Snyder
HEAD COACH

When you talk about Simmons now, words like leader and hard-worker are the topic rather than silence.



"He's definitely a leader by example," linebacker Brandon Archer said. "He's quite an athlete, and I think we all respect that."

Defensive lineman Tearrius George said Simmons' dedication has helped him improve.

"I've seen him breakout, he's come out as a player a lot and dedicated himself more to us," George said.

A serious, focused and dedicated Marvin Simmons at linebacker is good news for the K-State defense – not so much for offensive coordinators.

Simmons would, could and should be the best defensive player the rest of the season. That is if he wants to make a name for himself on some street corner and not just be that guy on it.

Confident Cat defense readies for Red Raiders

By Jay Dillon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's defense has had an up and down year, but last week against Nebraska, the defense was reminiscent of years past.

The defense allowed just 222 yards of total offense, their best effort this season.

Sophomore linebacker Brandon Archer said the defensive line stepped up its play last week.

"They've done some things, finally, that earlier on in the season, really weren't there," Archer said. "The pressure, and getting to ball, the quarterback and the sacks. They've definitely improved over the last few games."

The defense had two sacks for a total of 29 yards and four forced turnovers in K-State 45-21 win over the Huskers.

Archer said the defense's confidence is the highest it's been all season.

"It's (the defense's confidence) up there, but I think we still have room for improvement," Archer said.

Junior defensive end Tearrius George said the defense is much improved from the beginning of the season.

"They've taken steps to become better. I don't think it's so much more of an improvement with the individual; it's more that they're doing what they're supposed to do," George said. "Hitting the right gaps getting their assignments, we've taken steps that way."

George also said the defense is more cohesive then it was in earlier games.

"We had a lot of players who had not played together with each other, so they had to build the chemistry and get in sync with each other," George said.

The defense is happy with its play last week, but players still think they have room for improvement.

"We're better than we were at the beginning of the year, but we still have a lot more steps to take to get great, to the point where we want to be," George said.

Archer said the defense needs to step it up against Texas Tech and if they slow down their high powered offense, it will build confidence in the defense that will carry over the rest of the season.

"This is a big challenge for us, and I think that if we can stop them (Texas Tech), then that will give us even more confidence," Archer said. "It will be something to be proud of if we can get past this team."

Defensive coordinator Bob Elliott said the defensive line needs to get pressure on the Cat receivers come together as a unit

Moreira, Polite lead with big plays

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The wide receivers were a unit surrounded with question marks in August.

Now, thanks to two sophomores, it's safe to say the position is in good hands now and in the future.

The improvement of Jermaine Moreira and Yamon Figurs, as well as fellow wideouts seniors Antoine Polite and Tony Madison and junior Davin Dennis, has helped the Wildcat passing game to average 184.4 yards a game

"This is a group of guys that we all play together, all play as a group," Polite said. "One guy's going to have a great game one day and the next is going to have a great game another day. We knew at the beginning of the season we were going to have to step up and be playmakers. If we ever have to throw it 45 times a game, we know we can."

Moreira, for one, has stepped up. After a 16-reception season as a freshman, he leads the Wildcats with 23 catches through seven games and has two touchdowns.

"He's got the ability to make the tough catch," said co-offensive coordinator and receivers coach Greg Peterson. "He can go up in traffic and know he's going to get hit and hang on. I think our quarterbacks like throwing him the football, because they know he's going to go get it."

Polite attributes Moreira's success to his steady improvement from his freshman season.

"He's matured in his confidence level almost every game he's played here from his freshman year until now," said Polite, who has seven catches on the year despite battling an injury that kept him out of the Oklahoma game. "Each game and each practice he's evolved, and he's just going to continue to improve."

In K-State's new-look short passing game, Moreira's ability to get yards after the catch has been a big plus. "He runs great routes and he's competitive," Polite said. "He can take a hit after the catch and run after the catch. That gives him the ability that a lot of receivers out there don't have."

Figurs, Moreira's classmate

K-State vs. Nebraska

In dominating fashion, K-State picked up its first Big 12 Conference win in a 45-21 rout of the Nebraska Cornhuskers. It marked the first time in the two schools' 89 meetings the Wildcats have won three straight over its division rivals from the north.

Early indicators show BCS still has its faults

Human polls remain best option

MATTHEW GIRARD

"Now don't get me wrong. I would love nothing more than to see a national championship game without the Oklahoma Sooners, but the constant tweaking and trying to get it right is annoying."

The Bowl Championship Series has been around since 1998 and was supposed to be the system to end all systems to finally figure out who the real undisputed national champion of college football is.

Rewind to last January, and once again the system proved to be faulty as we ended up with a split national championship between Louisiana State and Southern California.

So the powers that be tweaked the system and removed the "big game factor" and put more emphasis on the human polls. The other third of BCS poll is still figured by six computer rankings.

It's a nice idea in theory, but already in the first two weeks of the BCS polls of 2004, the new system already showed mistakes with Miami ranked ahead of Oklahoma in the first week of the poll. The Hurricanes were ranked third in the USA Today/ESPN Coach's Poll and fourth in the Associated Press Poll, but still wound up being ranked second in the BCS over the Sooners, who were ranked second in both polls.

This week the BCS seemed to get it right. They moved Oklahoma into the second spot behind USC after their 41-10 win over Kansas at home, but how does a win over the Jayhawks mean more to the computers than a win over K-State?

Now don't get me wrong. I would love nothing more than to see a national championship game without the Oklahoma Sooners, but the constant tweaking and trying to get it right is annoying. I would much rather see the championship decided by the human polls again. At least people would be more accepting of the results because error is in our nature, and we could not complain about a mechanical error.

Out of the six national championships decided by the BCS system, it worked twice (2000 and 2002). If my calculations are correct – even as a print journalism major, I'm pretty sure they are – that's only a 33 percent success rate.

If I have to deal with this nonsense, at least I've got BCS busters.

Teams from conferences other than the "big six" (the Atlantic Coast Conference, Big East Conference, Big Ten Conference, Big 12 Conference, Pac-10 Conference and the Southeastern Conference) always make the race for the national championship interesting.

Utah is undefeated, ranked sixth in the BCS poll after moving ahead of Wisconsin, and sits behind a one-loss team in Florida State.

The difference between sixth and seventh may not seem like a lot, but if the Utes can finish out the season undefeated, they can earn a spot in either the Orange, Fiesta, Rose or Sugar bowls – not to mention a $14 million pay-out.

So, I'm rooting for anyone who throws a monkey-wrench into the system, and maybe some day in my lifetime, college football will get it right.

Cats still can win Big 12 North

K-State:

...the Wildcats. Yes, folks it's hard to believe. K-State should win – and I say will win – the Big 12 North.

Compare the Cats to every other team in their division. Find me one that's playing better, or has improved more in the past two games than K-State. Sorry, you're going to be searching for a while.

Though they lost to Oklahoma, the Wildcats made strides in that game. And then, last week's blowout of Nebraska without starting quarterback Dylan Meier showed this team can handle adversity.

Now Meier's back, and if he finds the rhythm he was developing before getting knocked out against the Sooners – watch out.

The front-seven of the defense is coming around and getting pressure on the quarterback. Darren Sproles was the player we all thought he could be this season against the Huskers last week, going for more than 100 yards. Allen Webb showed he can be good. And hey, the Cats actually won the field position battle for once.

All signs point up for K-State.

Sure, the secondary still has issues, the Cats can't afford to have a continuous revolving door at quarterback for the long term and there's always a chance of a relapse to the play we saw against Fresno State.

But this team has a newfound fire. Last Saturday, they began looking like a team that was defending Big 12 Champions. The Cats should continue to get better game by game. I'll see you in Kansas City.

Predicted conference finish: 5-3 (Big 12 North Champs) offense, averaging 57 pass attempts per game. Cumbie leads the nation in both total offense with 410.7 yards per game and passing yardage with 417.7 yards through the air per game.

"Their quarterback is an awfully fine quarterback," Snyder said. "He is very talented and would be good in anybody's system, I believe."

Wide receivers have also flourished in Leach's system in 2004, with six receivers having caught at least 26 passes compared to K-State which has only two receivers with over 20 receptions this season.

Sophomore safety Maurice Mack said the pressure is on the defensive backs of K-State.

"It's a challenge and every week is a challenge, but this week is a challenge for us secondary guys," Mack said. "This is a team that loves to throw that rock and as long as we do what we are supposed to do within our defense, we are going to be able to make some plays."

Sophomore linebacker, Brandon Archer said the linebackers and defensive line will try and take the pressure off the defensive backs by blitzing Cumbie.

"Even if the pressure is not getting there, we need to have somebody in his face," Archer said. "If you let him have time, he will pick you apart."

Sophomore wide receiver Jarrett Hicks leads the nation averaging 127.7 receiving yards per game and is second in the Big 12 Conference with 48 receptions and has caught six touchdowns. Hick's teammate, senior wide receiver Nehemiah Glover, leads the Big 12 with 52 receptions on the year and is averaging 81 receiving yards per game.

"They have talented wide receivers," Snyder said. "They have a big physical guy in Hicks, who can out-muscle anybody for the football."

Although the Red Raiders consistently rely on the pass, junior running back Taurean Henderson has benefitted from the attention defenses give to the pass.

Henderson is only averaging 62.3 yards per game, but is averaging 5.0 yards per carry, a statistic Snyder said can not be over looked.

"Their running backs average five yards a carry and second and five is a good place to be, so you have to be cautious that you don't overlook the fact that they are capable of running it," Snyder said.

Offensively, the Wildcats will welcome the return of sophomore quarterback Dylan Meier after sitting out K-State's 45-21 win over Nebraska last week.

Behind the play of back-up quarterback, sophomore Allen Webb, K-State rushed for 294 yards on the nation's then second-best rushing defense. Webb accounted for 271 yards of total offense, with 147 yards and four touchdowns on the ground.

The Texas Tech defense is currently giving up 172.9 yards rushing per game and is tied for 10th in the conference in that category, but Snyder said the quarterback will not be the featured runner on Saturday.

"For us to think that we go in and let our quarterback run all over the place is a major mistake," Snyder said.

SECONDARY | Defensive backs ready for challenge

sure on Cumbie will make it easier on the defense as a whole.

"The sooner we get to him, the less time our defensive backs have to worry about covering their receivers," George said. "Not to say that they can't do their job. But I think it will be really important to get pressure. It will make their job easier, and it will make our job easier."

While it is obvious the Wildcats will have to play defense designed to slow Tech's passing attack, they also want to make sure to keep Tech's ground game from opening up.

Coach Bill Snyder said the Wildcats will look to establish a steady run defense to make sure they are not hurt by the Red Raider running game.

"Going into this ballgame, our first order of business will be to defend against the run," Snyder said. "Nothing would make that offense better than being able to run the ball when they want to. You have to caution yourself that you don't overlook the fact that they are capable of running it and they can block well for it."

Even with a certain amount of emphasis placed on stopping the run, K-State will rely on multiple defensive back formations in hopes of slowing down the speedy Texas Tech wide receivers.

Mack said Texas Tech's style of offense is what makes the game fun for a defensive back.

"I love playing against teams that love to throw the ball," Mack said. "As a secondary, this is the type of game you love to play, against teams that throw the ball. It's going to be an exciting game."

The K-State secondary will receive the stiffest test they have faced all year when they line up against Texas Tech.

George said he has faith the Wildcat secondary will respond to the challenge.

"I know we've got some pretty good defensive backs, and things are starting to come together in the secondary," he said.

"I love playing against teams that love to throw the ball. As a secondary, this is the type of game you love to play, against teams that throw the ball. It's going to be an exciting game."

POSSESSION | Cats hope to continue control of clock

the clock and using large chunks of time during their possessions.

Offensive lineman Jeromey Clary said with Texas Tech's ability to score quickly, it is important to keep their offense off the field.

"Tech has obviously shown, in the Nebraska game, that they are capable of putting up a lot of points against a pretty good defense," Clary said. "They are definitely a high-powered offense, and they definitely have the potential to score a lot of points, so we definitely need to keep them off (the field)."

The success K-State has against Texas Tech will depend on the Wildcats' ability to sustain longer drives, which could translate into being productive on third downs.

Against Nebraska, K-State converted on 50 percent of its third-down conversions, including several on the first two possessions of the game that helped sustain drives that eventually led to two Wildcat touchdowns.

Center Mike Johnson said successful third-down conversions will help set the pace in favor of the Wildcats.

"(Third downs) are going to be huge," Johnson said. "Just look at their offense and the explosiveness that they have and their passing game and the ability that they have to strike fast and to come back or to put points on the board. It's important for us to really control the game clock and not allow them to get on the field."

The K-State players and coaches know Texas Tech's offense will score points, and it will be the offense's job to answer with scores of its own. However, the K-State defense also will be called on to step up and try to slow down the Red Raiders.

Coach Snyder said it will take a strong effort by the defense to keep Texas Tech's offense from busting out big plays.

"Most people that play Texas Tech are normally going to say, 'keep it in front of you, just keep everything in front of you,'" Snyder said. "That would be the common theme of all the teams that you watch play them."

Clary said the offense is ready for a shootout, but he also has faith the defense can contain the Red Raiders.

"It might turn out to be one of those games where we have to score more than them and the defense might not be able to help us out as much as we need them to," Clary said. "But Tech can be stopped. Texas showed that. They held them to 21 (points). I think that our defense is more than capable of holding them."

quarterback or get their hands up to cut off passing lanes.

"It's going to be real important," Elliott said. "I don't know if we're going to get a lot of sacks on him, not many people get a lot of sacks on this guy because he releases it so quick, but the pressure we can get on him and his face is going to be important to us."

George said the defensive line needs to step it up on Saturday and get pressure on the quarterback to help out the defensive backs against the Red Raiders throw first offense.

"It's going to be real important, because the more pressure we get on the quarterback the more that helps out our secondary," George said. "If we shut down the passing game, it shouldn't be hard to stop the running game.

"I think that's one thing we're good at, shutting down the passing game. I think that will help us a lot in winning the game."

and counterpart, leads K-State with 336 receiving yards on 22 catches and also has two touchdowns. Figurs made an immediate impact after transferring from Garden City Community College.

Polite said Figurs' speed is what separates him from others.

"Yamon is a big play guy for us; he's a down the field guy," Polite said. "We knew he had speed to begin with and it was just a matter of him coming out and making plays."

Peterson said there are phases of the game his receivers could work on but is pleased overall.

"I think they understand the offense," he said. "They're both very talented and can catch the football. It's fun to see them being playmakers for us."

Wild with pride

Homecoming participants mix purple gear, Halloween regala

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Purple and football were dominant themes at the homecoming festivities Friday, but they weren't the only ones.

Vampires, clowns, skeletons, witches and super heroes were among the many costumes spectators and participants wore at the parade, which started at 5:30 p.m. at the Manhattan Town Center on Poyntz Avenue.

Spectators lined both sides of the street on Poyntz and 11th Street, but the largest concentration was on Moro Street in Aggieville, where the parade ended.

There were floats of many varieties playing on the homecoming theme "Wild With Pride," and chants or music such as K-S-U-Wildcats and "Born to Be Wild" were used as enhancements.

Following the parade was the pep rally and block party, and the K-State Marching Band preformed many popular K-State songs, including the K-State fight song and "Wabash Cannonball."

The winners for different homecoming events were announced during the pep rally.

ELECTIONS 2004

Bush focuses on security during swing state tours

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Washington, D.C. – In the final days before the election, President Bush has turned up the heat – and it keeps getting hotter.

Bush will continue to charge through the few swings states whose electoral votes are likely to decide Tuesday's election. He went to Sunday services at a church in Wisconsin before traveling to Florida to court the important votes that won the 2000 election.

The swing states are considered crucial for both candidates.

Recent polls have shown the president nearly dead-even with challenger Sen. John Kerry for the popular vote, and both candidates are projected to share about the same number of electoral votes.

Of the 270 electoral votes needed to win the presidency, Bush is expected to win 227, while Kerry is expected to win 225. There are 86 votes up for grabs.

Bush has concentrated much of his recent effort to Florida, which has 27 electoral votes, and Ohio, which has 20. The two states would be enough for a Bush victory.

The same strategy is expected to continue through election day, with some variation.

Late last week Vice President Dick Cheney went to Hawaii, a state that had been considered a Democratic stronghold. Bush campaigned in New Hampshire, another state generally considered a Kerry state.

But Bush's focus has remained primarily on the swing states.

During a campaign stop in southern Florida on Sunday, Bush said he could do a better job than Kerry on keeping the country secure.

"If you believe America should fight the war on terror with all her might and lead with unwavering confidence," Bush said, "I ask you, come stand by me."

While terrorism has been one of Bush's

Personal visits highlight Kerry's campaign efforts

BOSTON – Democrats John Kerry and John Edwards got personal this weekend – attending church services and knocking on doors.

With the election potentially decided by eight battleground states, every single vote counts.

Kerry attended Catholic mass Sunday in Dayton, Ohio, which has 20 electoral votes up for grabs. He then traveled to Florida and New Hampshire.

Edwards traveled through Florida, Pennsylvania and Ohio, and he interviewed with Hawaii newspapers.

Each candidate needs 270 Electoral College votes to win the election. States that could decide the election include Florida, Ohio, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, Iowa, New Mexico and Nevada.

Analysts have the candidates at a statistical tie in the popular vote as well as the possibility of a tie in electoral votes. Both Newsweek and TIME polls showed Bush taking a slight lead over Kerry; however, the Gallup poll had the candidates tied with 49 percent.

Much of the campaigning revolved around a videotape that confirmed Osama bin Laden's reemergence this weekend in which he claimed

Negative political ads create voter disillusion

ELECTIONS 2004

Advertisements, especially negative ones, seem to have a profound effect on voters in the coming elections.

Associate professor of speech communication Bill Schenck-Hamlin said as the elections draw closer people pay more attention to advertisements to learn about the people campaigning and these advertisements contribute to how people actually vote.

He said the use of negative advertisements in campaigns which are one sided and biased and influence voters into choosing things they like about one candidate and things they dislike in the opponent.

Negative advertisements focused on character assassination are far more prominent in these elections as opposed to advertisements focused only on relevant issues, he said

"These character assassination advertisements go to the heart of what the person is like and projects an image that says regardless of what the issue is, that person is neither right about it nor qualified to deal with it," he said.

These kinds of advertisements are shown a lot just before the elections, and while they might not influence the die hard republican or democrat, they certainly succeed in confusing the independents who are still trying to make up their minds, he said.

"These people do not know the candidates directly but the information contained in these negative advertisements tend to remain in their minds and might even keep them at home because they are unsure how to vote," he said.

In his opinion, the large number of negative advertisements remained unchecked because of the existing campaign laws that allowed the candidate to remain unconnected to some of the most intense and vile negative advertisements run by the

WORLD IN REVIEW: 7 THINGS YOU DIDN'T KNOW 7 DAYS AGO

Tape from bin Laden released

Agence France Presse | GETTY IMAGES

A frame grab taken from a videotape aired by Al-Jazeera news channel shows al-Qaeda leader Osama bin Laden delivering a message addressed to the United States.

Staff and wire reports

For the first time in more than a year, a video of Osama bin Laden was released, in which the al-Qaeda leader finally admitted to ordering the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, 2001.

A statement, issued by bin Laden and addressed to the American people, said American security was "in your own hands" and "each state that does not mess with our security has naturally guaranteed its own security."

ARAFAT'S AILMENT

Arafat

Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat was airlifted Friday to Paris to undergo treatment. The ailing Arafat had not left his West Bank headquarters in years due to Israeli pressure before seeking treatment for a blood platelet disease.

CURSE REVERSED

After 86 years of heartbreak, the Boston Red Sox and fans celebrated a World Series victory over the St. Louis Cardinals Thursday.

After defeating the rival New York Yankees in the American League Championship Series, the Red Sox made quick work of St. Louis, sweeping the Cardinals in four games. Boston's Manny Ramirez was named series MVP.

ECONOMIC INDICATOR

The Federal Reserve released a survey of business activity Wednesday signaling economic growth during the past month.

The findings of the survey will be used later this month when the Fed's policymakers meet to set the interest rate.

CHIEF CONCERNS

Rehnquist

Supreme Court Chief Justice William Rehnquist underwent throat surgery last week after being diagnosed with thyroid cancer.

The 80-year-old Rehnquist, who was admitted to the National Naval Medical Center in Bethesda, Md. for treatment, is expected to be back on the bench this week for court arguments.

WEAPON CONTROVERSY

Politicians, pundits and government officials scrambled to explain a cache of Iraqi weapons that went missing.

The weapons – several hundred tons of conventional explosives – initially were reported to have been lost during the March 2003 U.S. invasion of Iraq. However, a Pentagon report on Thursday suggested the weapons were moved before U.S. forces entered Iraq.

HOSTAGE DEATHS

An Iraqi militant group claimed responsibility for the deaths of 11 Iraqi troops taken hostage last week. The Ansar al-Sunnah Army posted video of the killings on a Web site.

School funding boost more likely in 2005

Officials say few options remain for this year

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA – Higher education officials believe they have a compelling case for a big funding increase next year, but they'll be picking the wrong time to ask for lots of new dollars.

The state's economy is looking a little stronger than it did a year ago, something that promises to give legislators a bit more money to spend. Still, the state budget they'll draft next year is likely to be tight because of rising costs for social services and state workers' pensions.

If legislators are willing to raise taxes – and Tuesday's elections will help determine whether they are – they'll probably be worried most about providing new dollars for elementary and secondary schools. They're waiting for the Kansas Supreme Court to rule in a lawsuit attacking the state's school finance system.

Therefore, higher education officials are more likely to experience frustration next year than to win sizable increases in spending on state universities, community colleges and technical colleges.

"I don't think realistically they can expect very much unless the economy takes a giant leap forward," said Senate Ways and Means Committee Chairman Steve Morris, R-Hugoton. "It looks like we're going to have another lean year."

Still, higher education officials are determined to try, and they're talking about the budget now in preparation for the legislative session that begins in January.

"I'd guess I'd ask, when is a good year?" said Dick Bond, chairman of the state Board of Regents, a former Senate president.

Earlier this year, the regents proposed a $145 million increase in the amount of state tax dollars allocated for higher education – a 20 percent jump, to nearly $860 million for the 2006 fiscal year, which begins July 1, 2005. They would leave the decision of finding the money to legislators.

The regents view $79 million of the proposed increase as what is necessary to fulfill promises legislators made in reorganizing the higher education system in 1999. That reorganization – giving the regents supervision of community colleges and technical colleges – also was supposed to lower community college property taxes and provide extra money to keep faculty salaries competitive with those in other states.

Many legislators contest the price tag attached to those promises, but there's little doubt they reneged on promises to increase spending when the state fell on hard budget times following the Sept. 11, 2001, terror attacks.

The $714 million in state tax dollars allocated under the current fiscal 2005 budget is only 1.4 percent more than the amount allocated under the fiscal 2002 budget.

"Now, the state will need to expand its investment and protect the asset for the future," Ed Hammond, the president of Fort Hays State University, said during a recent interview.

There's another good reason for wanting the state to provide more tax dollars. Over the past few years, the regents have relied on tuition increases to provide an infusion of new dollars.

Tuition for the typical undergraduate from Kansas has increased by 78.5 percent since the 2001-02 academic year at the University of Kansas and 76.2 percent at Kansas State University.

"What's happened is really a tax increase on students and families," Bond said.

But if some legislators – like Morris – are sympathetic, they're not optimistic about the prospects for a large funding increase.

True, with modest job growth over the year and a dip in monthly unemployment rates, the economy appears to be improving. State officials and university economists meet next week to issue a new financial forecast for state government – one that is likely to be a little more generous in projecting tax collections.

New student ambassadors named at football game

Prospective students and alumni will be greeted by new faces in the coming year.

Lindsey George and Kent Hildebrand were announced as the new K-State Ambassadors Saturday at the homecoming football game.

Hildebrand, junior in secondary education and journalism, said the ambassadors attend alumni and prospective student events throughout the year.

"Any time they need anybody at alumni or prospective student events to represent the student body, they would call on us," he said.

Hildebrand said his goal as an ambassador is to represent the students.

"I'm giving the student body voice as far as the valuable experiences you get at K-State and sharing that with prospective students and alumni across the state," he said.

George, senior in agriculture education, said she and Hildebrand will be liaisons between the university and prospective, current and past K-Staters.

"Hopefully, through our efforts, we will be able to build Wildcat pride within others," she said.

Being an ambassador will be a learning experience, George said.

"From interactions with various people, I expect to gain an even greater appreciation for the diversity of opportunities available at our university," she said.

George said she and Hildebrand will start off the year by preparing for the Just for Juniors program that is co-facilitated by ambassadors and the members of the Student Alumni Board.

The events will take place throughout the year at in various locations in Kansas and Nebraska.

Federal agency warns of asbestos threat in Omaha

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Omaha, Neb. – A federal agency is warning former workers of an Omaha insulation plant closed for 15 years that they could have been exposed to a deadly form of asbestos.

The Western Minerals Products plant used vermiculite to manufacture insulation from the 1940s until it closed in 1989.

Vermiculite is a naturally occurring mineral that expands when heated. Expanded vermiculite is lightweight, fire-resistant, absorbent, and odorless, making it ideal for insulation.

However, the vermiculite used at the Omaha plant was taken from a mine in Libby, Mont., which it was later learned had a natural deposit of asbestos.

Now, the federal Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry wants to know if workers at the Omaha plant and 27 other sites around the country were unknowingly exposed to asbestos.

Employees, their families and people living around the plant while it was in operation may have been exposed to the asbestos, according to the agency.

Family members may have inhaled the fibers unknowingly brought home by workers on their clothes and in their hair.

Inhalation of asbestos fibers can cause lung diseases such as asbestosis, mesothelioma and lung cancer.

The announcement of the Omaha investigation was made in a press release Friday.

According to the release, records show the building was cleaned and tested when it was sold and no asbestos fibers were found.

Collegian strives for national election coverage

In less than 24 hours the polls will open in the most important election of our lifetime.

The country is at war, the economy in question and unemployment rates up. The outcome of the vote Tuesday will affect college students, their parents, grandparents and future children.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

The Collegian has strived to provide balanced and thorough coverage of candidates and key issues. However, there is only so much we can do from Manhattan.

Beginning today, you will see coverage from the campaigns in Boston and Washington, D.C. Reporters Sarah Rice and James Hurla and photographers Nicole Coleman and Chris Hanewinckel will provide coverage from the front lines.

Look for a breakdown of the candidate's last hours of campaigning, poll results and swing state predictions. The presidential race is in a statistical dead heat, and every vote counts.

On election night, the Collegian will stand with the candidates as they wait for returns and face either victory or defeat.

As always, we will strive to provide accurate and timely information significant to readers.

Whether it's George W. Bush or John Kerry celebrating in victory, the decision will be one that could change the course of American history.

Delaying the inevitable

History suggests opposition to gay marriage is a futile effort

JEREMY PARKER

When President Bush endorsed National Marriage Protection Week a year ago, the issue of gay marriage was thrust into the limelight of public debate, where it still resides.

On one side of the battlefield, you have the sensible ones.

These people realize that two women legally tying the knot will in no way effect straight couples' marriages and won't lead to people marrying their pets, and won't turn every youngster into Boy George, and...you get the idea.

On the other side, you have people such as President Bush, local yokel (and unfortunately, former mayor) Mark Taussig and old people everywhere cowering behind a force-field of paranoia and claiming that marriage is under attack by homosexuals armed with laser beams!

I could go on, but I won't. The point of this column is not to serve as an endorsement of gay marriage, but to illustrate that all this bickering and talk of constitutional amendments is pointless.

Whaaa? Did I just say it was pointless?

Indeed, I did. Gay marriage is inevitable. Let's take a look back on history, shall we?

Since the American saga began, every major civil rights issue has ended with the oppressed minority eventually standing in the winner's circle.

Slavery was legal until the oppressed minority insisted on change, and eventually it was outlawed. Blacks were still discriminated against with (among other things) seperate schools and drinking fountains, but eventually this discrimination was overturned, as well.

The same is true with child labor laws, women's suffrage, and interracial marriage.

People today are failing to realize that once these groundbreaking civil rights movements get the ball rolling, they don't stop for anyone or anything, including exclusionary constitutional amendments like the one favored by President Bush.

Remember prohibition? The 18th amendment was the only time the constitution broke from tradition and actually denied a right, and, well...we all know how long that lasted.

A ban on gay marriage would inevitably meet the same fate. Still, gay marriage opponents just can't grasp that history is working against them. Instead, they close their eyes, jam their fingers in their ears and start yelling about how "polls prove the majority of Americans oppose gay marriage."

That may be true, but barely. The lead is already slim, and it's fading fast.

These polls prove – without fail – that the age group most vehemently opposed to gay marriage is the oldest generation, and you and I both know that they won't be around much longer.

Looking at the demographics of these polls, it's abundantly clear that each generation is more accepting of gay rights than the generation before it (as if we needed polls to show us that). It's been that way for generations, and it will continue in the future.

Even if an amendment passes with the current generation of lawmakers, it won't last long. History, demographics, and common sense tell us that once people our age gain power, this constitutional discrimination will be dumped into the graveyard of bad ideas, where it will rot next to prohibition for the rest of eternity.

For anyone who wants to deny history and demographics, I urge you to call my bluff. Save this column and paperclip it to a few short paragraphs on why you think gay marriage should be illegal. Put it in a safe place, and look at it again in 50 years.

I guarantee that by that time, gay marriage will be legal in America. Plus, there's a good chance you'll be embarrassed at where you stood on this civil rights issue 50 years earlier.

So go out and vote tomorrow. If you want to, go ahead and vote for George Bush, Paul Barkey, Jim Ryun, Sam Brownback, Bob Newsome and any of the other politicians who favor a ban on gay marriage.

But keep something in mind: you're only delaying the inevitable.

U.N. landlord scenario truly scary

JONAS HOGG

I decided the other day that I am tired of the United Nations eroding my nation's and my own individual sovereignty a little bit at a time.

Rather than wait any longer, I've decided I want to give my absolute commitment and surrender my free will right away.

I want to rent my apartment from the United Nations.

What follows is a list of what I expect from my new global mediator/landlord.

I want everyone to have a say in what I do with my apartment.

I want umpteen different countries to come up with a plan that will take so long to work out, by the time it is finalized my lease has been over for two years. I want to be forced to come back and follow their plans anyway.

I want to start a "Wood Rights Committee" and after a few years, have it staffed entirely by termites and wood worms. I want them to publicly condemn me for my removal of rotten wood from my apartment. Finally, I want to face neighborhood scorn for refusing to pay the fee to be a part of the committee I started.

I want a landlord-general who starts a citywide dog-free campaign. I then want to have him bring his dogs into my house, defecate on my rug and tell me to get stuffed when I complain.

I want the same landlord-general to berate me at every opportunity for how messy my apartment is. After spending years trying to clean up my apartment only to find out that the maid service I was hiring is run by the landlord-general's son and has been steadily soiling my apartment for years. I want this to be brought up for about five seconds before my landlord begins complaining about my mess again.

If I am a few seconds late on my rent payment, I want several organizations to move into my apartment and rearrange. I want them to put the couch in the kitchen, the toaster in the shower, and ignore any system that might have been in place previously and completely restructure my apartment. I want them to move someone that I have hated for years into my apartment with me and tell us that we now owe them more than either of us will probably ever make.

If I need to call an exterminator, I want to have to bring it in front of yet another committee. I want to spend months trying to convince a panel that is composed almost entirely of rodents that mice are bad and need to be removed from my house.

I want this committee to send a crack team of mouse hunters to my house, and have them search the first step leading into my apartment. Once I get impatient and start my own extermination attempts I want the team of mouse hunters to announce that there never were any mice to begin with. I want them to maintain these claims even when I unearth massive piles of gnawed-on cheese.

Finally, I want almost every other tenant to loathe me. I want to invite them into my living room, feed them, hand them wads of cash at the door, and let them all take turns spitting in my eye. I want this all to be done while everyone forgets that they are doing it in the house that I built, paid for, and held aloft with sheer will for a good number of years.

P.S. - I want my damage deposit back.

Lafene dishes out candy

Halloween activity excites children's group

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Four-year-old Trevor Fehr didn't have to wait for Sunday to sport his bright green ninja turtle Halloween costume and say "Trick or Treat" with his toothy grin.

Instead, Trevor and 14 of his preschool classmates from K-State's Childhood Development Center roamed the halls of Lafene Health Center Friday, visiting the center's employees and asking them for the sweet holiday treats.

The class was one of four from the development center that visited Lafene.

"I'm already going trick-or-treating," Trevor said, explaining that he didn't have to wait for the end of the weekend to fill his bag with candy.

Children from the development center have trick-or-treated at Lafene for several years – too many to count, said Shecky Davis, director of administrative services at Lafene. The Halloween visit, she said, allows not only the children to have some fun, but for the Lafene employees as well.

Several departments at Lafene participated in the event, including the administrative office, sports medicine, women's clinic and laboratory.

Each department bought candy and other treats to pass out to the children and some employees even dressed up in themed categories, sporting scarecrow and scuba diver costumes.

Debra Ring, director of the childhood development center, said trick-or-treating at Lafene is just one of the several opportunities the children have to visit the K-State campus throughout the year.

"We want to get the children out on campus and really want the people on campus to see the children," Ring said.

Veronica Lovejoy, Trevor's lead teacher at the center, agreed, saying that the children are always excited to visit campus – especially for the Halloween trick-or-treating.

"They've been excited all week for it," she said. "They came ready in their costumes when they arrived early this morning."

And excited they were.

Some, like Trevor, said they liked Halloween because they could dress up in a costume.

"I'm a ninja turtle, because I wanted to," Trevor said.

Others, though, said they liked the fall holiday for more reasons.

Four-year-old Macy Gibbs, dressed in a red and black ladybug costume, said her favorite part of Halloween was simple as she smiled and held out her bag for candy.

"I like everything," she said.

Fallujah peace efforts reach final phase

By Robert H. Reid
ASSOCIATED PRESS WRITER

BAGHDAD, Iraq – Iraq's interim prime minister on Sunday warned that efforts to resolve the standoff in Fallujah peacefully have entered their "final phase" and said he will not hesitate to launch "a military solution" to end Sunni insurgents' hold over the city.

In another city of Iraq's stormy Sunni Triangle, a rocket slammed into the Sunubar Hotel in Tikrit late Sunday, killing 15 Iraqis and wounding eight others, hospital officials said. Insurgents may have been aiming at an American position, which was targeted by a second rocket. U.S. officials said no American casualties were reported.

Prime Minister Iyad Allawi's warning, delivered in a nationally televised news conference, occurred as U.S. forces prepare for a showdown with thousands of militants holed up in Fallujah – the city that has become the focal point of armed resistance to the Americans and their Iraqi allies.

Allawi appeared to be aiming to prepare the Iraqi public for an onslaught likely to unleash strong passions, especially among the country's Sunni Muslim minority.

He warned of civilian casualties, saying that if he orders an assault it would be with a "heavy heart," because "there will be some loss of innocent lives."

"But I owe, owe it to the Iraqi people to defend them from the violence and the terrorists and insurgents," he said.

U.S. and Iraqi commanders want to put down guerrillas before vital elections due to be held by Jan. 31, which Allawi insisted will take place as scheduled. On Sunday, insurgents in Fallujah fired mortar rounds and rockets at U.S. Marines, who responded with artillery. U.S. aircraft also struck suspected rebel positions, Marine officials said.

Clashes were also reported between U.S. forces and insurgents in Ramadi, west of Fallujah, killing seven Iraqis and injuring 11, hospital officials said.

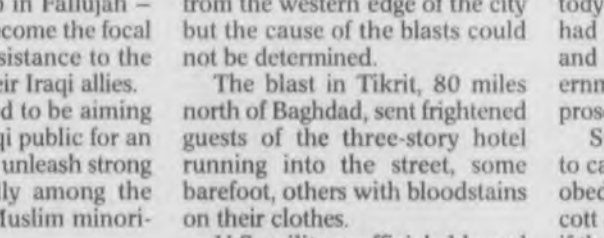
As night fell in the Iraqi capital, the rumble of powerful explosions could be heard coming from the western edge of the city but the cause of the blasts could not be determined.

The blast in Tikrit, 80 miles north of Baghdad, sent frightened guests of the three-story hotel running into the street, some barefoot, others with bloodstains on their clothes.

U.S. military officials blamed the attack on "anti-Iraqi forces," the term they use for insurgents. They said two rockets were fired, one of which exploded near an American military position but caused no damage or casualties.

U.S. officials say Allawi will personally issue the final order to launch any all-out assault on Fallujah and other Sunni insurgent strongholds north and west of the capital.

Allawi gave no deadline for talks with Fallujah city leaders to bear fruit, but he insisted they must hand over foreign fighters and allow Iraqi security forces to take control of the city.



"We have now entered the final phase of attempts to solve Fallujah without a major military confrontation. I hope we can achieve this, but if we cannot, I have no choice but to secure a military solution," he added.

Allawi also said authorities have arrested 167 Arab foreign fighters, who are in Iraq's custody. He said the government had identified financiers abroad and would ask other Arab governments to send them back for prosecution.

Sunni clerics have threatened to call for a nationwide civil disobedience campaign and to boycott national elections in January if the Americans attack Fallujah.

Chesang takes third in Big 12 competition

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Several factors were working against K-State senior Mathew Chesang.

Before Saturday's Big 12 Cross Country Championships, Chesang had only raced in one meet all year, mainly due to a car accident that forced him to rework his training.

Add in the fact that a strong wind was beating down on the Stateland Cross Country Fairgrounds in Topeka, and one had to wonder if Chesang would be able to respond positively.

Respond he did, as he placed third in a time of 24:12. It was his highest finish ever at the Big 12 Championships. Chesang was also named All-Big 12 for finishing in the top 15.

Chesang said the race will help him become stronger in the coming weeks.

"It is good to finish this high, because it was my second race of the year," he said. "This race will really help me along the way to regionals and nationals. Competition is great. I was in it 100 percent to win."

After placing fifth at last year's Big 12 meet, Chesang battled the fierce wind on the 8K course to finish five seconds behind his brother and overall winner, Benson Chesang of Kansas.

Mathew said he was happy with his race, especially since he is not completely healthy.

"I haven't been training that much," he said. "But I feel I am OK. Of course, I'm not 100 percent healthy, but I am satisfied with (my race)."

K-State Coach Michael Smith said Mathew's race was one of the best he'd ever seen.

"For him to perform at that level was pretty gutsy and unexpected and gratifying," Smith said. "Really, it was one of the most outstanding performances I've ever seen, considering the circumstances. He's a winner. This kid ran the race to win, and he wasn't even physically prepared to win."

The rest of the men's team struggled, as the next closest Wildcat to Chesang was junior Joseph Moore, who finished 45th. Micha Gamper and Tyler Roark came in at 65th and 67th, respectively.

Overall the K-State men placed eighth as they scored 230 points. Colorado won easily, as it finished with 48 points.

Smith said the team had a tough day, but that is just the nature of the sport.

"I think we got some good performances and some that weren't quite what we were expecting," Smith said. "We had some on their game and some not, and I think that's just what happens when you're dealing with college athletics. We're getting closer."

On the brink

Coach Bill Snyder argues a call made by officials during the second half of Saturday's game against Texas Tech. Looking to win a second straight game, the Wildcats came up short, losing 35-25 to the Red Raiders.

Loss to Texas Tech puts Wildcats in jeopardy of missing bowl

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The margin for error was already minimal for the Wildcats.

Now it's non-existent.

K-State's 35-25 loss to Texas Tech on Saturday under the lights at KSU Stadium has put the Wildcats (3-5, 1-4) on the brink of failing to make a bowl game for the first time since 1992.

"Everybody's shocked," sophomore wide receiver Yamon Figurs said. "Everybody's upset."

With Big 12 North Division counterparts Colorado, Kansas and Missouri all falling Saturday, a win against the Red Raiders (5-3, 3-2) would have kept the Wildcats on solid footing in the North.

Instead, the Wildcats find themselves in the division cellar.

"We were in complete control of our destiny," Coach Bill Snyder said. "If we had won out, it would have put us where we wanted to be. We were in control of it, but now we're not."

Texas Tech quarterback Sonny Cumbie and Texas Tech's second-half big plays were overriding factors into how and why K-State lost.

Cumbie and the No. 1 passing offense in the country jumped all over the Wildcat defense from the start.

The senior quarterback led Tech on two time-consuming drives of 83 and 80 yards in the first quarter, both ending in touchdown strikes from Cumbie. The touchdown passes to Jarrett Hicks and Trey Haverty gave the Red Raiders, who never trailed, a 14-0 lead at the end of the quarter.

Senior running back Darren Sproles said the Wildcat offense was to fault for some of Texas Tech's offensive

Despite Meier's work, Cats struggle

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Dylan Meier did what he could.

The sophomore quarterback split out wide as a decoy and even caught a pass that was ultimately called back in K-State's 35-25 loss to Texas Tech on Saturday.

After missing the Wildcats' (3-5, 1-4) win over Nebraska the previous week due to injury, Meier returned to the field against Texas Tech (5-3, 2-3) and accounted for 80 percent of K-State's total offense.

In his fifth start of the season, Meier completed 26-of-41 passes for 248 yards and an interception and rushed for a career-high 84 yards on 16 carries with a touchdown. The Pittsburg, Kan., native's 332 total yards of offense was also a career-high.

"He essentially got his feet on the ground, he misfired on some things, but I thought he did well," Coach Bill Snyder said. "He didn't really make too many bad decisions in regards to what he put us in."

Although Meier had a solid day for the Wildcats, the offense never got into a rhythm against the Red Raiders.

"We didn't get it done, and that's my responsibility," Meier said. "I wasn't clicking like I needed to be, and that's my fault."

During the game, Snyder said he had thoughts of putting sophomore backup quarterback Allen Webb in the game, after his four-touchdown day against Nebraska, to spark the offense.

"I thought about Allen

Jayhawks no match for Wildcats; K-State wins in 3 games

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It wasn't as close, but the result was the same.

K-State knocked off Kansas for the second time this season and for the 20th straight time in the series, winning the match 30-20, 30-19 and 30-28.

The 3-0 win, in front of a season-best Homecoming crowd of 2,647 at Ahearn Field House, makes the No. 18 Wildcats 14-7 overall and 8-4 in the Big 12 Conference. Kansas dropped to 13-8 overall and 4-8 in the Big 12.

Coach Suzie Fritz said after a close five-game match with the Jayhawks earlier this year, the sweep showed her team's improvement.

"I thought we played as well in the first two games as we've played all year," she said. "We put a very consistent effort together both offensively and defensively.

"I felt like our block was putting a tremendous amount of pressure on them, and our athletes did a wonderful job of following our game plan that our coaches put together and executed it very nicely."

Senior outside hitter Vali Hejjas led the Cats with 18 kills, junior outside hitter Agata Rezende chipped in another 10 and senior setter Gabby Guerre was one dig short of a double-double, with 35 assists and 9 digs.

Fritz said Hejjas can be dominant against any opponent.

"She keeps telling me that she now understands the rivalry, the Kansas-Kansas State thing, whereas a year ago she didn't," Fritz said. "She's a tremendous player and capable of playing that way against anybody at anytime."

Hejjas said there is a little extra incentive for the team every time the Jayhawks are in town.

"You always know that they're going to have a good game against us, so we try to fire up ourselves all the time," Hejjas said. "It's a big rivalry between the schools, so we want to come out and show them that we are better than them."

K-State also had 10 service aces as a team, led by sophomore outside hitter Sandy Werner's

Senior Sarah Heffel, sophomores Katy Heffel and Helene Robert and freshmen Kali Quick and Michelle Regan are representing the Wildcats in their fourth-ever appearance at the Palmetto.

Last season, the Cats took third at the Palmetto, and according to Coach Kristi Knight, the event gets better every year for her players.

The key to success, Knight said, will be for her players to play their individual game and not force good shots.

NASCAR | Johnson takes emotional win at Atlanta

Jimmie Johnson usually smokes his tires to celebrate a victory. Not this time.

Johnson

Instead, he drove back to the finish line to pick up the checkered flag.

A little something to ease the pain.

Johnson became the first driver since 1998 to win three straight races in a season, holding off Mark Martin on Sunday for a poignant victory at Atlanta Motor Speedway.

Last week, Johnson did a burnout after winning at Martinsville, but he never made it to Victory Lane. A plane carrying 10 people — many of the key members of Hendrick Motorsports — had crashed on its way to the race.

When Johnson got to Atlanta, he couldn't think of a better way to honor the victims than by winning the Bass Pro Shops MBNA 500. But he had to beat Martin, who clearly had the strongest car on the track.

Martin led 227 of the 325 laps, while Johnson was out front for only 17. But he led the one that counted, comfortably beating Martin to the line by 0.293 seconds.

Seven of the 10 championship contenders had major problems, including points leader Kurt Busch. He blew an engine and finished next-to-last, but stayed on top in the points.

Johnson jumped two places to second, only 59 points behind. He also became the first driver with three straight victories in a season since teammate Jeff Gordon won four in a row in 1998.

'Saw' not as scary as billed, but filled with loads of hacks

"Saw"
Movie review by J. Scott Bowman

The movie "Saw" has all of the elements of a classic horror flick: a crazy killer, voyeurism, a twisted plot that keeps you guessing and a creepy puppet.

However, with all of these elements carefully thought out, "Saw" does not work as a horror movie, but more like a comedy.

First-time director James Wan had his hands full with a movie as complicated as this, and it shows.

The evil and sadistic villain (also known as the Jigsaw Killer) lurks in the shadows searching for victims, catches them, and places them in complex situations that make your stomach turn – think of the movie "Se7en."

The keys to this villain's atrocities are victims placed in situations that mimic their lifestyles and values, and he believes he is helping them by giving them a new love of life. Strange and sadistic, indeed!

In the movie, Adam (Leigh Whannell) and Dr. Lawrence Gordon (Cary Elwes) are chained in a dingy bathroom, with a few clues of how to escape. Gordon must kill Adam in order to save his family.

Gordon is familiar with the the Jigsaw Killer and his antics, because he was previously associated with the Killer. The background information he reveals to Adam is fresh, yet sickening.

By the time the movie starts to take stride as a real psychological thriller, things that started to seem absurd and strange (as far as production of the movie is concerned) seem to completely derail.

Elwes overacts to the point that he becomes hysterical, partially due to the editing of scenes that parallels suspenseful scenes and Elwes in the fetal position crying like a baby.

Meanwhile, detective Tapp (Danny Glover), who is obsessed with the Jigsaw Killer and always seems to be on his heals several times only to have the crap beat out of him, is moaning and stumbling across the scene so many times it looks like a child acting out a prolonged death scene: dying, recouping, only to start dying again.

Even the creepy puppet that talks to victims, starts to become a joke, because it rides on a tricycle to congratulate a victim who survived her test.

The timing and the way characters suddenly remember certain details is unbelievable.

It just seems that someone flipped a switch on the characters, that are believable for the most part, and made them either: overact, react in a strange way or know something that before they did not.

Though the movie doesn't seem to pull off all that is to be expected from a movie that has been hailed (on the "Saw" Web site, at least) as "The creepiest horror flick since 'Se7en,'" there are some positive points as well.

The premise, though it closely mimics "Se7en," is rather fresh and original and is supported by the evil genius of Jigsaw Killer, who carefully plans out each situation and has a puppet that is creepy as hell.

Some scenes are truly freaky and will make your skin crawl, including scenes based on darkness and someone just beyond your line of sight. In other words, Wan does a really good job keeping the scenes cerebral.

"Saw" is a good first try for Wan who bit off more than he could chew.

But considering "Saw" is a good story that he collaborated with Whannell, you can definitely expect Wan to come out swinging in his next movie.

Hardly horrifying

'The Grudge' lacks originality, scare factor

"The Grudge"
Movie review by Tony Herrman

I represent young dudes who can't handle scary movies, which is exactly why I wanted to see "The Grudge."

I had trouble sleeping after I saw "The Ring" last year, and I wanted more of that. According to the trailers for "The Grudge," it has all of the same spooky stuff – strange noises and rotting bodies that move forward through jump cuts – that made "The Ring" so creepy.

"The Grudge" is an Americanized version of "Ju-on," written and directed by Takashi Shimizu, the woman behind the Japanese version.

Sarah Michelle Gellar stars as a health care worker who came to Japan with her boyfriend, Doug, who is studying architecture.

The eponymous grudge is a Japanese belief that when a death is the result of either rage or sorrow, evil will manifest itself in anyone who becomes connected with the death.

The rage-related deaths start when a Japanese woman falls in love with a visiting professor played by Bill Pullman. She is killed by her jealous husband.

A woman's lust for Pullman starting a curse? Get real.

The movie has more problems than a woman falling in love with Mr. Wrong.

First and foremost, "The Grudge" suffers from a title that is more appropriate to a western than a horror movie. It's more of a curse than anything, but that would be even more cliché.

What happened to the great titles like "Night of the Living Dead" or "Hollywood Chainsaw Hookers"?

The fact that the movie's star, Gellar, has slightly more street credit than Paul Reubens doesn't help, either.

In theory, the only connection "The Grudge" should share with "The Ring" is a genre and country, but it's hard to not make a connection between the two.

"The Grudge" relies on the same horror standbys: water and long stringy black hair covering the face of a woman.

The being who does the killing is a female who was killed by a loved one.

Whenever she's near, it sounds like somebody letting off a prolonged belch.

The movie does have its scary moments. I spent much of the movie looking at the exit sign to the right of the screen and watched the movie out of my peripherial vision to keep from being so scared that I'd lose control of bodily functions.

Even though I wasn't looking directly at the screen, I was so tense I could feel it in my beard. But there is less than a handful of genuinely terrifying moments, and the movie provides absolutely no surprises.

If you are a horror movie fan or are not easily scared, then "The Grudge" probably won't do much to your nervous system.

R. Kelly considers legal action after dismissal from tour with Jay-Z

Lawyers for singer R. Kelly were filing a criminal complaint against a member of rapper Jay-Z's entourage and considering other legal action after the platinum-selling stars' joint tour came to an abrupt end.

The "I Believe I Can Fly" singer was booted from remaining shows at Madison Square Garden by the promoter Saturday, a day after a member of Jay-Z's entourage allegedly blasted Kelly with pepper spray, said his publicist, Allan Mayer. The promoter announced that Jay-Z, with special guests, would do the shows alone.

Kelly's lawyers were filing a complaint against the entourage member and considering action over the decision to remove Kelly from the tour, Mayer said.

"The fans deserve better than this," Kelly said in a statement. "I'd like the show to go on. It's really disappointing that Jay-Z and the promoter don't."

Jay-Z and R. Kelly were in the midst of a 40-city "Best of Both Worlds" tour, which has been beset by canceled shows and reports that the feuding performers weren't even on speaking terms.

Judge allows woman to pursue lawsuit against Schwarzenegger

A television host who says she was groped by California Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger four years ago and then libeled by his aides can take legal action in a British court, a judge ruled.

Judge David Eady on Friday rejected a claim by Schwarzenegger aide Sean Walsh that British courts had no jurisdiction in the case. Anna Richardson claims Schwarzenegger, 57, fondled her breast during an interview in London in 2000 and that his staff subsequently damaged her reputation as a professional interviewer by alleging she encouraged the behavior.

Schwarzenegger

Richardson alleges she was libeled by Schwarzenegger, Walsh and Schwarzenegger spokeswoman Sheryl Main in an October 2003 article in the Los Angeles Times, which appeared on the Internet. Richardson said the article claimed she "deliberately and dishonestly fabricated" her allegations against Schwarzenegger.

Moore to have cameras at polling places

Filmmaker Michael Moore plans to have hundreds of cameras outside polling places in Ohio and Florida on Election Day to watch for attempts to suppress voter turnout.

The director of the anti-Bush documentary "Fahrenheit 9/11" announced Saturday that a total of 1,200 professional and nonprofessional cameramen, filmmakers and videographers will bring their cameras to polling places in the two presidential battleground states, especially in minority communities.

"I'm putting those who intend to suppress the vote on notice: voter intimidation and suppression will not be tolerated," Moore said in a statement.

To lighten the mood, "Saturday Night Live" will be making fun of past campaigns. Airing 10 p.m. EST tonight on NBC, "Saturday Night Live Presidential Bash" will feature candidates' debates from three decades — as spoofed by "SNL."

These include the Bush-Gore debate of 2000; the 1992 Clinton-Bush-Perot debates with Phil Hartman as Bill Clinton and Dana Carvey in the other two roles; the 1988 Bush-Dukakis debates, as well as the show's Ford-Carter debate between Chevy Chase and Dan Aykroyd.

success.

"You've got to try to keep them off the field as long as possible, and we didn't do that tonight," Sproles said.

Cumbie finished the night with 326 yards on 27-39 passing and the two first-quarter touchdowns.

Down just 14-7 at halftime, despite being out-gained 278-100 in total yards, the Wildcats made several runs at the Tech lead only to be burned by critical lapses on special teams and both sides of the ball.

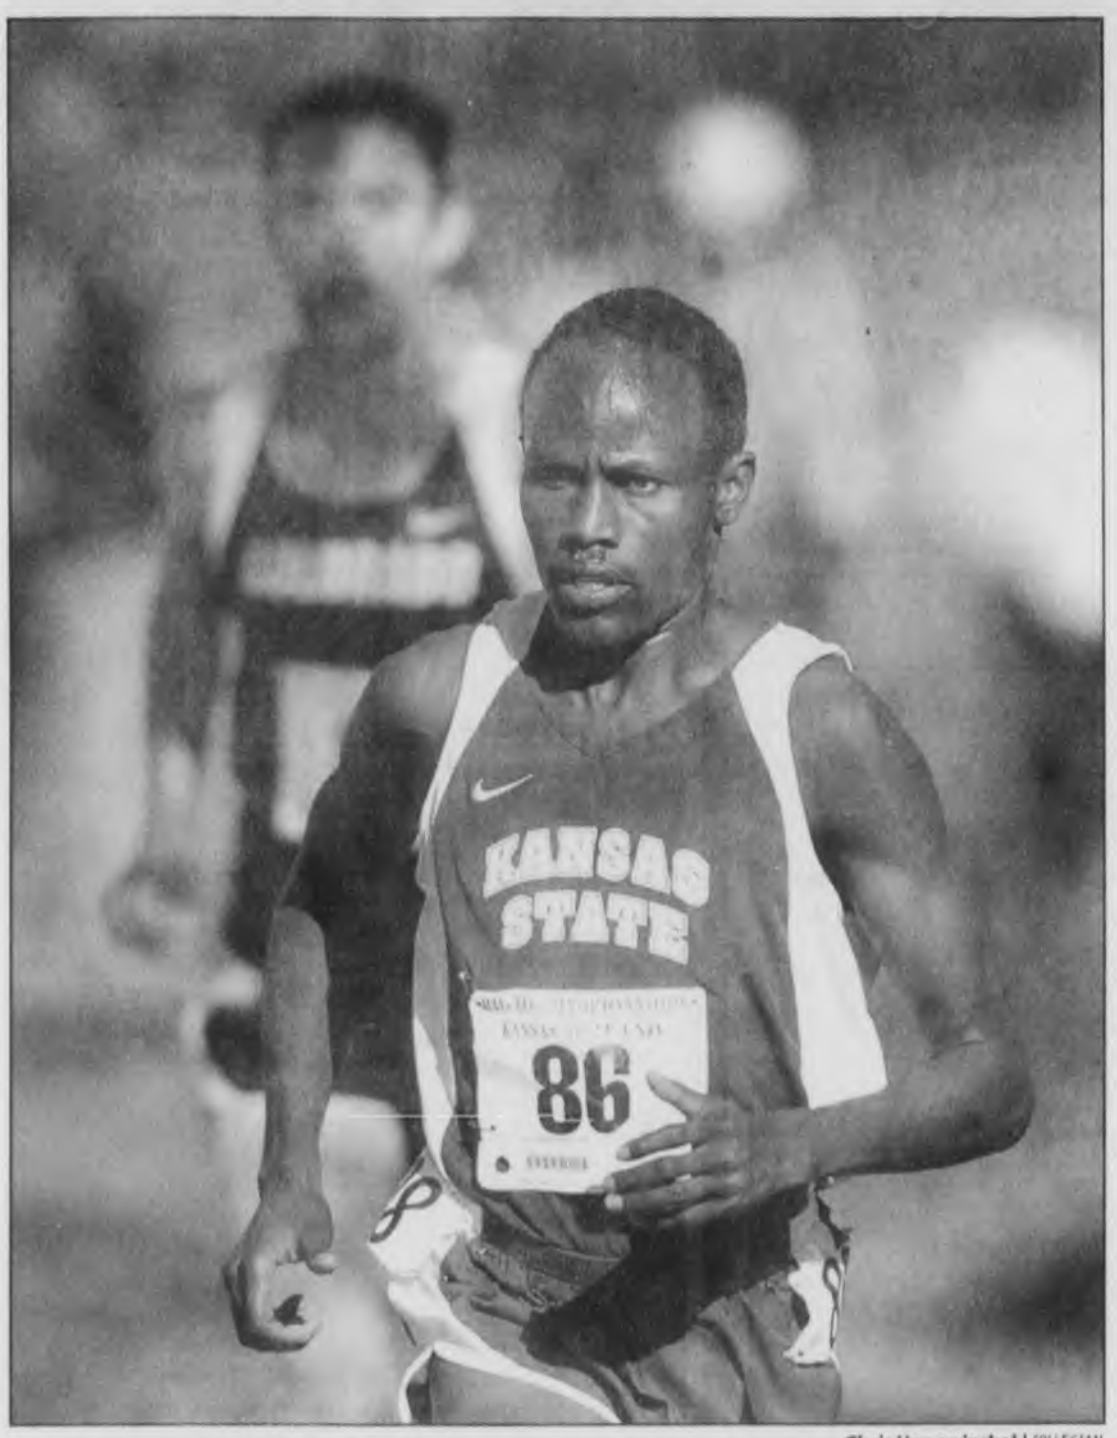
After cutting the lead to 14-10 in the third quarter, the Wildcats allowed the Red Raiders to march down the field for an 80-yard touchdown drive aided by junior defensive end Tearrius George's dead-ball personal foul on a third and nine for Tech at its own 21 yard line.

Later in the quarter, in what has become a theme for the Wildcats this season, special teams killed K-State. Freshman Danny Amendola returned a punt 90 yards for a touchdown, giving Tech a 28-10 lead.

But the K-State defense would respond, forcing a team safety. Sproles then scored on a 40-yard touchdown run the ensuing possession, making the Tech lead 28-19.

Defensive coordinator Bob Elliott said he was proud of how the defense stepped up in the key situation.

"Our guys played hard, scrapped, clawed, fought and really gave us a chance to win with the safety and the short field," Elliott said.



Unfortunately for the Wildcats, the comeback would be for not. With K-State driving in Red Raider territory, sophomore quarterback Dylan Meier threw an interception to senior defensive end Adell Duckett that put the Red Raiders in control for good with 5:30 left in the fourth quarter.

Now, K-State prepares for a game at Missouri this Saturday and a three-game stretch in which every contest is a must-win – six wins are needed for the Wildcats to be bowl-eligible.

Senior center Mike Johnson said the Wildcats have no choice but to win out.

"Our backs are all the way up against the wall right now," Johnson said.

"There's nothing we can do but look into this next week and win that ballgame."

Mathew Chesang competes in the 2004 Big 12 Cross Country Championships on Saturday in Topeka. The senior placed third. Both the men's and women's teams finished in eighth place.

missed out on being named All-Big 12, as she finished 16th for the second year in a row.

Culbertson said she was a little upset that she didn't finish in the top 15.

"I've never gotten a medal in Big 12 cross country," she said. "I thought that would be cool, and I missed it at the end. I got out-kicked. I guess that fits, because I have no kick."

Heading into the meet, the team had hoped to finish in the top half of the conference, but like the men, the Wildcat women finished eighth. Junior Lysaira Roman-Del Valle finished 41st and senior Shauna Burrell followed at 51st.

Smith said Culbertson and the women raced hard but fell short of their team goal.

"Trisha had a great race," Smith said. "That course was tough. That's the best race she's run all year. We didn't have a complete team performance that was great. We had some good ones, some average ones and some below-average ones. In the end, that doesn't add up to exceeding expectations."

probably every third snap," Snyder said. "I was going to, but some of the things we wanted to do with Allen, Dylan was doing just fine."

Meier led K-State to within nine points of the Red Raiders, 28-19, late in the third quarter. When the defense forced Texas Tech to punt on its first two possessions of the last stanza, it appeared the Wildcats would make a run in the fourth quarter.

With 10:44 left in the game, Meier went to work from his own 19-yard line and led the Wildcats deep into Red Raider territory. On second and one from the 23-yard line, Meier threw across the field to sophomore wide receiver Jermaine Moreira, who then threw the ball back to Meier on the opposite side. The 6-foot-3 quarterback caught the ball across the first down marker, but officials ruled it an illegal forward pass.

On the very next play, Meier attempted a screen pass, which was intercepted by Texas Tech senior defensive end Adell Duckett, setting up the Red Raiders' fifth touchdown of the game.

"It was a little slip screen, and I thought he was still rushing," Meier said. "I was looking at the receiver coming through, and he made a great play. He fooled me, and I can't be doing those things if we need to win the ball game."

Despite the interception, co-offensive coordinator Del Miller said he thought Meier had a good game.

"Obviously that interception was not a good one, but other than that he threw the ball pretty well," Miller said. "He did some good things."

three.

Senior middle blocker Lisa Martin had two service aces in the first match she served of the season.

Fritz said that Martin's move to the back row and into the serving rotation was a result of some changes the Wildcats are making.

"We're trying some different things," Fritz said. "We were having some issues in a few of our serve-receive patterns, so we tried to shake things up a little bit, and that now enables Lisa to go back and serve and she did a great job."

Next action for K-State is 7 p.m. Wednesday at Iowa State.

float competition and cheers could be heard when this was announced, as was the case for any announcement of winners.

Andrea Geist and Katie McMurray, members of Kappa Alpha Theta, said they were glad to find out their hard work had paid off.

"We were standing in a crowd of people, and we were just jumping up and down and screaming. It was so exciting," McMurray, sophomore in secondary education, said. "We worked so hard on it."

Geist, sophomore in print journalism, said she couldn't wait to hear the results.

"It was really nerve-racking right before the last one," she said. "We were in a lot of anticipation."

KERRY | Democrat's campaign aims to attract local media attention responsibility for the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks and said American security was neither in the hands of Bush nor Kerry.

"As Americans, we are absolutely united in our determination to hunt down and destroy Osama bin Laden and the terrorists," Kerry said in response. "They are barbarians. And I will stop at absolutely nothing to hunt down, capture or kill the terrorists wherever they are, whatever it takes. Period."

Kerry and Democrats nationwide stationed poll watchers in key states, ensuring no voters were turned away.

Thousands of lawyers are on hand to handle voter complaints and a possible recount Tuesday.

Although the race is close and the legal challenges many, Kerry said he was confident a president would be chosen Tuesday night.

"I think Americans are going to vote for change," he said.

Kerry's focus has turned to reaching out to undecided voters as well as making sure his supporters get to the polls.

Kerry senior adviser Mike McCurry said the Democratic campaign was no longer concerned with generating big turnouts at rallies, but was focused instead on having Kerry make quick stops to attract local media coverage that might help voters decide.

The Kerry campaign has 250,000 volunteers nationwide – 47,000 in Ohio alone – designated to getting people to the polls on Election Day. In 2000, Democrat Al Gore had a total of 90,000.

In addition to Election Day volunteer records, the candidates have surpassed campaign advertising spending records with $600 million spent by the candidates and their parties.

Kerry will travel Michigan and Wisconsin today with a rally with singer Bruce Springsteen tonight in Cleveland, Ohio, before returning Tuesday to his home in Boston.

In the final hours, Kerry will try to prove he is the better choice in an election coined the most important of voters' lifetimes.

"When you go to the polls next Tuesday, bring your friends, your family, your neighbors," Kerry said. "No one can afford to stand on the sidelines or sit this one out."

strongest points of focus throughout the campaign, it was pushed to the forefront again Friday when Arab news network Al Jazeera aired a videotape from terrorist leader Osama bin Laden.

On the tape, bin Laden for the first time claimed responsibility for the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks. He said the attacks were in response to American injustices against Lebanese and Palestinians, and that Americans can be free from further attacks by refraining from attacks on the Arab world.

"Your security is not in the hands of Kerry, Bush or Al-Qaeda. Your security is in your own hands," bin Laden said on the tape. "Any state that does not mess with our security has naturally guaranteed its own security."

Bush, however, remained confident the United States would be successful in the war on terror.

"Americans will not be intimidated," he said Saturday.

527 groups.

David Procter, department head for speech communication, theater and dance, said advertisements do have a great influence on political agendas.

Negative advertisements are powerful in energizing core supporters and try to change independents' point of view, he said.

He also said the media would evaluate ads for their content.

"As far as a law prohibiting such ads, there isn't much. Any ad that goes beyond bounds is picked up by the media and eventually discredited but that takes a lot of time though", he said.

Ben Fenwick, senior in political science, said negative advertisements succeed in turning people off to the election.

"The use of laws to reduce negative ads is a violation of free speech. However, the candidates themselves need to realize that these ads do nothing to espouse their cause and limit their usage," he said.

Facing the issues

Presidential candidates square off in 4 major policy areas

Candidates	Social issues	International policy	Civil rights	Homeland security
 George W. Bush is 58 years old. He was the governor of Texas from 1994-2000, and he was elected U.S. President in 2000.	■ Opposes except cases of rape, incest or to save woman's life ■ Supports death penalty ■ Reduce illegal drug usage by 10 percent over two years ■ Protect gunmakers from lawsuits ■ Signed No Child Left Behind Act; claims federal budget has not fully funded legislation ■ Has cited Clarence Thomas, Antonin Scalia as model justices	■ Authorized war to oust Saddam Hussein regime ■ Initially opposed U.N. involvement; now warming to the idea ■ Announced new policy of pre-emption in June 2002 ■ More than $1 billion proposed for reconstruction of Iraq ■ Co-sponsored "road map" plan for peace process	■ Has both opposed and supported affirmative action ■ Backs constitutional amendment banning same-sex marriage ■ Supports "don't ask, don't tell" policy ■ Opposes gay adoptions ■ Opposes expanding federal law to cover sexual orientation	■ Supports extending "enemy combatant" label to some U.S. citizens ■ Supports Patriot Act ■ Proposed increasing budget to enforce immigration laws ■ Department of Homeland Security as the primary conduit of threat information
 John Kerry is 60 years old. He was the Massachusetts lieutenant governor from 1982-84, and he was elected U.S. Senator in 1984.	■ Supports a woman's right to an abortion and planning resources ■ Opposes death penalty ■ More police; aggressively target traffickers; fund treatment ■ Close gun show loophole; require child safety locks ■ Bar vouchers; fully fund NCLB, special ed., school building ■ Appoint judges committed to law, civil and abortion rights	■ Supported the war; later said Bush misled nation ■ Involve other nations more in Iraqi rebuilding, security ■ Denounces threat of pre-emption; would seek global consensus ■ Boost international efforts to secure peace, defeat al-Qaeda ■ Improve social, economic, political conditions in Middle East	■ Supports affirmative action policies ■ Against same-sex marriage, backs benefits and rights for same-sex couples ■ Favors allowing gay men, women to serve openly in military ■ Supports adoption by gay men, women ■ Expand federal hate crimes legislation, assure equal justice	■ Against labeling U.S. citizens "enemy combatants" ■ Backs letting Patriot Act expire without congressional approval ■ Speed immigration process; unite families; patrol borders ■ Reform domestic intelligence; start targeted alert system

Other presidential hopefuls include Michael A. Peroutka, Constitution Party candidate; Michael Badnarik Libertarian Party candidate; and Ralph Nader, Reform Party candidate.

Know your candidates

Each of the Republican and Democratic candidates in contested races in the Manhattan and Riley County area were contacted and asked questions on topics related to how they could uniquely serve K-State students. Races are listed in the order they appear on the ballot; candidates are listed in alphabetical order. Reform candidate George Cook and Libertarian Steven Rosile are running for U.S. Senate. Libertarian Dennis Hawver is running for 2nd District U.S. House of Representatives.

Candidate	Health care	K-12 education	Post-secondary education	Why should students vote for you?
 Sam Brownback U.S. Senator Republican	First, I support medical liability reform as a means to control costs in our healthcare system. I support drug importation from Canada or Mexico as a further means to level the playing field when it comes to the cost of prescription drugs.	High-quality education is critical if one wants to achieve the American Dream. In 2001, I supported President Bush when he called for significant reforms to K-12 education through the No Child Left Behind Act.	Under the leadership of President Bush there has been a record level of assistance being given to college students in the form of federal loans, grants and work-study programs.	I truly represent the concerns of the Heartland. Congress must ensure continued prosperity for all Americans in the following ways: 1. Reduce the size of the federal government, 2. Reform the way government does business, 3. Return to the values that made America great.
 Lee Jones U.S. Senator Democratic	I will work to enable the government to negotiate for lowest cost, and for seniors to be able to opt for prescription importation from Canada, should a lower cost not be obtainable in the United States. Answers taken from *www.jonesforsenate.us	I will work to restore the full 40 percent federal funding for the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act, also known as the "IDEA" Act. I will also fight any attempt at implementing "No Child Left Behind" unless the federal funding is there, along with adequate safeguards.	No response available	No response available
 Nancy Boyda U.S. States Representative 2nd District Democratic	I spent 20 years working in the pharmaceutical industry, so I understand why prescription drugs are the fastest-growing component of health care costs. I'll fight in Congress to bring down prices by reigning in runaway advertising expenses and by allowing Medicare to negotiate directly with drug companies.	Congress has a habit of handing down federal mandates, such as No Child Left Behind, and then providing far less funding than is necessary to meet these laws' requirements. Either Congress should fund its education laws, or states should be permitted to opt out of these bills' penalty provisions.	In addition to passing economic policies that hold down tuition increases, Congress should help low-income students afford higher education.	I believe that my moderate views are more in line with the beliefs of K-State's students. I support employment non-discrimination laws, I support a minimum wage increase, and I support meaningful environmental protection standards. My opponent supports none of these.
 Jim Ryun U.S. States Representative 2nd District Republican	The best way to improve access to care is by addressing the causes of rising health care costs, not implementing a government-controlled system. Answers taken from *www.ryun.house.gov	While I did not support the final No Child Left Behind legislation because it put forward too many mandates with too little state and local flexibility in meeting them, I do support its goal of a public school system that is accountable to students and parents ...	No response available	No response available
 Roger Reitz State Senator 22nd District Republican	Kansas is going to have to generate enough money to make Medicaid functional. I don't see any way to do it except to find some new money for the project. You can't keep borrowing money from other things.	I don't deal with K-12. I deal with everything. We have a lot of universities in our state, and I think they need to be considered in any kind of funding formula, and we have not been doing that to this point. I think there is a lack of understanding with some of these legislators.	Formula should be broadened to include how are we going to handle these regents and non-regents schools. Go easy on it and do it one step at a time, which would imply again looking at whatever financial resources we need.	I think we ought to be addressing issues, and the issues of the day right now are education and health care, and I don't see how either can be looked at without an open door to look at all options regarding funding. I don't see how they can be looked at in any other way.
 Julie Govert Walter State Senator 22nd District Democratic	As your Senator, I will use my energy and expertise to work for you and with Governor Sebelius to implement results-oriented initiatives and reforms.	Then the school finance formula must be reconsidered to ensure equity in distribution of funds statewide to reach the standard. Lawmakers also must provide incentives or directives to seek more efficiency in our educational system so that taxpayer money gets to the classrooms.	The double-digit tuition increases in recent years pose financial challenges to students and their Kansas families. As your senator and an alumna of K-State, I will fight for the money that K-State needs so that education at K-State can remain affordable.	I care about Kansas and the future of our state. K-State has been a huge part of my life. As your Senator, I will bring my personal energy, 20 years of work and leadership with legislators and diversity of perspectives to the Kansas Senate. Your vote will certainly be appreciated.
 Paul Barkey State Representative 66th District Republican	We would implement a four step plan which would a) change the law so that small businesses can band together in bargaining coops, b) implement health savings accounts, c) encourage the investment in preventative medicine, d) implement tort reform with caps on settlements.	The amount of money going to education has increased 10 of the last 11 years when funds from all sources all included. We need to make education more efficient by reducing waste and duplication of effort.	I would like to have the state implement a loan and grant program based on need, ability and motivation. If it is a loan, a percentage of the loan would be forgiven if the student served (teacher, doctor, therapist, etc.) in a rural community in Kansas.	I am the most qualified, experienced and educated candidate. Manhattan needs a representative that is pro-life, pro-family and pro-business who will truly represent the values of our community.
 Sydney Carlin State Representative 66th District Democratic	I would like to see a peer review of the 5 major areas involved in health care to see what approach each group would take toward solving this issue. These groups include the medical, legal, insurance industry, pharmaceutical corporations and the educational piece for the public.	I prefer to establish a designated source of money that will fund the state's responsibility to educate children and take us into the future. I am willing to do the work and to risk, if necessary, the unpopularity of making difficult decisions to increase state funding.	It is the job of the Legislature to provide the state with a budget. I will remind fellow legislators that the universities are vital to the economic stability of Kansas. I will work to keep public universities affordable to students.	I am currently working on a Master's degree at KSU. This keeps me in constant contact with the campus, its faculty and students. Having access to you is particularly helpful to me as your legislator. I understand the vital economic role the university serves in my district.
 Tom Hawk State Representative 67th District Democratic	As a state legislator I would work on five keys areas in cooperation with the Governor: 1. Prescription Drugs, 2. Health insurance, 3. Administrative costs, 4. Local hospital, 5. Senior health.	We must form a team of knowledgeable people to rewrite the school finance formula and address the key areas outlined in the current lawsuit. In particular, I want to address one of the factors known as "correlation weighting" that I think has not been fair to districts like Manhattan.	If elected, I will immediately try to contact the legislators from the other regent's communities to set up a coalition of support to protect and adequately fund higher education in Kansas.	I have been a long term, involved member of the Manhattan and K-State community. My number one issue is education, and I believe it is the most important foundation for the future of our state.
 Joe McGraw State Representative 67th District Republican	The best way to increase coverage to more of our people is to encourage businesses that they work for to provide them insurance. For instance many businesses might consider health insurance for their employees if the state was willing to give a dollar for dollar tax credit.	Public education funding is linked to declining population in our state and population is tied to being the highest tax state in the plains and the state not being business friendly. Our quality of education remains very good despite teachers being underpaid.	Compared to other areas of the country, we are getting a good — dollars we put into our higher education. The most important issue we face — how to keep more of our graduates in Kansas. We currently have a negative of — 5000 students every year to other states with thriving economies.	As a member of the majority party I would have more of an opportunity than my opponent to influence the legislature on behalf of K-State — is a major economic force and needs to be supported by the legislature — possible. My background degrees with K-State make its welfare of importance to me.

Know your candidates

Races are listed in the order they appear on the ballot; candidates are listed in alphabetical order. Kathy Martin, a Republican, is running unopposed for the State School Board. Rich Vargo, a Republican, is running unopposed for county clerk. M. Charlotte Shawver, a Republican, is running unopposed for county register of deeds.

Candidate	Healthcare	K-12 education	Post-secondary education	Why should students vote for you?
 Bob Newsome County Commissioner 3rd District Republican	Healthcare is very important. On the general scale I think we have to find a solution somehow, and I think that it's going to have to be on the national scale, because health care is getting so out of reach for many of our families.	No doubt our public education is the most important thing that we have as far as this country is concerned. I'm not one that wants to increase taxes, but at the same time, if it takes that to provide education for our youth, then I would be willing to support tax increases for that purpose.	Increasing tuition every year is another problem, I think we can only increase tuition to a certain point, and we start pricing people's education. Anytime we price people out of education then we are going backwards, and I don't think Kansas or any other state can afford to do that.	I think if they'll look at my record that I have accomplished as much as any public servant in Riley County. My theme is to promote better roads and more jobs, and I think both of them tie together, and I think this is very, very important to any of the students that are coming out with their diploma and they need good jobs.
 Geri Simon County Commissioner 3rd District Democratic	This is more an issue for state and federal legislators to deal with. However, counties have long played a major role in providing services that protect people's health through public health departments.	First, insisting that public officials — particularly in our state legislature — deal with state education funding inequities and revisit the funding formulas. The county should work with its school districts and cities on housing and economic development.	I encourage our legislature to deal with the issue of rising tuition costs. The county, in any local economic development initiatives, can work on bringing jobs to our area that pay enough for families to support themselves and allow contribution toward other things such as college tuition.	K-State students should vote for me, because I want to focus the county on the future. I am particularly interested in tackling the housing and economic development issues in our area so that those K-State grads who want to can remain in Riley County as they start and advance careers, and as many of them raise families.

Many federal, state races remain tight despite Kansas' presidential leanings

By Dave Skretta
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Driving through Manhattan in the days leading up to the general election, yard signs tout candidates for Congress, State House of Representatives and State Senate seats and local offices.

But very few signs say George W. Bush or John Kerry for President.

That's because it is a foregone conclusion that Bush, the Republican incumbent, will receive the state's six electoral votes, said Scott Poor, executive director of the Kansas Republican Party.

Part of that is because voter registration in Kansas heavily favors the GOP.

"In Kansas, we have such an advantage in registration. The demographics go to the Republicans in every election in Kansas," Poor said.

According to the Kansas Secretary of State's office, 49 percent of the population is registered Republican.

Only 28 percent of voters are registered Democrats, and the remaining 23 percent are independent or members of other parties.

"In the Republican Party, if everyone who is registered voted, we'd win almost every time," Poor said.

When it comes to the Presidential election, the Republican Party does win almost every time.

Since Kansas first took part in a federal election in 1864, only seven times has the state not gone to the Republican candidate.

Kansans voted for Populists twice, Democrats Woodrow Wilson and Franklin Delano Roosevelt twice, and Lyndon Johnson in 1964.

Recent races haven't been close, either.

Since 1980, only once has a Democratic candidate come within 13 percentage points of taking the state. That was in 1992, when Texas billionaire Ross Perot made a bid for the White House. George Bush, Sr. won 39 percent of the vote that year while Democratic challenger Bill Clinton claimed 34 percent.

Bush's lead in Kansas means both parties are shipping some of their workforce to nearby battleground states such as Iowa, Missouri and Colorado for last-minute campaigning.

But despite the probability that Bush will again take the Sunflower state, there are still plenty of reasons for Kansans to vote, said Mark Simpson, executive director of the Kansas Democratic Party.

"The presidential vote is a worthwhile thing to express your preference," he said, "but right now there are also some very important federal races. The state legislative races will also make a lot of impact."

That's one of the reasons Judd Patterson, a senior in Biology, thinks so many people are interested in this year's election.

"I think people do kind of think that the state's already decided (in favor of Bush)," he said. "For some people there are other elections that may be more significant, where they actually do have a voice that would change things locally."

Simpson said there are nearly 400 Democratic nominees seeking a variety of positions in Kansas, from Congress down to local government.

One of the more hotly contested races is between U.S. Rep. Jim Ryun and Democratic challenger Nancy Boyda in Kansas's 2nd Congressional District.

Races likes that are why Simpson and Poor both expect voters to turn out in droves on Tuesday.

Secretary of State Ron Thornburgh predicted last week that a record number will cast their ballot this year.

"There is a lot on the line – a lot to gain and, quite frankly, a lot to lose," Simpson said.

"Champion for quality education."

Issue: Education – Excellent education is a must for the future of Kansas.
- K-State is one of the finest universities in America and must remain so. I will fight for adequate resources for classroom improvement, competitive salaries, capitol improvements and deferred maintenance reduction.
- Public education in Kansas is good yet there are challenges to make it better. Kansas ranks third from the bottom at 48th place among the 50 states in funding classroom instruction. I will work with the newly elected State Board of Education to reprioritize funding allocation.

Issue: The Economy – In its rating of Business Tax Friendly states, CNN/Money rated Kansas number 36 out of 50. I will fight to hold the line on taxes, determine which services are essential and ensure they are adequately funded, and then eliminate nonessential services until our total tax structure is at or below that of our neighboring states.
- KSU is a dominant economic factor for our area. The potential for KSU becoming a center for biotechnology is exciting and I will support continued efforts to expand these initiatives.
- Ft. Riley is a dominant economic factor and could increase in size by more than 15,000 troops in the near future if the 1st Infantry Division relocates to Ft. Riley. As a combat veteran from the Big Red One I believe I am the best choice to represent our district in this factor.

Issue: Health Insurance –I favor affordable health insurance for all Kansans.
- This is primarily a small business issue for Kansas since the vast majority of underinsured individuals work for a small company or are self employed or retired.
- I will fight for a change in the law to permit small businesses and self-employed to join together in order to get the lower group rates. I will also fight for Tort reform and for incentives for preventive health practices.

Focusing the County on the Future

Why I'm Running:

You've heard it. The talk about County Commission meetings. How endless, how inefficient they are. How the county is still run a lot like in the horse-and-buggy days. Why keep running things like that when times have changed?

I'm in this race because we need a new commissioner to help make changes, someone committed to running the county more professionally, and more cooperatively. I'll work well with other government officials on issues like economic development, housing, and keeping families with young children in Riley County.

A little about me: I have a master's degree in human services management. I've lived here since 1997, and have been active in public affairs both here and in Michigan. I am chair of Manhattan's Social Services Advisory Board. My husband Todd teaches at K-State. Our two daughters go to school in USD 383 in the eighth and tenth grades.

Candidate	Why should students vote for you?
 Eileen King County Treasurer Republican	For professional and friendly customer service when registering and titling vehicles, paying taxes or renewing driver's licenses. We realize that this could be the first time that students are paying for their own vehicles and tags, and we want to help them understand the process.
 Stacy Lane County Treasurer Democratic	I don't feel students get enough credit for their hard work. I think college students are very busy with school, work, and friends and should be taken care of in the same manner as others in the community. I am committed to a friendly and efficient customer service that will take care of all age groups in the Riley County Treasurer's Office.
 Chris Getty County Attorney Democratic	I believe that I am qualified to serve in this office. I have a background both as the City Prosecutor for Manhattan and an Assistant Riley County Attorney. I have also served as a white collar crimes investigator, investigating financial crimes and investment fraud, and a special investigator with the federal government. I am the only Riley County citizen seeking this office, and I live in Manhattan with my family. My wife, Kelly, is a KSU faculty member with the Food Science Institute.
Barry Wilkerson County Attorney Republican	The reason students should vote for Barry Wilkerson is I have been a prosecuting attorney for 14 years. I was an Assistant Riley County Attorney from 1990 to 2000 and the Pottawatomie County Attorney from 2001 to 2004. When students come to K-State, my office will do everything in its power to make the students' attendance at K-State a pleasant and safe experience.

Attention: Riley County Voters:
Vote YES!
This ballot referendum is to remove the 30% food sales requirement now in place for local businesses. While the law requires these owners to meet the 30% food requirement, there is nothing that requires that a customer purchase any food at all.
Give local business owners the right to operate their businesses with less government regulation.
The reality of complying with this law is that drinking establishments try to sell the required percentage of business in food during the early evening hours when people eat their dinner. The demand for liquor by the drink, however, occurs mostly after 11:00 p.m. At that time of night, the people wanting to order food are minimal. So the intent of the law to have food available to slow the absorption of alcohol is not really working very effectively. And with the influx of new national restaurant franchises in the area giving diners more choices, local drinking establishments are finding it increasingly difficult to capture enough food to achieve the 30% requirement.
A YES vote is endorsed by the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce & Aggieville Business Assoc.

Kerry campaign works diligently to mobilize Boston voters

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

BOSTON – It's hard to find a Bush-backer in Boston. From John Kerry's neighborhood of Beacon Hill to the Boston Public Gardens to Copley Square, Kerry stickers, signs and buttons adorn the old and young.

Kerry campaign volunteers were still aggressively handing out flyers, pleading for volunteers to call voters or stand at busy intersections with signs.

Page said he started volunteering for the Kerry campaign after his friend, a doctor at Massachusetts General Hospital, lost his federal funding.

In addition, Page said he felt convicted after the Patriot Act was approved, taking away what he says are important civil liberties.

If voters stand up for their liberties then they will vote for Kerry, Page said.

At first his vote was going to Kerry because of the simple fact he opposed Bush, but as he learned more about Kerry, he found there were many qualities that make him presidential material.

"His background is in Senate and an investigator," Page said. "He will insist on much better planning for the war in Iraq."

If Bush is re-elected, the costs will be great, Page said.

"The war in the Middle East will expand," he said.

"The environmental laws will continue to be removed. There will be no development of alternative fuels."

By late morning Monday, Page was out of stickers. This is not a problem for Kerry supporters – Page sends them down the street to headquarters where stickers are in great supply.

The Republicans in Boston are voting for Kerry – even one from the Civil War era.

Michael Kennedy, 67, doesn't drape himself in Kerry propaganda. Instead, he dressed up in an

Bush courts swing states before vote

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

WASHINGTON – President Bush campaigned in four swing states while preparations were being made in Washington, D.C., for his campaign party tonight.

Bush began the day in Ohio before traveling to Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, Iowa and New Mexico.

Bush
PRESIDENT

Each state is considered a swing state, with the polls showing Bush and challenger Sen. John Kerry nearly even in expected votes. To win the presidency, either Bush or Kerry must earn 270 electoral votes. Projections and polls have been inconclusive in determining which candidate is likely to win.

Bush spent last night at his ranch in Crawford, Texas, and was expected to vote there early this morning.

Tonight's campaign party in Washington, D.C., is hosted by the Republican National Committee at the Reagan Building in Federal Triangle, just a few blocks from the White House.

Officials on site would not confirm whether Bush would at-

Presidential race on minds of protesters, locals alike in nation's capital

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

WASHINGTON – The streets and sidewalks in the nation's capital bear little evidence of one of the closest presidential races in U.S. history. A yard sign here and there and a few stickers or campaign buttons are some of only a few visual signs of a race that has divided the nation – and its capital.

As passengers on the city's Metro system ride the escalator up from the station, a sweet gospel tune fights through the honking and pushing of rush-hour crowds.

When the song stops, though, the yelling begins.

"Twenty-four hours to send Bush to the zoo!"

"Straight-jacket for Bush!"

"Hook Bush up with some Hooked on Phonics!"

The quartet of men are part of a group of young people campaigning for Sen. John Kerry near the campus of George Washington University. As followers of presidential candidate Lyndon LaRouche, the group thinks Kerry will be more receptive than President Bush to what they believe are more sensible economic policies.

"People like Dick Cheney are fascists," said Mike Wilkins, a Canadian citizen and a group member handing out flyers.

Wilkins called the group an intellectual youth movement. The group believes the current fiscal situation is similar to that of the 1930s, and supports a policy akin to Franklin Roosevelt's "New Deal."

If the current policy is maintained, Wilkins said, the country could end up as another Nazi Germany.

"The reception's been good," Wilkins said. "You get your random

Kerry set to return to Boston

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

BOSTON – Sen. John Kerry didn't let his last 24 hours before polls open go to waste.

With final polls showing a 49 percent tie, as well as battleground states still up for grabs, Election Day will be greeted with cautious anticipation.

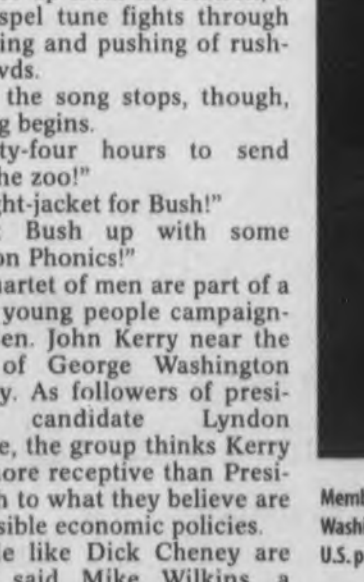
DEMOCRATIC PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE

"The world is watching," Kerry told supporters.

The Democrat made six rally stops including the battleground states of Wisconsin, Ohio and Florida.

"I've heard your struggles. I share your hopes. And together, tomorrow we have a chance to make a difference," he said.



Kerry continued to focus on the differences between himself and President Bush in leading the military effort in Iraq.

"I believe we can bring the world back to the side of America. I

CAMPUS PULSE

READERS' REPRESENTATIVE FOR THE COLLEGIAN

CHRIS BLUIETT

Chris can be reached at cab66676@ksu.edu.

As I wrote in my column last week, many readers believe it is about time the Collegian helps in tackling some issues and problems here at K-State. The response I received was awesome.

I want to thank all of you who e-mailed this week or talked to me in person.

As for the Collegian helping solve some problems on campus, the first issue most suggested was parking on campus.

This problem stems from lack of planning and preparation with foresight. On the planners' side, I guess it could have been hard to foresee many years ago the kind of growth K-State would achieve. Also, most people would not have known back then that almost every student on campus would have their own automobile.

You would think there should have been some planning for potential parking problems when we started growing years back.

As I thought about what we as a newspaper could do about this issue, I realized the most important thing we can do is get the word out to the student government that this is a serious issue that needs to be addressed as soon as possible.

We can't afford to put this problem off any longer. The more time we waste, the bigger a problem it becomes.

The first thing suggested to me was for the Collegian to come up with some kind of peaceful demonstration on campus to get the whole student population involved.

This could cause some kind of immediate reaction from the decision makers on campus.

The second thing readers suggested the Collegian could do is come up with some type of media campaign to put this issue to the forefront and makes the decision makers get into boardrooms and start coming up with some plans that could alleviate some of the parking problems.

Readers also suggested the Collegian could set aside space in the paper on a daily basis that you, the reader, could put your comments and suggestions in. This could help the decisions makers come up with some good ideals.

Readers said the Collegian, as a voice for the students on campus, could form a task force of students to look at the issue more in-depth and come up with some suggestions and plans and then present them to the student government.

There are many other suggestions I heard from you, and believe me when I say I will continue to suggest those ideas to our staff at the Collegian.

As I suggested last week, we as students can help solve issues on our campus. Collegian readers have suggested that one of the ways students can help in the parking situation is carpooling. This could be a temporary but useful solution until more parking spaces are built.

A few things that readers may need to realize is that this is not a problem that will be fixed overnight. This is an issue that will take a lot of time and money to be solved. A lot of meetings and debates will have to take place first. There will have to be some good solid planning also, so they won't be caught up in this same predicament again 20 years from now.

A major campaign will have to be kicked off to get the ball rolling. Then there's the money issue. Where would the money come from to build new parking lots? There will have to be many talks and debates on whether student fees should be increased and these debates would be tough and long. The other major issue that will have to be discussed is the potential location of these new parking lots.

I know, by speaking with some of you this past week and having to wait an hour before getting a parking spot on campus myself, the parking situation has gotten out of hand. We at the Collegian will do all we can as your voice to get this issue discussed and tackled.

Attention: Riley County Voters:
Vote YES!
This ballot referendum is to remove the 30% food sales requirement now in place for local businesses. While the law requires these owners to meet the 30% food requirement, there is nothing that requires that a customer purchase any food at all.
Give local business owners the right to operate their businesses with less government regulation.
The reality of complying with this law is that drinking establishments try to sell the required percentage of business in food during the early evening hours when people eat their dinner. The demand for liquor by the drink, however, occurs mostly after 11:00 p.m. At that time of night, the people wanting to order food are minimal. So the intent of the law to have food available to slow the absorption of alcohol is not really working very effectively. And with the influx of new national restaurant franchises in the area giving diners more choices, local drinking establishments are finding it increasingly difficult to capture enough food to achieve the 30% requirement.

ELECTIONS 2004

Boyda, Ryun race for House seat

2nd District race closer than in previous years, campaigns say

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The race for the 2nd District U.S. House of Representative is in its final stretch, and the competition is tougher than expected.

Nancy Boyda has been giving incumbent Jim Ryun more pressure than he has received in his previous re-election races.

Joe Aistrup, head of the political science department, said Boyda has been more successful than previous challengers because she began campaigning more than a year ago. Being a moderate Democrat has helped Boyda, because Ryun is a conservative Republican, Aistrup said.

"A lot of what may be called conservative issues, Ryun supports," he said. "It doesn't appeal to more moderate voters and definitely not to liberal voters."

Jeff English, Boyda's campaign manager, said Ryun votes nearly every time with his party and not in the best interest of Kansas.

"She's a moderate Democrat. She's a Kansas Democrat. She will always vote in favor of Kansas," he said.

English said Boyda knew she needed to begin campaigning early and do considerable fundraising in order to make the race competitive.

"From day one Nancy hit the ground running and never looked back," he said. "She said, 'if I'm going to do this, I'm going to do it right.'"

Eric Haar, Ryun's campaign manager, attributed Boyda's success partly to the fact she doesn't currently have a job. "It was interesting to see someone come out and work like she did," he said. "To be able to campaign seven days a week is a luxury more people don't have."

Ryun's campaign, however, is not being ran differently despite the more competitive challenger, he said.

"We have a plan. It is well-funded, and it is being executed," Haar said. "Jim runs every race, whether it be a foot race or a congressional race, very hard and he is doing it this time, just as he has in the past."

English said if Boyda doesn't win the race, her campaign will still be considered successful, because it raised some issues that otherwise wouldn't have been looked at.

He said the campaign has shown how Ryun has voted and where he stands on certain issues that aren't generally discussed such as Ryun being in favor of private-school vouchers.

"There were things that we brought to light that never would have been brought to light without our campaign," English said.

Haar said there are three specific ways Ryun is a better choice than Boyda, though.

"Jim hasn't been an organizer of war protests," he said. "He didn't just move into the district 14 months ago, and he isn't using $285,000 of personal finances for his campaign. All of which his opponent has done."

Aistrup said although the race has been competitive Ryun will likely be the winner.

"She (Boyda) has a chance, but I wouldn't call it a great chance," he said. "It's a matter of what the constituency of the 2nd District is. There's slightly more voters that are very conservative."

The margin with which Ryun wins by will interesting to see, Aistrup said. If the the margin is considerably smaller than what President Bush wins Kansas with, then there may not be as much party loyalty as Kansas is known for.

The Ryun/Boyda race is not the only one to watch in Kansas, he said. In the 3rd District, the race between Rep. Dennis Moore (D) and Kris Kobach (R) will likely be a closer race.

"Various different groups watch different races, and they think the Moore/Kobach race will be close. They think that particular race will be closer," Aistrup said. "This race (the Ryun/Boyda race) could end up being closer. I'm not expecting it to be, but it could."

Unofficial vote totals offered via Web site

By Addie Laue
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Pottawatomie County will offer a new service to voters this year during the election.

The service will provide unofficial vote totals online so voters can track the candidates' statuses.

Riley County has offered this service since 2002, when the county's Web site was established. Riley County also offers an additional option in which a voter can have the unofficial totals e-mailed to them periodically throughout the election.

"We always knew that we wanted to offer this service to voters once we had a Web site," said Jolene Campbell, election coordinator for Riley County. "So it was just a mattter of having the resources to establish our site."

Officials from both counties say the service was put in place as the technology to do so became more available.

"We used to actually use a blackboard to keep track of the votes as they came in," said Susan Snapp, a technician for Pottawatomie County. "Now the votes are updated directly onto the Web site."

The service is intended to make tracking the candidates' totals more conveient as well as cut down on foot traffic in the offices on election day. However officials say this is a slow process.

"We still have a lot of media traffic coming into the office to track the totals," said Campbell, "and really a lot of the public too. I really think a lot of people just don't yet know about the service."

Susan Snapp, a technitian for Pottawatomie County, said the page will display each candidate's name, office, totals divided by township and their unofficial totals. Riley County's page will be similar.

The totals tracked through this service will remain unofficial until they are canvased on Friday.

World Wide Web once again revolutionizes the way political campaigns are run

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Internet campaigning may have an effect on this year's election.

Kathryn Focke, Riley County Democratic Chair, said she thinks Internet campaigning makes voters more accessible.

"It is the means by which a lot of voters can be reached without making a ton of phone calls," she said.

The Riley County Democratic Party uses the Internet to contact those who are interested in Democratic candidates, Focke said.

"We as a party send out the majority of our messages to get in touch with our party," she said. "It's a real effective way that locally we have been able to build up information and interest."

According to a press release by ElectionMall Technologies the internet is an "effective alternative" to television campaigning.

"Internet campaign commercials enable candidates and political organizations to run campaign ads 24 hours a day on their own Web sites at a more affordable cost than television ads," according to the press release.

"It is especially important with younger voters because they are really a lot more technologically oriented."

Kathryn Focke
RILEY COUNTY DEMOCRATIC CHAIR

The Internet is also used as a major tool for fundraising and getting the message out, Focke said.

"It is especially important with younger voters because they are really a lot more technologically oriented," she said.

Riley County Republican Chair Charles Hostettler said he doesn't think the Internet will affect local or national races.

"I still think television influences people more than anything," he said.

However, Hostettler said the Internet may have more of an effect in the future.

"Obiviously the Internet is becoming more and more used and more and more important," he said.

On election night, the Internet will post the Electoral College results, Focke said.

While many people want to have the most up to date information, there may be a problem with being too wired, Focke said.

"They are not supposed to do any projections until the polls are closed," she said. "Then throughout the country, depending on the time frame and what time zone they are in, they will be able to see the results of the different electoral votes."

TO THE POINT

Tight Kansas races require informed votes

For those of you who haven't noticed, today is election day.

Guess what that means?

That's right, you need to get out and vote.

Despite the fact we live in Kansas and neither presidential candidate really cares if we vote, it really is still important.

There are several races on the ballot that are closely contested and deserve everyone's attention.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

In the 2nd District U.S. House of Representatives race, Democrat challenger Nancy Boyda is preparing for a possible close election against incumbent Republican Jim Ryun.

Locally, both races for the State House of Representatives, the State Senate and County Commissioner, Attorney and Treasurer races are closely contested.

Apathy is your enemy.

There are 26 polling places in the Manhattan area, including Leonardville, Ogden and Riley, Kan. You can call the Riley County Clerk Elections office at 537-6300 to find out at which polling place you should fill out a ballot.

Polls will be open from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m.

The only vote that doesn't count – aside from the votes of elderly people in Florida – is one that isn't cast.

TUESDAY'S OPINIONS

LOGAN ADAMS

Logan Adams will provide a fresh analysis of today's election.

CHAZ STEIMEL

Chaz Steimel has advice for the winner of today's election on what to do to save Iraq.

Seize the day

Despite frustrations with system, voting is worth the effort

CHRISTOPHER HARROP

We, as a nation, have had four years to prepare for this day.

After all the chaotic mishaps and legal wrangling of the 2000 election, we had a golden opportunity to fix our election system and focus our attention on issues most pertinent to the security and prosperity of all Americans and the nation as a whole.

Today is our last chance to prevent another stolen election.

In 2000, the election was supposedly stolen by the courts and partisan lawyers. Today, the election is in jeopardy because of our own ignorance.

We learned nothing from the voting debacle in Florida. A large percent of voting precincts have switched to electronic voting, and hand recounts are quickly becoming a thing of the past. In some cases, hard copies of voting records from electronic polls will not even be generated.

If we are placed in a situation where a recount is necessary, is it better to succumb to a human error that can be corrected via hand recounts or the mistake of an electronic poll with no print record?

Forgive me if choosing the former over the latter seems old-fashioned. Sometimes newer isn't always better.

And what does it say about this election when John Kerry's plan for postwar Iraq gets less coverage than the reproductive methods of his running mate's wife?

That's right. Yesterday, the day before the election, Suz Redfearn of MSN's Slate.com issued an exposé in which she asked why "no one has pushed" Elizabeth Edwards to definitely say whether she used donor eggs to conceive daughter Emma Claire, 6, and son Jack, 4.

I hesitate to mention the story myself. It has no bearing on how any voter should evaluate the presidential election, nor should it be within the realm of public discourse. Unfortunately, these types of stories have become the rule, rather than the exception, in the coverage of the presidential campaigns.

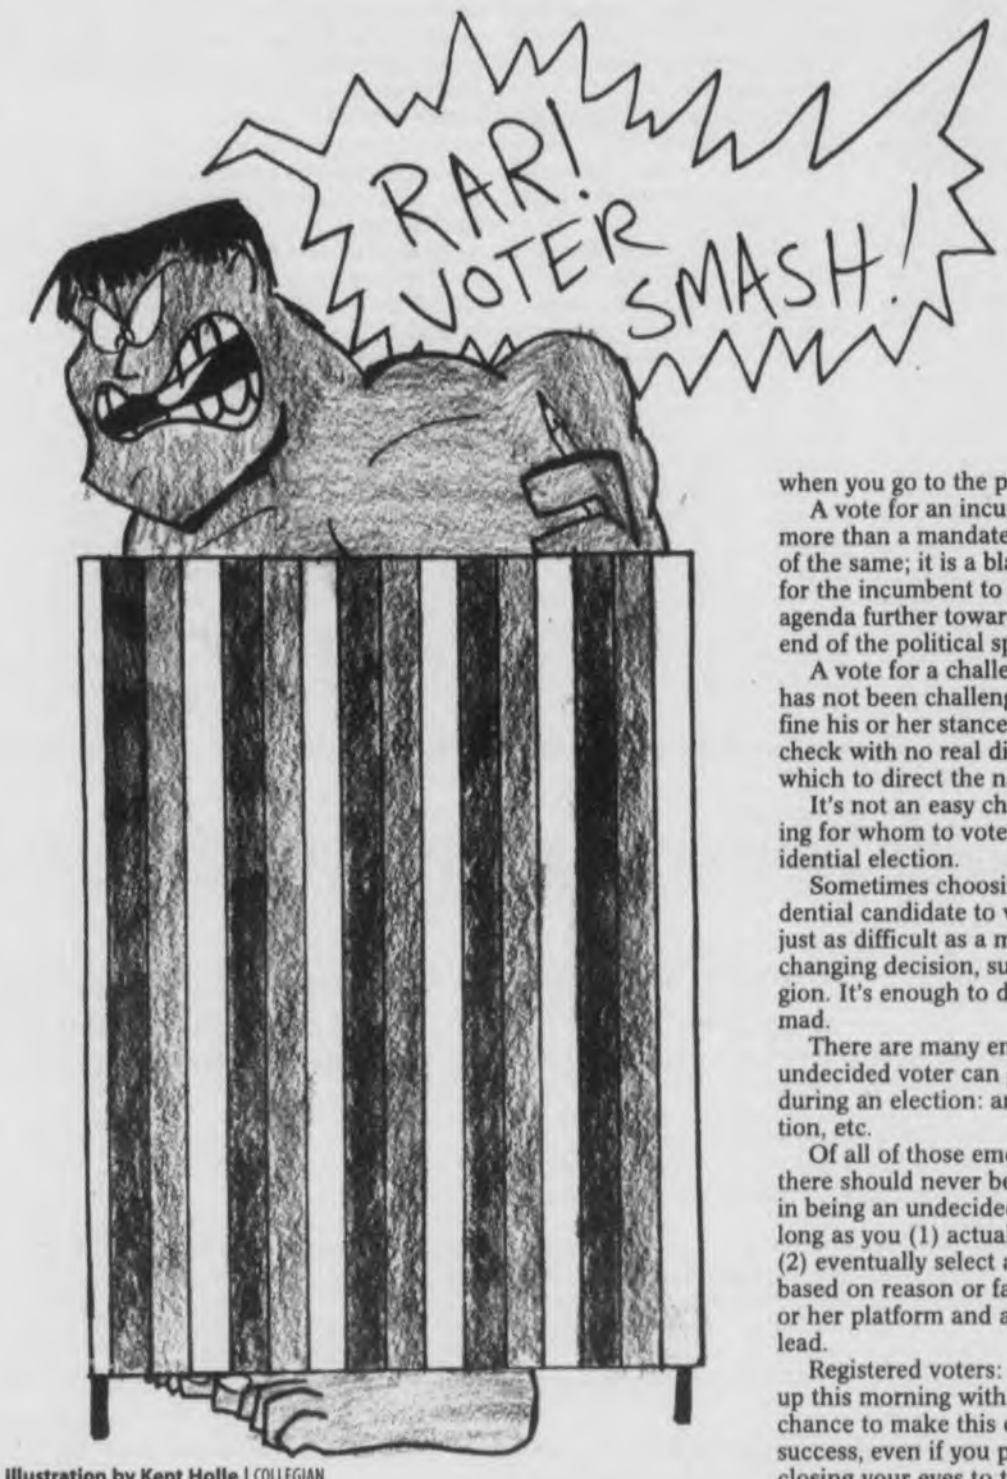

Illustration by Kent Holle | COLLEGIAN

While it is worthwhile for the general public to rely on the media to accurately report the results of the election, relying on the media to set the agenda for the nation will lead us to ruin, just as if we relied on any single special interest.

A few things to remember when you go to the polls:

A vote for an incumbent is more than a mandate for more of the same; it is a blank check for the incumbent to push the agenda further toward his or her end of the political spectrum.

A vote for a challenger who has not been challenged to define his or her stances is a blank check with no real direction in which to direct the nation.

It's not an easy choice, deciding for whom to vote in the presidential election.

Sometimes choosing a presidential candidate to vote for is just as difficult as a major, life-changing decision, such as religion. It's enough to drive a voter mad.

There are many emotions an undecided voter can go through during an election: anger, elation, etc.

Of all of those emotions, there should never be any shame in being an undecided voter, so long as you (1) actually vote and (2) eventually select a candidate based on reason or faith in his or her platform and ability to lead.

Registered voters: you woke up this morning with one last chance to make this election a success, even if you plan on closing your eyes to the realities of our electoral system until 2008.

Carpe diem.

Christopher is a senior in history and political science. Please send comments to opinion@spub.ksu.edu.

Campus needs to enact anti-PDA rules

SHANNA HAJEK

Every other afternoon, I am greeted outside my class by a couple so enamoured of each other, they're practically conceiving their first born out on the sidewalk.

You can't help but see them because they are so very much in love that they do not realize they are blocking the way to and from the building. Thus you must walk around them and therefore acknowledge their existence.

I suppose a less cynical person would sigh and think to themselves, "Ah, young love."

I, on the other hand, am moved to scream something the likes of "Get a room!" or "Go slobber on each other somewhere that's not in my way."

I know what you're thinking: I'm jealous. This is so far from the case that it makes me laugh.

I am married. If I wanted to go out and horrify other people with the physical acting out of my affections, I could. So you can go ahead and stop thinking that right now.

Granted, some people don't like public displays of affection because they're jealous. I won't deny that.

I just happen to think it's disgusting.

I long for the days of high school. (Well, only this aspect. High school was hell most of the time, as most of you can attest to.)

In high school, PDA was forbidden. No kissing, no sitting on each other's laps in the library. In fact, I don't think people were even allowed to hold hands. You could walk to class together, but that was about it.

At school dances, the rules went a little bit lax. Our educators weren't heartless. They didn't go around intoning "Alright you guys, break it up. I want to see some space between the two of you."

On the whole, this banning of public displays of affection worked out pretty well. And it got me thinking: what if we ("we" being all those who feel like retching every time we encounter said individuals) were to set up a system of rules for those who get a little too frisky in public?

Why, it was almost too fun to think about! But I managed.

Rule #1 - PDA's may not be performed on or near a sidewalk, or in any other way that hinders the activities of fellow students.

Rule #2 - Hand holding is acceptable, and will be permitted, provided that the parties involved do not take up too much space on the sidewalk and do not stroll to class, mooning over each other.

Rule #3 - PDA's that are deemed more offensive than hand holding must be performed behind some obstruction. Also, the parties involved must obtain a license from the DPLE (Division of PDA Law Enforcement: a new branch of Parking Services).

Rule #4 - Consequently, citations will be given out to perpetrators of PDA's and the amount of the fine will be in accordance with the severity of the crime.

Rule #5 - If said perpetrators fail to pay the fine within seven working days, a lip-lock will be placed on their face until said fine has been paid.

Completely realistic, right? I thought you'd agree with me. In fact, I implore President Wefald to carefully consider this idea. Something has to be done about this. And soon.

Let's get ready for a recount!

One more day! One more day! One more day!

I just saw a dead opossum by Anderson Hall. That's disgusting.

There are those out there who would say that, without an encyclopedic knowledge of the issues and the candidates' stand on them, that voting is ill advised. I beg to differ. I think even if you are so uninformed that you are just vaguely aware that you don't like how things are going now, that's enough to realize changing the person in charge is a way to change the way things are going. Get out and vote Nov. 2.

ELECTIONS 2004

Numerous elections feature unopposed candidates

By Patrice R. Holderbach
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One of the characteristics of democracy is choice, but with the exception of writing in a candidate, a few races on this year's Riley County election ballot might suggest otherwise.

At the county and municipal level, two races have only one candidate listed on the ballot, and both are Republican.

Rich Vargo, Manhattan, is running for county clerk, and M. Charlotte Shawver of Riley, Kan., is running for register of deeds.

When the register of deeds position was created in the 1800s, the founders should have considered whether it should be an elected or appointed position, Shawver said, because it is more of a full-time profession than other part-time public service commitments.

For this reason, Shawver said she is not too concerned about a lack of opposition in this election.

"I guess my thought is that I have 32 years of experience to give the county. There's not that many other people that qualified," Shawver said. "That sounds like I have a pretty big ego. But 32 years to offer the citizens? What better person can there be?"

A lack of opposition in this race may not be as critical compared to uncontested positions in county commissions, the legislature and U.S. Congress – the "big ones," said John Fliter, associate professor of political science and vice chair of the Riley County Democratic Party.

Take, for example, Kathy Martin, Republican from Clay Center, Kan., who is the only candidate running for the 6th District of the Kansas State Board of Education.

"That was something I'm really disappointed in, that we don't have a strong Democrat challenging her, but that wasn't just the Riley County Democratic Party," Fliter said. "There are other organizations that could have stepped up and fielded a candidate."

Kathryn Focke, chairwoman of the Riley County Democratic Party, said the party works months or years in advance to develop potential candidates.

"The ideal situation would be to recruit candidates, have an ongoing recruitment – years in advance of running for office – and to encourage the Democrats who are really interested in public service to run for some of the lower boards, get involved with the community and build a base of support up while developing their leadership," Focke said.

Candidate recruiters must realistically approach this task.

"Sometimes the person that's in that position is doing a good job, so we focus more on the winnable ones, or the ones we can handle," Focke said.

Joseph Aistrup, head of the political science department, said these single-candidate races are not unusual for Kansas. Regardless, that reality does not support the ideals of democracy, he said.

"It's awfully hard to have democracy without choice," Aistrup said. "It's very important that the parties field candidates so that people have a choice. If candidates go uncontested, it creates a situation where the larger idea of democracy is not facilitated."

The issue applies to local, state and national contests. For example, Aistrup said, races for the U.S. Senate rarely offer a realistic opportunity for anyone to compete against Sam Brownback and Pat Roberts, both of whom have been in office since 1996.

"Right now in the State of Kansas, it's pretty rare when one of these Republican senators faces a strong Democratic challenger," he said.

Brownback does have challengers – Libertarian candidate Steven Rosile of Wichita, Reform candidate George Cook of Mission, Kan., and Democratic candidate Lee Jones of Lenexa, Kan.

Nonetheless, the last time Kansas had a "real" senatorial race was when Republican Bob Dole's seat was open in 1996, Aistrup said. Democrat Jill Docking ran against Brownback.

"(Docking) did about as well as any Democrat could do, but she lost," Aistrup said. "At the United States senatorial level, it's fairly rare when the Democrats mount a strong challenge against the Republican incumbents."

Typically, the Democratic Party tries to pick out a few key seats to beat, concentrating their resources on a small number of seats, Aistrup said.

"A state like Kansas, in the foreseeable future, will probably not see the Democratic National Committee expend time and energy," he said. "No candidate wants to expend their own energy or get saddled with a loss."

From his perspective, Aistrup said he understands why non-Republicans would be reluctant to challenge an incumbent. "I'll tell you what, there's no way I would waste my time going up against a Republican senator in this state, no way I'd recommend it to anybody," Aistrup said. "It might be good for democracy, but on a professional level, I'm not going to recommend suicide to anybody."

At least one non-Republican congressional candidate refuses to take such advice. Dennis Hawver, a Libertarian from Ozawkie, Kan., has a bid against Republican incumbent Jim Ryun to represent the 2nd District in the U.S. House of Representatives.

Hawver, vice chair of the Kansas Libertarian Party, said a lack of media attention on third-party candidates increases the difficulty to recruit challengers.

He spoke of unfavorable photo manipulation and an instance where he was participating in a debate and asked to leave by organizers and police.

"The media refuses to cover us, and when they do cover us, they cover us in a discriminatory, shaded manner," he said. "That's just the kind of thing third-party candidates face. Not just Libertarians. And not just in the State of Kansas. It's a nationwide media bias against third-party candidates. It's pretty dispiriting."

Flu vaccines are now available at Lafene Health Center.

Only people who are at high risk can get the vaccine, Jay Reppert, Lafene health director, said.

"Because of the flu vaccine shortage, the Federal Center for Disease Control has directed that only people who fall in the high risk categories should get the vaccine this year," he said. "We have an obligation to take care of the people who really need it."

Reppert said Lafene has an adequate vaccine supply for students in the high-risk category.

The reason high-risk people are given priority is because the consequences they face are more severe than others, Reppert said.

"For most of the rest of us, it is just an inconvenience to have the flu," Reppert said. "These people can die from the flu."

Reppert said 20,000 to 30,000 people die from the flu every year, and most of them fall in the high risk category.

There is a questionnaire to determine a student's risk, Reppert said.

Carrol Kennedy, director of health promotions at Lafene, said students not getting the vaccine should take steps to avoid getting influenza. Such steps include cleaning hands often, covering mouth and nose when coughing or sneezing and avoiding touching eyes, nose and mouth.

"I would encourage people who aren't vaccinated to take the precautions to not get sick," she said.

Reppert said there will be a vaccine available later in November that healthy people can get.

He said the best time to get vaccinated is in October and November, but it isn't too late until a person has the flu.

"There is no influenza in the area," Reppert said. "When it comes, it'll be public knowledge."

Navy SEAL testifies in prison abuse case

By Seth Hettena
ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN DIEGO, Calif. – The CIA interrogated and roughed up Iraqi prisoners in a "romper room" where a handcuffed and hooded terror suspect was kicked, slapped and punched shortly before he died last year at the Abu Ghraib prison, a Navy SEAL testified Monday.

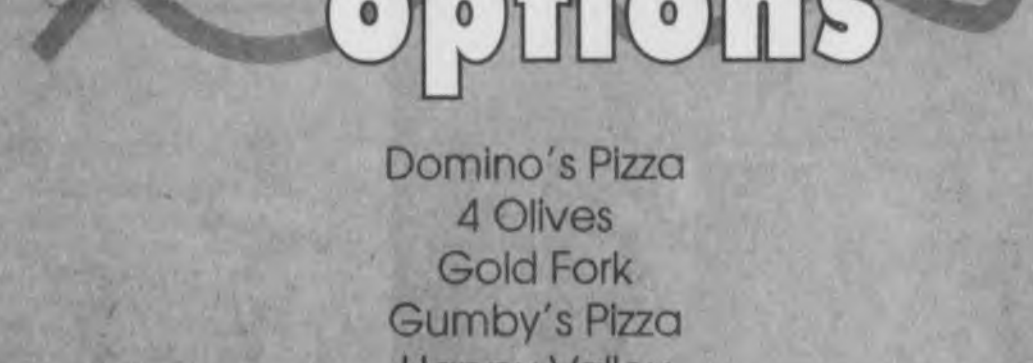
Blood was visible on the hood worn by the prisoner, Manadel al-Jamadi, as he was led into the interrogation room at Baghdad International Airport in November 2003, the Navy commando said at a military pretrial hearing for another SEAL accused of abusing Iraqi prisoners.

Testifying under a grant of immunity, the witness, identified only by his rank as a hospital corpsman, said he kicked al-Jamadi several times, slapped him in the back of the head and punched him. Five or six other CIA personnel in the room laid their hands on the prisoner, he said, but he did not provide details.

Sometime later, Al-Jamadi was found dead in a shower room less than an hour after two CIA personnel brought him into Abu Ghraib as a so-called "ghost detainee," according to Army Maj. Gen. George R. Fay's report on the notorious prison. Such detainees were not listed in the normal roster of military prisoners.

Fay's report said al-Jamadi died of a blot clot in the head likely due to injuries suffered after being detained. The military pathologist's report listed the cause of death as blunt force trauma complicated by hampered breathing.

A CIA spokeswoman declined to comment on the hearing, but noted that the agency is conducting its own investigation into the CIA's involvement in prisoner detentions and interrogations in Iraq.



The testimony about the CIA's role came during a hearing for an aviation boatswain's mate who is accused of punching al-Jamadi and posing in humiliating photos with the prisoner. The boatswain's mate, a 14-year Navy veteran, allegedly twisted other prisoners' testicles and struck a prisoner in the buttocks with a wooden board.

An Article 32 hearing, the military equivalent of a civilian grand jury, was held to determine whether the boatswain's mate should be court-martialed.

A two-party race: Super Tuesday with a twist

ANTHONY MENDOZA

Today is the most important day for Americans.

You have the right to exercise your freedoms.

You can make your pick; no, not for John Kerry or George W. Bush, but Shaquille O'Neal or Kobe Bryant.

Yes, today is not only the day to vote, but also the start of the longest, most over-hyped NBA season since last year featured the rookie campaigns of Lebron James and Carmello Anthony.

Kobe versus Shaq.

A representative of the people (O'Neal) is now in the Eastern Conference, where centers are non-existent. One question voters should be concerned about is if O'Neal can build a non-volatile relationship with his running mate, Dwyane Wade.

In his earlier years, the candidate could not handle sharing the spotlight with Anfernee "Penny" Hardaway. That created a fallout with the Orlando Magic organization, and he ultimately became a free agent and was snapped up by the Los Angeles Lakers.

Up until last year, O'Neal took and dished out the mud-slinging with Bryant, all the while he was about 50 pounds overweight and constantly injured.

With the departure of Coach Phil Jackson and the city of Los Angeles becoming Kobe's, O'Neal's jealousy came to a boiling point, and he did what any other good politician would do when things didn't go his way – he dropped out of the race.

Bryant, the candidate from the Independent Party (because we have no idea of what he stands for), has gained complete power of the Lakers. The dictator forced the coach and O'Neal out of office in Los Angeles and turned his city from perennial contenders, to this year's pretender.

With Lamar Odom – whose earlier stint in Los Angeles produced more substance abuse suspensions for marijuana than playoff appearances with the Clippers – as his second in command, Bryant's dictatorship will reign supreme over the purple and gold.

Once the people's choice, Bryant tarnished his political career last summer with sexual assault allegations. He furthered his tarnished image when he leaked to Colorado investigators that former teammate O'Neal had many affairs with women but paid them off to keep quiet.

What that had anything to do with his allegations, no one knows, but it hurt his public image and perception more than a blue-stained dress did about five years ago.

Bryant will definitely need

Non-scholarship walk-on Mark Frederick endures

BEYOND THE SPORT

This is the fourth installment in a five-part series profiling the challenges involved in being a successful student-athlete at K-State.

Next week: Part Five — A look at the responsibility coaches and administrators have in student-athletes' academic and athletic achievement.

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Imagine working at a full-time job almost every week of the year and never receiving a check for the work you did.

All across the nation, a certain sector of student-athletes pour their hearts, bodies and souls into schoolwork and the sport in which they compete, and all they get in return is the satisfaction of knowing they are a Division-I athlete.

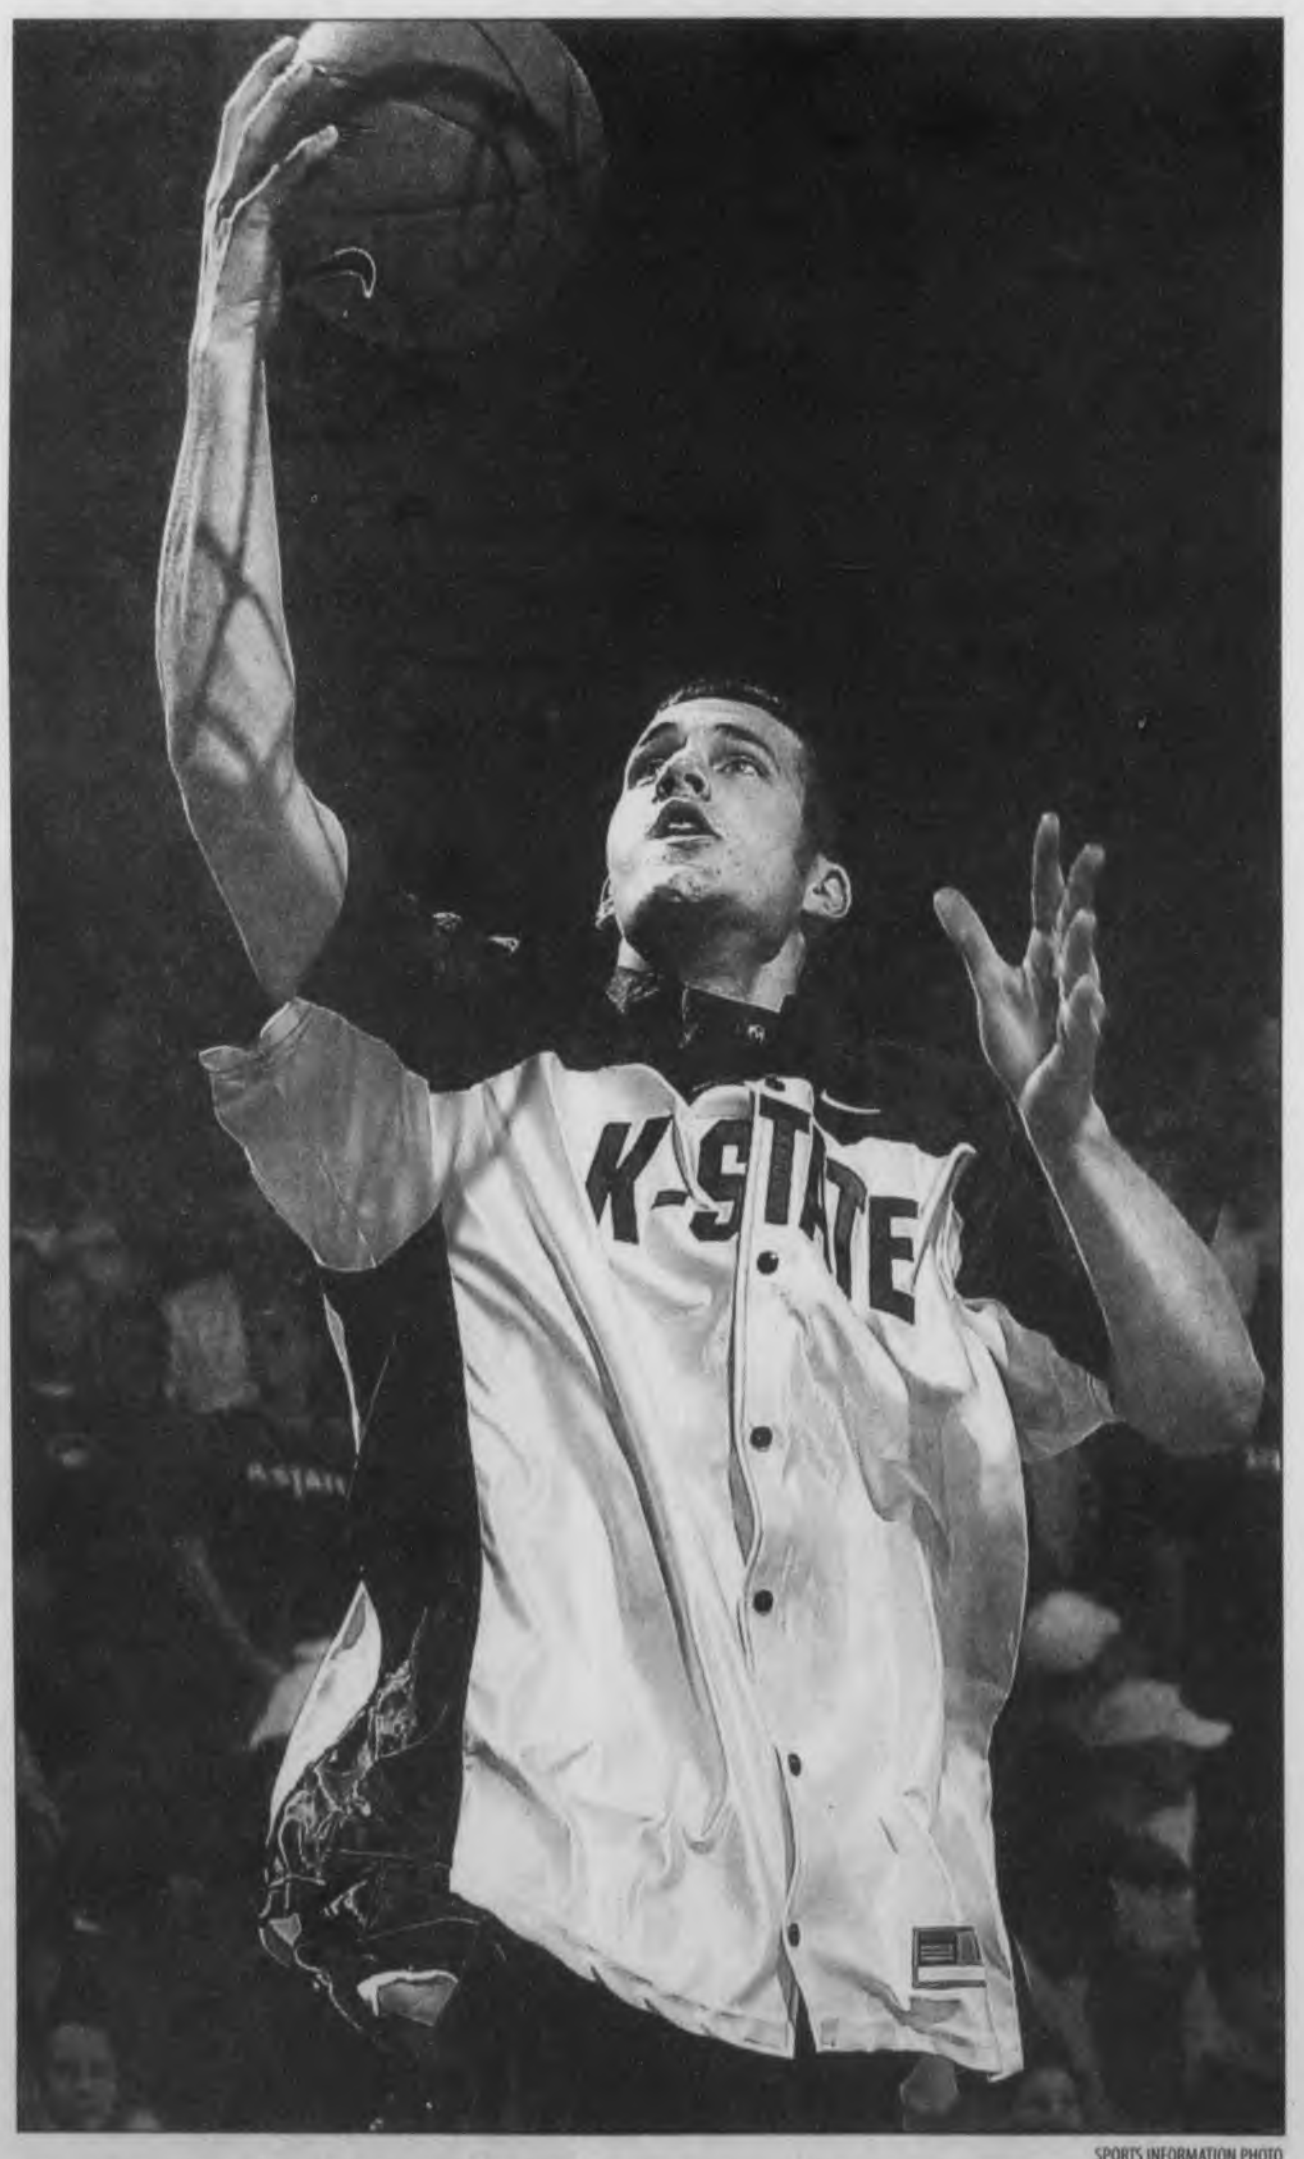
Frederick

Welcome to the world of non-scholarship student-athlete and K-State senior Mark Frederick, a social science major and a forward on Coach Jim Wooldridge's basketball team.

He goes to school, which he has to pay for on his own. He practices week in and week out, just like all the scholarship players. However, since he is not on scholarship, he does not get the free room and board and the free meals like the athletes who are on scholarship.

Frederick said he doesn't feel any different just because he doesn't receive a check from the university.

"The only thing is you don't get tuition paid for, and you don't get to eat at the training table," Frederick said. "I do everything else the same as every other athlete. It doesn't really make a difference to me whether I'm on scholarship or not."



A native of Lawrence, Frederick walked on to Wooldridge's squad in 2003 after making a visit to K-State to see what the program had to offer.

Frederick said after the visit, his decision was an easy one to make.

"I knew K-State needed some help," Frederick said. "I knew they didn't have that many guys on their roster, so I called the coaches up and told them that I'd love to help them. I came up here, talked to the coaches and scrimmaged with the players, and Coach Wooldridge asked me if I would like to join the team."

In his first season at K-State, Frederick played in just five games, averaging 1.4 minutes a showing. He averaged 1.2

WGLF | Cats seven shots off lead in South Carolina

The K-State women's golf team is in ninth place — but just seven shots out of the lead — after round one of the Edwin Watts/Palmetto Intercollegiate in Kiawah Island, S.C. on Monday.

Quick

The Wildcats logged a first round team score of 305, while tournament co-leaders Campbell and Louisville both shot a 298.

Freshman Kali Quick had the best round for the Wildcats, shooting a 74. Quick is currently tied for ninth.

Senior Sarah Heffel had the next-best round for K-State, as she is tied for 27th with a score of 76.

The Wildcats continue play in South Carolina today.

CFB | Game time set for Colorado competition

For the second straight year, the K-State/Colorado football game will not be televised.

Kickoff for the Nov. 13 game in Boulder, Colo. is scheduled for 1:30 p.m. (CST), the K-State Department of Athletics learned on Monday.

The Mid America Sports Network will broadcast the game over its 29-station radio network.

CFB | Pinkel says Nash will play against Wildcats

Junior Missouri tailback Damien Nash will be back on the field Saturday when the Tigers take on K-State in Columbia, Mo.

During Monday's Big 12 Coaches Teleconference, Missouri Coach Gary Pinkel said Nash would play after sitting out last week's game against Nebraska for disciplinary reasons.

"He'll play," Pinkel said. "How much, we'll make that decision Thursday."

Nash was suspended indefinitely after making comments to the media questioning Missouri's playcalling following the team's loss to Oklahoma State on Oct. 23.

Pinkel said he would not reveal specifics regarding Nash's suspension.

"No one knows the details," Pinkel said. "That's between Damien and myself."

Nash is the Tigers' leading rusher this season, compiling 610 yards and seven touchdowns on 128 carries.

CFB | Auburn jumps up in BCS after Miami loss

Auburn needs three victories and a little help to play for a national title.

The Tigers moved into third place in the Bowl Championship Series standings Monday, while Southern California and Oklahoma held firmly to the top two spots.

The Tigers had been in fourth place in the first two BCS standings, but they took advantage of Miami's upset loss to North Carolina on Saturday to creep closer to the front-runners. The Hurricanes fell to No. 10.

K-State rowers finish fourth in women's open 8 at Iowa

By Stacy Ryan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The top boat for the women's rowing team finished fourth on Sunday in the Women's Open Eight race at the Head of the Iowa, and the performance has Coach Patrick Sweeney pleased.

"They rowed it technically and physically really strong. They competed very well," Sweeney said.

Sweeney said late last week the team could not get on the water because of class conflicts and weather reasons, so the Wildcats had four days without rowing before the race. He said even with four days out of the boat, they came together well.

K-State finished fourth behind two University of Minnesota boats and Iowa. The Wildcats were 15 seconds off the first-place Minnesota boat.

Sophomore Danielle Scott said she felt the team accomplished their goals for the race.

"We applied what we have been practicing, our length and rhythm, into the race and it went smoothly," Scott said.

For the next two weeks, the Wildcats will be focusing on practicing for the sprint race versus Kansas in the Sunflower Showdown. The race is half as long as the Head of the Iowa, so the women have to adjust and prepare differently for the shorter race.

Senior Linzi Hauldren said strategy changes with the shorter race.

"On the distance race we have to get into a rhythm and stay there for 15 minutes. On the sprint races there is a lot more strategy because you have to keep up the power and push through. You don't have as much time to get everything together," Hauldren said.

Sweeney said the main focus for the next race is turning the team's strength, endurance and technique into speed. He said for the shorter race it is important to do everything at a faster pace.

Hauldren said the race against Iowa will help the team prepare for the competition against KU.

"We beat KU in this race, which is what we wanted. We got to see what we are capable of and look at what improvements we need to make before the next race," Hauldren said.

"On Your Shore"

Album review by Matt Groneman

Charlotte Martin is a talented young piano player and singer-songwriter who shows great potential on her first album, "On Your Shore."

Though she shows promise, the album is greatly limited by its clustered production.

Martin's sound is closer to Tori Amos than Vanessa Carlton, but she doesn't have Amos' sense of individuality yet. This may be a relief to some listeners who find Amos to be overly eccentric at times.

I say "yet" because this is Martin's first album, and it sounds like co-producer and engineer Ken Andrews may have been sent by RCA to make sure the album was radio-friendly. The other co-producer is Martin herself.

This move could have been made to ensure Martin would not become goth-infected as the Cure, one of her major influences. Doing so would alienate her from the teenage girl audience Martin seems to be wrongly marketed toward.

The production isn't totally awful, but it does sound claustrophobic. The heavy orchestrations and programmable drums overwhelm the soundscape and make Martin's vocals sound restrained.

The title track, "On Your Shore," is a beautifully tender pop song for the first half, but as the producer attempts to create tension by overlaying even more orchestral music and adding in fake drums and loops of vocals, the track falls flat on its face.

The second song on the album, "Limits of Your Love," starts off with a driving 80s Europop drum beat and brings in layers of background vocals louder than Martin's before the lead vocal kicks in. Those who want to hear the lyrics or melody have to dig through two layers of rhythm to get there.

The songwriting is quite crafty and melds soaring vocals, beautifully-pained melodies and lush arrangements into great songs. Martin's songwriting should continue to mature on future releases.

Also, her vocals are consistently complex for a first album. "Sweet Chariot," a powerfully performed song about falling in love with a Christian who casts her away for being sinful, begins with the curiously bittersweet line, "Ode to joy, my lover boy's speaking in tongues."

Of the 13 songs on her first full-length record, 12 were written by Martin herself. The 13th song, a haunting cover of the Rolling Stones' "Wild Horses," is included as a bonus track.

This is a great introduction to an artist that will likely cast spells of melodicism over audiences for years to come.

If you want to get to know her, pick up a copy and if you want to be surprised by a work of true beauty wait for an album where she's given more freedom to make the album she deserves.

Harmony in the hair

Lyrical style conveys message about locks

Once upon a time my hair took on pseudo-celebrity status. Once upon a time it was a stylin' apparatus.

As I've said before, there's a difference between style and fashion. When your hair says something about you – well, that's when you cash in.

My hair used to be long and curly. Some may have thought that made me surly.

Others said I looked like Ron Jeremy. That wasn't cool; I didn't want people scared of me.

The real truth is I'm a wild-and-crazy guy. I want my look to light up the lazy eye.

I wanted my look to be festive and fun. Looks of sorrow, I was given none.

I believe in the power of being positive, and I'm all about giving the meek a cause to live.

My look often did just what I desired; it gave the sparkle in the eye to which I aspired.

Sometimes, though, it's just time for a change, so I took out some shears and just sliced off the mange.

I had a handle bar moustache; I had to chop that, too. It had more curl than the laces in my shoe.

I cut it for a friend on his day of matrimony. He thought I'd look like Billy Idol singin' "Mony, Mony."

And the moustache, man, it was all Tom Selleck. He wanted a modern usher, not some 70s relic.

Now my look's a little more refined, gaunt and handsome just like Ralph Fiennes.

But even if I'm starting to resemble Clark Gable, I still can bust out a column that could use a turntable.

I still got the Hawaiian shirt; I still bring the party. I'm still crazy like a pirate – har har, me hearties!

I'm still sailin' the scene just like Sir Francis Bacon. Big goofy smile and a rump that's shakin'.

So I encourage you to have fun with your hair. Make it more crazy than a segment on "Double Dare."

When it comes to me, I don't use product. I'm au naturale – it costs less than one buck.

But that doens't mean it won't work for you, so spruse up your locks with a glob of that goo.

I'm not only not hatin' on any pomades, but also not stuff that makes your hair many shades.

Blue, pink and green or even with bleaches. Why not make your hair be the color of peaches?

Go with polka dots, checkers or stripes. Don't be scared of people goin' "cripes!"

Only thing to remember when you're rockin' the doo, is to try something new but something that's still you.

Rhythms bounce on Mos Def's epic album

"The New Danger"

Album review by Jessica Grant

With his newest release, "The New Danger" Mos Def, a reigning guru of hip-hop, manages to blend jazz, 12-bar blues, rap, R&B, hard rock and funk into an epic 18-track album.

After releasing "Black on Both Sides," which went gold in 1999, Mos Def spent time focusing on an acting career, musical collaborations with various artists and his rock side project, Black Jack Johnson, which features members of Living Colour, Parliament Funkadelic and Dr. Know of the Bad Brains.

Now Mos Def is back with perhaps his most ambitious project to date.

"The New Danger" is a massive album that clocks in at almost one hour and fifteen minutes.

The project is split between rapping and vocal endeavors, and there are several tracks that were probably created while working with Black Jack Johnson.

It's probably safe to argue that Mos Def was trying to create an epic album that distorts traditional boundaries of music, while sticking to the core ideals of hip-hop.

"Blue Black Jack" is a chugging blues song here to remind us that rock 'n' roll owes itself to the genre of blues. The song has an almost honky-tonk feel completed by the guitar work of Shuggie Otis.

"Ghetto Rock" begins with a clapped rhythm that flows into a throbbing song complete with jagged guitar. The texture of the layered vocals is reminiscent of playground chants.

While Mos Def works nobly to create an album that is extremely musically diverse, this doesn't always work in his favor.

The album opens with "Boogie Man Song," a lounge-type song that vocally pays homage to Marvin Gaye. The lyrics seem somewhat disappointing and coming from one of contemporary America's greatest poets.

"Freaky Black Greetings" begins with a promisingly funky bass line, but the beauty of the song is lost in the heavy metal riffs and free form feel. The tune feels like the leftover from an unfinished impromptu studio jam session.

Courtesy art

This is not to say that the whole album misses its mark, but such a long project is bound to have several misses.

Kanye West produced "Sunshine," which is one of the strongest pieces on the album. The song features some of Kanye's best beats, and the lyrical content is more in line from what listeners have come to expect from Mos Def.

"The Panties" is a great R&B tune that is silky enough to remind the listener of Mos Def's genius.

"The Rape Over" also was produced by West and it is the shortest piece on the album. The song is a scathing attack on the corporate control that has come with the growing commercialism of rap.

While "The New Danger" lacks the tight focus of "Black on Both Sides," it is still an extremely solid album that re-establishes Mos Def as a perennial king of hip-hop.

'Da Vinci Code' author donates $2.2 million

Novelist Dan Brown, author of the multimillion-selling "The Da Vinci Code," is sharing some of his wealth with his old high school: Phillips Exeter Academy.

The school announced Monday that Brown and his siblings, Valerie and Gregory, had made a $2.2 million donation in honor of their father, Richard Brown, who taught mathematics at the academy for 35 years. The gift will help provide students with computers and other high-tech equipment.

Dan Brown, who still lives in Exeter, graduated from the academy in 1982 and later taught English there.

FREDERICK | Walk-on player driven by love of game

points per game while shooting 3-4 from the field.

Wooldridge said Frederick's contribution to the team is not based on minutes played and points scored.

"Practice is a huge part of his contribution," Wooldridge said. "He hasn't played very much in game situations. Most of his contributions have been through practices and what he delivers in practice – his competitive nature and spirit and helping other players get better, while he gets better."

Schyler Thomas, a junior point guard for the Wildcats, was once in the same position as Frederick. When Thomas came to K-State in 2002, he was a walk-on and did not receive a scholarship.

At the time he came to K-State, Thomas was promised a scholarship after two years. He is now on full scholarship after experiencing the hardships a walk-on must go through.

Thomas said there are some big differences between the life of a non-scholarship and a scholarship athlete.

"There's a lot that you don't have to worry about that you do have to worry about when you aren't a scholarship player," Thomas said. "Also, it's not easy being a non-scholarship player, because sometimes you don't get the same respect as a scholarship athlete will get."

More important to Frederick than being on scholarship is his goal of one day becoming a college basketball coach.

He has coaching in his blood.

Frederick's brother, Brad, is an assistant coach at Vanderbilt, while his father, Bob, was at one time an assistant coach at the University of Kansas. Mark's dad also served as the Jayhawks' athletic director from 1987-2001.

Frederick said the experience he is gaining as a player at K-State is invaluable.

"I've always been interested in coaching," he said. "I'm learning under Coach Wooldridge. To have on your résumé that experience at the Division-1 level is great. It's better to get experience from someone like Coach Wooldridge."

Wooldridge said he has been delighted to have Frederick as a part of the Wildcat basketball team.

"You don't want someone out there who doesn't love basketball," Wooldridge said. "Mark has got a passion for the game. I think he is committed totally and 100 percent to the program. We've been really fortunate to have some outstanding people that love the game of basketball and love Kansas State basketball, and Mark, I think, does."

Not being on scholarship can become stressful when the days of practicing, working, studying and going to school seem to drag, Thomas said.

Thomas added keeping a good attitude helps to get through tough times, and he will always be there for Frederick.

"A lot of times things aren't going to go your way, and the only thing that you can do is stay positive," Thomas said. "As soon as you get negative, then practice, your school work, everything will go down a level. I'll be a friend to him, and I'll always be positive."

As another season approaches for K-State, Frederick's days as a collegiate basketball player are winding down. When this season is over, he will have given two years to the Wildcat basketball program, all at his own expense with little glory.

Frederick said he doesn't care about getting the attention or the glamour, he just wants to play basketball.

"I love basketball," he said. "I've always loved basketball. I'd be a fool not to take advantage of this opportunity."

Rehnquist undergoing further treatment

Chief justice unlikely to return to the bench in near future

By Gina Holland
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist revealed Monday that he is undergoing chemotherapy and radiation treatment for thyroid cancer, signs he has a grave form of the disease and probably will not return to the bench soon.

The election-eve disclosure by the 80-year-old justice underscores the near certainty that the next president will make at least one appointment to the Supreme Court and probably more.

Rehnquist had planned to join his colleagues when they returned to hear arguments Monday after a two-week break. Instead, he issued a statement from home about the treatment he's receiving. It said he plans to work from home and made no mention of leaving the court.

The chief justice did not disclose what type of thyroid cancer he has, how far it has progressed or the prognosis.

Dr. Ann M. Gillenwater of the University of Texas M.D. Anderson Cancer Center in Houston said the combination of chemotherapy and radiation is the usual treatment for anaplastic thyroid cancer, a fast-growing form that can kill quickly.

About 80 percent of people with that type of cancer die within a year, even with treatment, according to the Merck Manual of Diagnosis and Therapy.

"Unfortunately, it rarely responds very well, and this is just a holding action for most patients," said Dr. Herman Kattlove of the American Cancer Society.

Rehnquist's statement was a more somber announcement than the one a week ago, when he first made public that he had been hospitalized for cancer treatment but said he planned to be back at work in a week.

"According to my doctors, my plan to return to the office today was too optimistic," said Rehnquist, who spent a week in the hospital. "While at home, I am working on court matters, including opinions for cases already argued. I am, and will, continue to be in close contact with my colleagues, my law clerks and members of the Supreme Court staff."

News of Rehnquist's cancer has energized conservative and liberal groups, which have tried to draw voters' attention to the court's delicate balance on issues like abortion, affirmative action and the death penalty.

The spotlight would have been heightened in the final week of the campaign if Rehnquist had been more forthcoming about his condition, said Dennis Hutchinson, a Supreme Court expert at the University of Chicago Law School.

"He doesn't want to be a factor" in the election, Hutchinson said. "The one thing all members of the court hate is the assumption that they are partisan or sensitive to partisan politics."

Dave Rohde, a political science professor at Michigan State University, said Rehnquist's illness will probably not sway many last-minute undecided votes.

"This is not in the top tier of issues for voters. They're concerned about Iraq and terrorism and the economy and much less about this," he said.

Rehnquist, a Republican, has been the court's conservative leader for a generation. He voted with the other four conservative justices in the 5-4 Bush v. Gore ruling that decided the last presidential election. He has said he would be more likely to retire with a Republican in the White House.

Until now, Rehnquist's most serious health problem has been a bad back that often forces him to stand and stretch during arguments and has limited his tennis playing.

Rehnquist had been hoarse for several weeks before his hospitalization Oct. 22. He had a tracheotomy a day later, in which a tube was inserted in his throat to help him breathe.

Cancer of the thyroid, a gland in the neck that produces hormones to help regulate the body's use of energy, is diagnosed in about 23,600 Americans a year. The most common types are easily treatable.

Dr. Leonard Wartofsky, a thyroid cancer expert at Washington Hospital Center, said patients with anaplastic thyroid cancer often have four to six weeks of daily visits for radiation, and multiple rounds of chemotherapy that can span several months.

18 arrested after SWAT team called in to end Halloween riot

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOULDER, Colo. – SWAT teams battled rioters wearing Halloween costumes Saturday night and early Sunday, arresting 18 people on University Hill.

Boulder spokeswoman Julie Brooks said a permit had been issued for a block party, but officers were dispatched to check out reports of underage drinking.

Police told partygoers to leave and most complied. After more complaints officers returned to the area and issued several summonses for underage drinking.

Some of the crowd then became angry and threw rocks and bottles at police, who withdrew.

SWAT teams from area departments were called in to confront the crowd, which had grown to about 1,500 people.

Officers arrested 18 on charges including inciting a riot, engaging in a riot, criminal mischief, obstruction and arson. One police vehicle and 10 cars were damaged.

Police were unable to say how many of the rioters were University of Colorado students.

BOSTON | Locals hope to celebrate possible Kerry win

Nicole Coleman | COLLEGIAN

John Page, a volunteer from Boston, gives directions to the Kerry campaign headquarters while campaigning for the Kerry campaign Monday afternoon near Quincy Market in Boston.

Abraham Lincoln costume with a sign reading "Another Republican for Kerry."

Kennedy said that while he spends a lot of time posing for pictures with passersby, he makes a strong case against Bush.

"The Republican party that Lincoln served was a very different party," he said. "It was a party that favored equality. The Republican party of today, especially under George Bush, is for anything but equality."

Lincoln once voted against the war with Mexico because it was illegally provoked, Kennedy said, which is a great parallel to current situation with the war in Iraq.

"The reason for going to war was a lie," he said.

Not only does Kennedy entertain shoppers, but he ran through Kerry campaign headquarters.

"It gives the Democrats a kick," he said. "It really gave them a boost."

Chris Fisher is proud of the Red Sox and John Kerry, the local candidate. With the city still energized with the celebration of winning a World Series, Fisher, 38, said he hopes the party will continue when Kerry wins the presidency.

With the race tied, his gut feeling tells him Kerry will prevail.

"It's going to be like last time, but it looks like Kerry is going to lead by a little bit," he said. "I have a feeling he'll squeeze by."

Fisher, a tourist trolley car driver, will vote for Kerry today.

"I like what he says," he said.

Megon Barrow can't vote but would give anything to to vote for Kerry today.

Barrow, a student at Boston's Northeastern University, is a Barbados citizen.

But from her perspective, she's confident Kerry is the best choice.

"Bush has said what he's wanted to do," Barrow, 23, said.

"Kerry brings hope for change, especially with international relations."

But she'll be honest – it's nothing special about Kerry, even though Bostonians think he's God because he's from their city, she said.

"I'll be blunt – it's because he's not Bush. I don't particularly trust him, either," Barrow said.

"He's the hope right now for something better."

KERRY | Preparations for Boston rally under way

believe that we can regain America's respect and influence in the world, and I believe we deserve a president who knows how to fight a more effective war on terror and make America safe," he said.

Kerry will return to Boston today to vote at the Statehouse and then return home to watch election returns.

Preparations for a victory celebration are already underway in Boston's Copley Square.

There's scaffolding with large TV screens, as well as risers for national news media and family and friends.

Risers were already in place after last weekend's celebration of the Red Sox's World Series win, for which several million fans flocked to Boston.

About 30,000 are expected at Kerry's rally with the fire department on hand to close the area off if the crowd gets too large.

"We have a very secure area here. We have tickets for people to get in. We will make the area as safe as possible; we have been working with the city and the Secret Service. But given that Boston just handled 3 million on the streets for the Red Sox, we are confident that it will be a nice, safe evening," said James Meehan, senior Kerry adviser.

The Kerry campaign has promised nationally known entertainers at the rally, which begins at 8 p.m. A schedule will be released later today. Kerry isn't expected to speak until after 11 p.m.

But before the celebrations begin, voters must choose who serves as president for the next four years.

"This is the moment of accountability for America," Kerry said. "All of the hopes and dreams of our country are on the line today. The choice is clear."

WASHINGTON | Politics not an easy sell for vendor

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Stafford Lowry, 77, an operator of a street cart positioned a block away from the White House, prepares merchandise Monday afternoon. Lowry said he has voted in every presidential election that he was eligible for, but doesn't think the president has as much power as most people think.

freak-outs, but people have been very receptive.

Leigh Wedell sat against the side of a Metro train, reading a novel on her way home from work.

Wedell, a consultant for an international business, said Bush's foreign policy won her vote.

The atmosphere in the nation's capital, though, has left her unsure of what results the election will yield.

"The uncertainty this time is definitely different," she said. "But everyone's talking about it."

Despite her preference, Wedell said a Kerry presidency would not be crushing.

"You just have to figure out how to work with a new administration," she said.

Two inconspicuous styles of T-shirt lay among about 100 other styles in Stafford Lowry's vendor trailer.

The shirts are plain white with red, white and blue printing. Lowry doesn't sell many of them, but the two sell at identical rates.

The campaign shirts for John Kerry and Sen. John Edwards are side by side with the T-shirts for Bush and Dick Cheney.

While Lowry has the items for sale, he doesn't put much stock in their sales – or in the men whose campaigns they represent.

"They're all the same," he said as he pointed toward the White House. "They just sleep there."

Next week, Bill and Sharon Towery will celebrate their first anniversary.

Bill, 72, and Sharon, 64, lost their first spouses to death and each decided it was unpleasant to go through life alone.

Less than two years after they were introduced, the pair walk along the reflecting pool.

Bill is reluctant at first to discuss politics, but as he talks about his life, past and future with his wife, many of his views come to the surface.

The couple is in Washington to disburse parts of Bill's uncle's estate. Bill said his uncle was a conservative and chose to donate his estate to conservative causes – Bill shares these views, and cast an advance ballot for Bush.

Although his vote was cast early, the Towerys have been unable to escape the campaign.

"That's about all there is to watch," Bill, an Oregon resident, said. "All the interest is great."

confirm whether Bush would attend the party, but he is expected to be there to present his acceptance speech, in the event of a Bush victory. Security told the Collegian that the Secret Service would make a sweep of the building at 3:30 a.m., in preparation for either Bush or Cheney.

The party is limited to major news media and donors.

During Monday's campaign run, Bush was joined by Boston Red Sox pitcher, Curt Schilling, who last week made his support of the president public.

"These past couple of weeks, Sox fans ... trusted me when it was my turn on the mound," Schilling said, according to a transcript provided by the Bush campaign. "Now you can trust me on this: President Bush is the right leader for our country."

Broadcast network and cable news networks will cover the election with updates, but many have announced they will be more careful in announcing a winner, in response to the 2000 election.

FOUR MORE YEARS?

Larry Downing | REUTERS

U.S. President George W. Bush and first lady Laura Bush are followed by daughters Barbara (left) and Jenna (right), after arriving back to the White House on Election Day. Voters turned out in large numbers on Tuesday to deliver an unpredictable verdict on Bush and Democratic nominee John Kerry as the deadlocked White House race drew to a close. As many as 125 million Americans were voting to choose their leader for the next four years and set the country's course on the Iraq war, the fight against terrorism, the economy and foreign relations.

Close races, provisional ballots leave presidential election unresolved

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

WASHINGTON – Four more years are guaranteed.

The question is whether it will be four more years of a George Bush presidency or four more years of questioning the results of the presidential election.

The state of Ohio could be the deciding factor in the election, according to reports at deadline. Some news media outlets had projected Bush to win the state's 20 electoral votes, which would put the president only one electoral vote from re-election.

However, other outlets – and Democratic challenger Sen. John Kerry – refused to concede victory in Ohio to Bush.

The margin in the state was more than 100,000 votes, but more than 200,000 provisional ballots prevented Kerry from conceding defeat. Campaign managers said the ballots could sway the majority in Kerry's favor, which would grant the challenger all 20 of the state's electoral votes.

At the Reagan Building at Federal Triangle, the Republican National Committee hosted an election-night party for supporters. At deadline, neither Bush nor Vice President Dick Cheney had spoken to the crowd, but optimism was high. The realization there would be no clear winner in Tuesday's presidential election was an unwelcome but expected result to congressional staffers on Capitol Hill.

Media projections varied somewhat, but none gave President Bush the 270 electoral votes needed to win re-election before deadline.

The president won several of the swing states, including Florida, which decided the 2000 election with its 27 electoral votes.

"Everyone knew it'd be a late night," Frederick said. "But we still got excited about that little scoreboard that still doesn't mean anything."

Frederick spent much of the evening at Bullfeather's, a bar only a few blocks from the U.S. Capitol that is popular with members of Congress and their staffs.

Cheers and boos simultaneously rang out each time CNN projected the winner of a state's electoral votes. The bipartisan crowd, comprising Republicans and Democrats, was at times intently watching the televisions scroll election results.

Frederick, who works for a Republican congressman from Illinois, checked in with his mother throughout the evening, seeking updates on results for local elections in his home district.

Frederick's boss, U.S. Rep. Tim Johnson, was projected to win reelection.

The presidential election, Frederick said, was entirely new and unpredictable. He said for this election, it only made sense to expect the unexpected.

"You can throw out all conventional wisdoms," he said.

Kerry refuses to concede

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

BOSTON – It's too close to call, and the Kerry campaign isn't about to give up yet.

This time it's not Florida that will delay the announcement of a winner in the presidential winner, but Ohio.

A win in Ohio would give George W. Bush more than enough electoral votes to win the presidency. As of 2 a.m EST today, most news networks, as well as CNN, declared the race too close to call. Only Fox News and NBC gave the state to Bush.

Kerry
PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE

More than 90 percent of precincts were reporting with Bush leading Kerry 52 to 49 percent. However, John Kerry released a statement saying they will wait for provisional ballots to be counted, which will occur in 11 days.

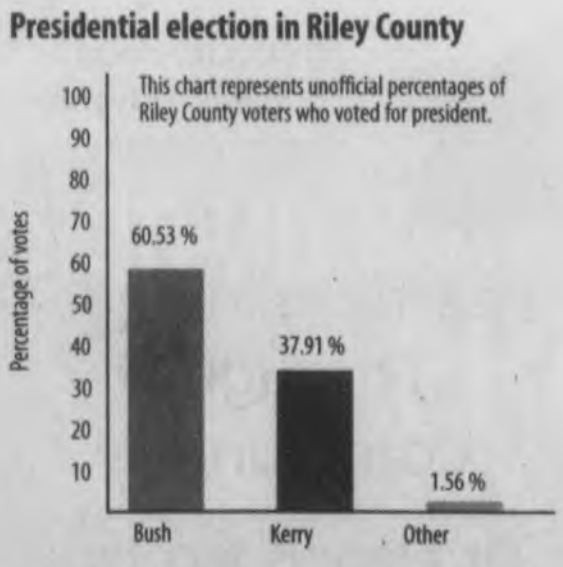
"The vote count in Ohio has not been completed," campaign manager Mary Beth Cahill said in a statement. "There are more than 250,000 remaining votes to be counted. We believe when they are, John Kerry will win Ohio."

Kerry had victories in New Hampshire and Pennsylvania, both aggressively sought by both candidates. Kerry, however, lost Florida.

The Electoral College count was left at Bush winning 27 states for 249 votes. Kerry won 16 states plus the District of Columbia for 221 votes.

A candidate must capture 270 electoral votes to win.

Kerry watched the returns from his Beacon Hill neighborhood in Boston. He was expected to speak at a rally in Copley Square, but only running mate John Edwards addressed the crowd.



Planes were on hand to send lawyers for the Kerry campaign to Ohio and other states with close results.

Earlier in the day, Kerry voted at the Boston Statehouse with his wife, Teresa, and daughters, Alexandra and Vanessa.

"I'm very confident that we made the case for change, the case for trust

ELECTIONS 2004

A RECAP OF THE MAJOR NATIONAL RACES AND BALLOT INITIATIVES

NO VOTE SPLIT

Voters in Colorado were asked to consider a ballot initiative to split Colorado's nine electoral votes based on a proportional representation of the popular vote.

The proposal failed, 66 percent voting against the measure and 34 percent voting in favor of the measure with 88 percent of precincts reporting. — CNN.com

GAY MARRIAGE BANS

Ballots in 10 states featured initiatives to prohibit gay marriage or define marriage only as a union between a man and a woman. All of the initiatives passed, although there were narrow margins of victory in Michigan and Oregon. All answers are percentages

ROCKY MOUNTAIN RIVALRY

In a highly contested race for the U.S. Senate seat being vacated by longtime Republican Ben Nighthorse Campbell, Colorado Attorney General and Democratic candidate Ken Salazar defeated beer baron and Republican candidate Pete Coors with 50 percent of the vote with 81 percent of precincts reporting. — CNN.com

BAKED ALASKA?

Voters in Alaska rejected a ballot measure to legalize marijuana, 57 percent of voters against the measure and 43 percent in favor with 64 percent of precincts reporting.

Adoption of the measure would make the "cultivation, use and sale of marijuana" for Alaskans 21 years or older legal.

Montana and Oregon both voted on medical marijuana initiatives. Oregon's measure failed 58 percent to 42 percent in favor, with 78 percent of precincts reporting. Montana's measure passed with 62 percent of voters in favor of the initiative, compared to 38 percent against it, with 78 percent of precincts reporting.

Local 'Idol' auditions begin

By Jay Dillon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Drew Rose | COLLEGIAN
Kristen Seiwert, freshman in public relations, sings a song and plays the guitar Tuesday night at K-State Idol auditions. Contestants will be called back today to find out if they made the finals.

The musicians are ready, the comedian is ready and even the jugglers are ready for the second K-State Idol.

Megan Winter, junior in chemical engineering, said the turnout was very good for this year's auditions.

"Last year we had 16 people audition, and this year we have 32," said Winter, who is the co-chair of the Union Program Council's special events committee.

Winter said anyone can compete.

"Any K-State student with talent who wants to try out, can," she said. "This gives them a place to showcase that talent."

Winter said K-State Idol is not just musical acts like those featured in the television show American Idol.

"Last year we didn't have just singing, we had a band, a twirler, all different talent," Winter said.

"This year we have jugglers, a comedian, and we have the musicians as well."

Winter said the musicians and the other acts won't compete against each other.

"There are three different categories," Winter said. "Basic entertainment, which is the jugglers and the comedian, vocal musicians with a band and vocal musicians without the band."

Daniel Munden, fifth-year senior in agronomy, said he took first place in last year's men's division.

Munden played his guitar and sang a song, but said he is not competing in K-State Idol for himself.

"I have been playing guitar for four years, and I feel like I was given this gift from God to show His glory," Munden said.

Guitar players aren't the only ones competing for K-State Idol.

Stephanie Lord, sophomore in business, played the piano and sang.

"I've been playing the piano for 10 years," Lord said. "I've been singing ever since I was little."

Lord said she didn't know about last year's K-State Idol, but competed in Greek Idol.

"This year's was publicized a whole lot more," Lord said. "I didn't know anything about last year's Idol. I did compete in Greek Idol and took second place."

Though musicians make up most of the competition, there are other performers as well.

Kevin McBeth and Kenton Born started the auditions last night with their juggling act.

McBeth, sophomore in economics, mathematics and statistics, said he has been juggling for 11 years and picked up juggling because it appealed to him.

"I saw someone juggling, and I thought it looked really cool, and I wanted to juggle," McBeth said.

Born, sophomore in computer science, said he has not been juggling with McBeth for very long.

"I think we've only been juggling together for a year and a half," Born said.

Ultimately, the K-State Idol winner comes down to the judges' votes.

Winter said the council has decided on the judges for the event.

"Our judges have been picked and are ready to judge the competition," Winter said. "We usually have campus leaders and faculty judge the contest."

Winter said the contest is open to anyone to come and watch.

She said contestants will find out today who made the cut.

Hold your horses people, keep them in those stables and don't you dare let them out.

Yes, some news organizations have all but called this election for the GOP, but that doesn't mean you can go bananas for Bush just yet.

Four years ago, America was presented with the perfect example of why it should be patient in choosing its leader. News organizations fell over themselves one by one as they tried to be the first to correctly predict the outcome, only to discover that jumping the gun can have embarrassing consequences.

As of 2 a.m., 250,000 votes had yet to be counted in Ohio, more than twice the president's perceived lead. As cliche as it sounds, Ohio and its 20 electoral votes are without a doubt too close to call.

Iowa has its own problems. Two ballot counting machines have broken down in the state, leaving us equally unsure of who is the recipient of its seven votes. The state is sending for new ones from Nebraska, which will no doubt take time.

The Kerry campaign has yet to deploy any of its lawyers to these two states; instead it is simply asking that all the votes are counted.

Thus the only sure thing to do is wait it out.

Neither Kerry nor Bush has claimed victory or conceded defeat, and it would be wise for the citizens of the United States of America to do the same.

Change of heart

Columnist turns pro-Kerry

I began writing this column at 11:30 p.m. Tuesday night. At this point in time, CNN.com is projecting that Bush has 237 electoral votes in the bag and that Kerry has 188.

LOGAN ADAMS

To tell you the truth, as a conservative, I don't want Bush to win. For the past four years I've watched him run this office, and I've spent that time defending him to all.

It's like trying to apologize to the other parents at the playground for your own kid's atrocious misbehavior.

"Oh, I'm sorry George splashed Iraq all over himself and your kids; I'm certain he meant to do the right thing.

"Oh, I'm sorry George knocked down that nice budget your twins were building there with his toy deficit. I know he didn't mean to."

It sucked being a conservative under Bush these past four years, and I'm sick of it. I want to be a political predator, not a piece of prey crying for help.

I want a president I can criticize with complete prejudice, without feeling weird. I want a president whose mistakes I can swoop down upon like a falcon and rip to pieces with utter savagery while others watch in awe and horror.

I want John Kerry to win. I want him to spend the next four years running this country. I admit it with pride.

After months of writing columns in support of Bush, I've become a Kerry supporter.

Say it – I'm a flip-flopper.

To all my Republican friends: I wish to apologize for any shock this might cause them. I know, it's hard to believe, but I hope we can still be friends.

To all my Democrat friends: I just wish I'd said this sooner.

Also, if Bush gets four more years, guess which Senator and former first lady is going to run?

That's right. Thanks to Bush, we run the risk of facing Sen. Hilary Rodham Clinton in 2008.

Even worse, Gov. Jeb Bush of Florida is going to try to continue the dynasty when that time comes.

It all boils down to the long run. Bush is a royal pain, but we have to treat him nicely. Kerry, on the other hand, may be hard to deal with, but at least we can be on the attack instead of taking hits from all sides.

Bush has betrayed conservatism. He's gone wild with spending but hasn't compared his debts to his tax paycheck. I honestly don't think this country can stand four more years of Bush in the White House.

It's 12:10 a.m, and I just checked it again. Bush is up to 249, and Kerry has a measly 196. Ohio is probably about to be chalked up to Bush, bringing him to 266. I guess all I have left to do is sigh and move on.

Looks like I can expect the same garbage, just a different term.

Election winner has work to do in Iraq to repair America's image and protect interests

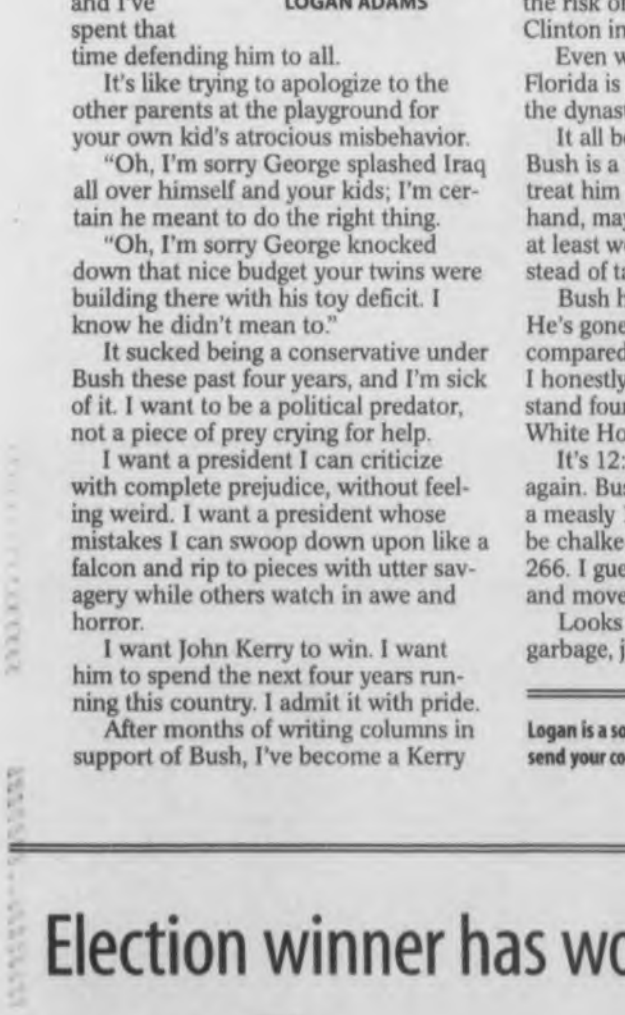

Illustration by Jeff Yeung | COLLEGAIN

Dear Mister President,

CHAZ STEIMEL

Having won the American presidency, it is your duty and obligation as commander-in-chief to make the Iraq transfer of power and development a successful one and as peaceful as possible.

It is not just American soldiers at risk, but also America's reputation. The November-December issue of "Foreign Affairs" illustrates that without a successful transition in Iraq, America's international reputation would be destroyed.

America needs to be able to lead the world to ensure our security against terror and further our businesses' opportunities through trade agreements, never mind needing our prestige and others' trust in dealing with such problems as nuclear proliferation.

The situation in Iraq is better than it was last month. However, it is still far from were it needs to be.

The most immediate concern is security. Without the people feeling safe, democracy is impossible, and commerce cannot commence.

If America fails in delivering peace, Iraqis will seek another security source, possibly choosing to fight for militias believing once America leaves, peace will reign.

Winning the hearts and minds is often the most important step. According to the November issue of the "Washington Report" on Middle East Affairs, only 2 percent of Iraqis trust the American forces.

To help establish peace, America must capture these hearts and minds, and encourage them to trust our mission, even to convince them to help us. One way to help swing them to our side is to do our best to protect Iraqi civilian life.

The Nov. 1 issue of the London Guardian looks to a recent Lancet Medical Journal, which estimated nearly 100,000 Iraqi civilians have died since March 2003.

While U.S. and U.K. sources claim that number is far too high, government sources claim about 15,000 men and women have died.

While everyone is sure our armed forces and allies take great care in reducing collateral damage, it is perceived often that Americans do not. For instance, as the Los Angeles Times noted on Nov. 1, when we launch an air strike in Baghdad or Fallujah, while it may not be true, it appears the strikes kill as many civilians as terrorists.

Mr. President, as long as we launch air strikes, it will be perceived by Iraqis and the world that we are killing civilians as well. As long as it appears to the Iraqis we are killing them, to what end should they help us?

Mr. President, stop launching air strikes. The strikes are prohibitive to our cause and mission.

Mr. President, we also need to help give them jobs. While America has gone to long measures to get the oil flowing, we also need to give aid to the individual Iraqis so they can restart their own lives.

NPR explained on Oct. 17 that of the 32 billion dollars pledged to support Iraqi reconstruction, only 2 billion dollars was collected and sent. We need to finish the deal.

Mr. President, you have the confidence and support of the American people. Having won the election, use your four years to help us, by making sure the Iraqi transition occurs as peacefully and successfully as possible.

LOCAL ELECTION 2004

Students respond at election party

SGA-sponsored event allows for thought, response

By Melissa Baier
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For many of the students at the Student Governing Association-sponsored pizza celebration Tuesday evening, this was their first opportunity to vote in the national election.

Most students were absorbed by television coverage of the events, while others contributed to debate about issues surrounding the election.

Some students were conservative in their beliefs, yet others wore T-shirts, held signs, and handed out stickers in support of their political candidate.

This activity was held as a followup to Pack the Polls and Pack the Library, offered to anyone who wanted to celebrate democratic privileges.

"The voting turnout was phenomenal. We want to thank students for voting and let them know that their vote is important. Being aware of what's going on, and being active in our community is a big part of the voting process," said Arts and Sciences Senator Laura Wood, junior in political science and philosophy.

Wood supported local politicians, working for both the Nancy Boyda and Sydney Carlin campaigns. She also attended the Democratic National Convention this summer.

"It was interesting to see the candidates speak and come together to support one candidate, which all leads up to tonight. Overall, I would say political parties don't matter; it's about the issues and about the people," Wood said.

On the local level, students are incredibly concerned about tuition costs and educational proposals, said Sarah Affalter, sophomore in criminology.

Andrew Treaster, SGA vice-chairman of government relations committee, spoke of the importance of this election.

"On the national scene, these elections could very well shape the next 20 years of American policy. Students need to step up to the challenged and affect how everything will turn out," Treaster said.

The consensus between both Democrats and Republicans is how this election will effect both the nation and the world.

"It concerns me where we've gone in the last four years," Treaster said. "I'd like to see the United States be a little more cautious on the world stage as to how we deal with different heads of state and serious issues surrounding different regions around the globe."

Candidates celebrate, others await provisional vote counts

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Eighty votes is all Geri Simon (D) needs to become Riley County Commissioner for District 3.

Ninety-four votes is all Joe McGraw (R) needs to become state representative for District 67.

With more than 700 provisional ballots still out, these two races are still too close to be considered final.

However, Tom Hawk (D) said he still considers himself the winner of the District 67 representative race.

"I will probably be in anticipation and want to know the final results," Hawk said. "I need to start thinking about how I'm going to represent this district."

Simon said she would not trade the experience of campaigning, win or lose.

"Everybody wants closure. It'd be nice to know tonight," she said. "You're kind of for months devoted to campaigning. I have no regrets about that."

County Commissioner Bob Newsome (R), who ran against Simon, said he wasn't in anticipation for the final results.

"If I don't have this, I can do something else," he said. "I don't need this job. I just do it to have something to do."

He was behind Simon for most the night until the very end.

"I got a home run with the bases loaded in the last leg," Newsome said.

Although there are more than 700 ballots, not all ballots will fall in District 3, Rich Vargo, Riley County Clerk, said.

The number of ballots Riley County went through was much larger than in years past, Vargo said. The final preliminary vote count came out after midnight.

"We had 20,000 ballots to do," he said. "The most we've done before is probably 14,000."

The final official vote, with all the provisionals included, will be released at 10 a.m. Monday.

Some precincts in the county had more than two-hour long waits.

Sydney Carlin (D), representative for District 66, won the race over Paul Barkey (R). She said she was glad to see the great turnout.

Bob Pudden and Bob Smail, Manhattan residents, watch the election results come in on the television Tuesday evening. Pudden and Smail were at the Manhattan Republican Headquarters at 426 Houston St.

"I was thrilled to see the turnout," she said. "I'm really sorry some people gave up and went home. Some had to get to class or had to get to work. A lot of people didn't vote, and I'm very sad about that."

Carlin said she was somewhat expectant of her win.

"I felt that it was a reflection of what people told me while I was campaigning," she said. "Mr. Barkey worked hard, but the people know me."

Democrats in Manhattan gathered at Kite's Bar and Grill and watched the national results.

William Wake, senior in political science and vice president of Students for Environment Action, was watching the Nancy Boyda and Rep. Jim Ryun race for U.S. House of Representatives, and was very upset with the results.

"I gave her money. I campaigned nine hours today for her," he said. "He (Ryun) holds an inferior view towards women. He panders towards insurance companies. He's a Christian fundamentalist.

"Taliban is to Islam as Jim Ryun is to Christianity."

Republicans were at various places in Manhattan, but many gathered at the Riley County Republican Headquarters at 426 Houston St.

Dave Fiser, Manhattan resident, was one who gathered at the headquarters.

He said he was surprised by the McGraw/Hawk race. They were expecting Hawk to win.

"I think it's closer than it was anticipated," he said.

Dixie Roberts, vice chair for the Riley County Republicans, said the county attorney race was a big win for them.

Barry Wilkerson (R) beat Chris Getty (D) in the race.

"We've had a Democrat for county attorney for a while, so it will be the first time in a long time to have a Republican," she said.

IN BRIEF

The Associated Press

All four seats in the U.S. house of Representatives and one of the two U.S. Senate seats in Kansas were up for grabs in yesterday's election.

In the 2nd District, Nancy Boyda and Jim Ryun argued most heatedly over who supported American troops more. One Ryun ad noted that Boyda participated in protests against the Iraq war before it began — and used an image of Osama bin Laden.

Ryun
U.S. REPRESENTATIVE

Boyda, 49, a former pharmaceutical company research and development manager, moved to Topeka last year to run. Before entering politics, Ryun, 57, of Lawrence, was best known as an Olympic runner.

Brownback
U.S. SENATOR

In the Senate race, Democrat Lee Jones, 53, tried to portray Sam Brownback as too conservative for Kansas. He cited the 48-year-old senator's support for keeping federal courts from hearing cases such as one in which a California atheist attacked the use of "under God" when the Pledge of Allegiance is recited in public schools.

However, Kansas last elected a Democratic senator in 1932. Brownback bested Jones, a Lenexa engineer who'd struggled to raise money and gain visibility.

In the 4th District, Republican Todd Tiahrt beat Democrat Michael Kinard, the president of the Wichita school board. Incumbent Republican Jerry Moran's only opponent in the 1st District was Libertarian Jack Warner, of Wright.

Dennis Moore, 58, of Lenexa, has held the 3rd District seat since 1999 by courting moderate Republicans. He received just 50 percent of the vote two years ago.

Moore won a comfortable re-election Tuesday, besting Republican challenger Kris Kobach in the GOP-leaning Kansas City suburbs.

Moore captured 54 percent of the vote with 94 percent of the 3rd District's precincts reporting. Kobach had 45 percent, with two minor party candidates splitting the remainder. Moore even carried Johnson County, a GOP stronghold.

The Moore-Kobach contest had been viewed as highly competitive, but Moore prevailed by his widest margin since first running for Congress six years ago.

"This is a landslide for me," he said.

Kobach told his supporters that his campaign was about principles — such as opposing abortion, supporting an amendment to the federal constitution to ban gay marriage and doing more to combat terrorism.

Near-record turnout, precinct consolidation cause long waits

Despite long lines, long waits and a near-record turnout, Riley County elections took place without any major problems.

Riley County Clerk Rich Vargo said the long lines at polling places in Manhattan and Riley County were caused by a combination of near-record voter turnout, as well as the consolidation of polling places as a result of the federal Help America Vote Act.

Vargo said he didn't feel the consolidation led to any problems other than usual issues.

"Each election, even before consolidation of the precincts, we've had confusion," he said.

Vargo said anyone whose voting place had changed from the 2002 midterm election received a card in the mail indicating their new polling location.

This election, he said, has seen unprecedented participation from voters.

"We've heard there have been some long lines at some of the polling places, which is unfortunate but at the same time, it's good," Vargo said. "We seem to be having record numbers, which is consistant with how advance voting went."

As of 2:30 p.m., Vargo said the County Clerk's office conducted a sampling of five polling places in the city, and those places had seen 34 percent of registered voters turn out already.

Vargo said the large turnout was causing some delays, but overall the workers were handling the increased numbers very well.

"At a couple of those larger places, we've split them up into two polling books," he said. "It's not the number of voting booths that has been the problem, it's been getting voters checked in."

Melissa Sandberg, junior in agricultural education, arrived at Trinity Presbyterian Church around 5 p.m. to cast her first-ever vote to a 30 minute wait.

"It's definitely worth it," she said. "It was expected."

Morre Hughes, Manhattan resident, agreed.

"It's actually moving a lot faster than I anticipated when I got here," Hughes said.

Final voter turnout was 63.2 percent, according to the Riley County Clerk's office

Optimism permeates Boston despite uncertainty, Bush lead

Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

BOSTON – There was a sense of excitement Tuesday in Boston.

The subways were packed with every other passenger covered in Kerry-Edwards stickers or carrying blue campaign balloons.

On the streets, even early in the morning, cars honked their horns at rows of John Kerry supporters thrusting their signs into the air. News media satellite trucks lined every block around historic Copley Square.

Just a few hours later, Kerry supporters got a glimpse of their hero as he returned from the campaign trail to vote at Boston's Statehouse.

Kerry walked hand in hand with his wife and daughters, with an army of Secret Service agents close behind. After casting his ballot, Kerry headed to an oyster restaurant for his traditional Election Day lunch.

As the day went on, reporters and cameramen from national and international news media packed into coffee shops to escape the biting wind. Supporters gathered in the areas around Copley Square, waiting hours to go through metal detectors to enter the victory party sponsored by the Democratic National Committee.

Inside the square, the stage displayed a backdrop of a waving flag against the first public library in the United States. Cameramen filled three sets of risers while DNC donors and Kerry staff and friends stood in front. Behind, thousands of people packed in to see not only Kerry but prominent politicians and musical artists.

Then the first state results started to come in, mostly from traditionally Republican states.

"It's still early," Kerry supporters said. Or, "that doesn't mean anything, it's only 4 percent reporting." Red Republican states began to dominate the map.

But then the returns started to come in from key battleground states of Minnesota, Iowa, Ohio and Pennsylvania. Kerry had a slight lead, and the crowd became cautiously optimistic.

Faces seemed to fall, though, as the count seemed to slow with Kerry stuck at 112 electoral votes as Bush's wins seemed to climb.

"It's OK. We'll get all the big states," one young woman said.

While it was uncertain if the Democrats had won the White House, leaders were confident about voter turnout.

"Polls closed in Pennsylvania and Ohio, but people are still voting," Terry McAuliffe, DNC chairman, said.

And many of those voting are young, who for the first time are showing up at the polls in large numbers.

"Eighteen to 35-year-olds voted in a bigger way than they ever did before," Printz Board, singer, said after a performance. "They may indeed, before the night is over, make a difference."

After a performance by James Taylor, the mood shifted as Florida's votes seemed to slip away.

"I am a little worried," a Yale student said. "I saw the Florida polls."

The air seemed to get colder, but the silence was broken in an eruption of cheers as Kerry was declared winner of California's 55 electoral votes.

"Let's go Kerry," shouted thousands of people, spilling out into the streets.

Singer Sheryl Crow built off the momentum with the words, "a change will do us good." Crow, who has traveled along the campaign trail with Kerry, said she's optimistic about the results.

"This is the best I have felt in months, Nothing like a little hope. Nothing like a little optimism. Nothing like a little faith," she said.

Bush's campaign chairman appeared on the TV screens, greeted by hissing and booing from the crowd.

New York Congressman Greg Meeks told the crowd both candidates have learned that every vote counts.

"This is indeed an excellent day for America," he said. "Record numbers of voters have gone to the polls and are going to polls.

"People still have the power to change the director of America."

As Meeks rallied the crowd, the electoral vote count had Bush with 207 and Kerry with 206.

"We just got Oregon. We just got Washington," he said. "My fellow Americans, it won't be long."

In addition to performances by the Fat City Band and Carole King, Jon Bon Jovi energized the crowds as the clock reached midnight and still, no president.

"I hope to God you voted for change," Bon Jovi said. "I hope to God you voted for John Kerry."

But it soon became clear that all the optimism and hope couldn't win the White House, as network news channels called Florida and Ohio for Bush.

The rain turned into a pour, and the crown began to thin. The diehards stayed, though. They waited for Kerry to appear, for some miracle to give Kerry the remaining states and a win.

But, it seems they will wait even longer, up to 11 days for Ohio provisional ballots to be counted.

Once again, American woke up the day after the elections without a clear presidential winner.

Reporters from across the nation and world stand on rafters at Copley Square waiting for Kerry and news results in drizzling rain Tuesday night in downtown Boston.

Young political hopefuls work in uncertain climate

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

WASHINGTON – Kris Hart had a bad feeling.

The sun was setting behind buildings in the Foggy Bottom neighborhood of Washington, D.C., and Hart had a gut feeling that he didn't like the way the election was going.

"I don't know why," he said. "I'm a Bush guy, but something tells me it's going to go Kerry's way."

As of press time, the presidential election remains up in the air, with provisional ballots in Ohio and several other states completing ballot counts.

Tuesday afternoon, with only a couple hours remaining before the polls in the District of Columbia closed, Hart was campaigning hard. He encouraged passersby to vote for Bush.

And he asked politely for their votes – for himself.

Hart had a vision for instituting change and bringing a fresh voice to the District of Columbia.

It didn't work – at least not exactly as he planned.

Hart, a senior at George Washington University, lost his bid as the Republican candidate for the Neighborhood Advisory Commission. He had spent the past month campaigning, using a small but dedicated team of supporters.

After Tuesday's election, though, Hart's work was not enough to win the election.

"I think we did a good job of raising some issues and getting our points across," Hart said while distributing fliers outside the Second Precinct's polling place in northwest Washington.

Hart entered the race as the underdog. He knew most people didn't give him a chance.

He didn't care.

Facing an 86-year-old, 12-year incumbent, Hart thought he could bring new issues to the forefront of the election.

He stressed preservation of the area's historic neighborhoods while still balancing the financial and educational opportunities.

The advisory commission is unique to the District of Columbia, Hart said, because the District is not a state entity, but owned by the federal government.

The setup gives Congress significant involvement in the government, along with other local bodies, such as the neighborhood commission.

The commission deals with issues like traffic, liquor licensing and other local ordinances.

Hart, who grew up in the precinct before attending George Washington, said the future of the neighborhood was important to him.

He would not be deterred by something as petty as age.

Dorothy Miller, his 86-year-old opponent, was viewed by many voters as the mature, experienced candidate.

But Hart, who was elected student body president as a sophomore, did not hesitate to enter the race.

"I'm pretty politically motivated," he said.

The motivation rubbed off on some of his friends and supporters, who stood with him about 120 feet from the entrance of the polling place. The law prohibits campaign activity within 100 feet of the entrance.

While there was a police officer present to ensure no campaign laws were broken, Hart said the activity had remained relatively quiet.

"There have been a couple arguments over issues that have gotten too loud," he said. "But nothing out of hand."

Although he was raised in the nation's capital, Hart said he recognized there are college students and youth all over the country who are interested in politics.

One student, Katie O'Hara, a K-State senior in political science, said her interest in politics led her to Washington, where she interns for Sen. Pat Roberts (R).

"There's a narrow group of people interested in politics," O'Hara said of Kansas. "Here, it's everybody."

O'Hara started her semester-long internship in early September, just after the Republican National Convention ended. She said she didn't think Washington produced politically interested people, but that the city's political population was a concentration of others from around the country.

"These are political people with everyone else weeded out," she said. "Here, your job depends on it."

O'Hara said she would like to take her interest back to Kansas, where she would like to become involved in state politics.

The plan to get elected, though, doesn't always work the first time, as Hart learned Tuesday night.

However, Hart said he accomplished a lot more with his campaign than he would have by allowing the incumbent to run unopposed.

"We opened a lot of good dialogue in this race," he said.

"That's more important than winning."

In the presidential race, though, Hart said it would take more than ideas for the new commander in chief to be successful.

"Bush is a great leader," he said. "He's the real deal."

Volleyball team heads on road for Big 12 matches

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The women's volleyball team travels to Iowa State today for the first of a two-match Big 12 road stand that finishes with Nebraska on Saturday. First-serve against the Cyclones is set for 7 p.m in Ames, Iowa.

K-State held steady at No. 18 in the country after defeating Kansas 3-0 Saturday in Ahearn Field House. The Wildcats are 14-7 overall and 8-4 in the Big 12 Conference. Iowa State comes into the match on a six-match losing skid with an 8-13 overall mark and 1-12 record in the conference. The Cyclones have been swept in their last three matches.

The Wildcats won the earlier meeting between the two teams this season, winning in five games in Ahearn Field House on Oct. 2.

Coach Suzie Fritz said she expects a better performance against the Cyclones this time around.

"Certainly one of (our objectives) will be to play well for a length of time," Fritz said. "We are capable of playing significantly better than last time, and we'll want to go in there and prove that."

In their last match against Iowa State, the Wildcats battled back from a 2-1 deficit to take the match.

Fritz said her coaching moves played a role in the closeness of the match.

"Last time I think was primarily responsible for our lack of consistency, because I made some personnel changes early in the match and we lost our flow," Fritz said.

Fritz said those changes should not play a factor tonight, but she expects a challenge from Iowa State just the same.

"You're not able to do that on the road, because it's harder to be in somebody else's gym and put together a consistent effort like we can do on our floor in front of our fans," Fritz said. "We've had some struggles in Ames in the past."

The Cyclones have several weapons, starting with outside hitter Nicole Lorenzen, who averages 2.59 kills. Middle blocker Katie Kruenegel averages 2.56 kills and setter Amanda Craig adds 11.26 assists per game.

One challenge the Wildcats will not have is the tendency to look ahead to their match against No. 3 Nebraska on Saturday, Fritz said.

"We can't afford to do that from a preparation standpoint," she said.

"From everything we talk about to everything we look towards, we stay very day to day."

Men's basketball to begin stateside exhibitions tonight

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The men's basketball team already has four games under its belt, but now Wildcat fans will get to see for themselves how the team looks.

The Wildcats play the EA Sports All-Stars at 7 tonight in Bramlage Coliseum in their first exhibition game in the United States of the season.

After participating in an October foreign exhibition tour in Vancouver, British Columbia, Coach Jim Wooldridge said the team was able to see what it needs to focus on heading into the season.

"We want to see what progress we've made from practice to the game," Wooldridge said.

"There were three things that came out of Canada that we really hit on. Defensively, it was playing without fouling. We fouled a lot up there. We turned the ball over too much, so we've emphasized that as well, and then shot selection.

"Those are three critical areas that you'd like to see improvement."

Wooldridge tabbed sophomore guard Lance Harris, sophomore forward Cartier Martin, senior forwards Justin Williams and Jeremiah Massey and freshman guard Clent Stewart as likely starters for tonight's game.

Stewart will be making his Bramlage Coliseum debut as the starting point guard, and fellow freshman guard Curtis Allen should also see some time off the bench.

But those expecting to see sophomore Fred Peete in action for the first time will have to wait.

Wooldridge said Peete had missed several days of practice due to a back injury and would sit out tonight's game.

The Northeast Oklahoma A&M transfer is expected to be back for next week's home exhibition game against Pittsburg State.

"We want to make sure he's healthy, as we go closer to the regular season," Wooldridge said.

Peete was the Wildcats second-leading scorer with 12.8 points per game in the team's four games in Canada.

A player to watch tonight could be Williams.

Wooldridge said the 6-foot-10, 245-pound forward has impressed coaches in practice.

"He's gotten to a higher level and he's stayed up there," Wooldridge said. "We're anxious to get him into the game tomorrow to see where he goes from practice to game – to see if he can put those things together and keep building toward the regular season."

STUDENT SELECTED TO SUIT UP WITH ALL-STARS

K-State students might recognize a familiar face tonight warming up with the EA Sports All-Stars.

Joe Cowan, junior in computer engineering, was selected as this year's "Rudy," an EA Sports walk-on program, and will take the floor with the All-Stars.

EA Sports representative Deke Nolan said the program is designed to award students who are a large part of the gaming franchise's success.

Cowan said he is looking forward to the opportunity of suiting up and the possibility of playing.

"I just think it's going to be pretty cool to be on the floor and see how quick they play at the Division-I level," Cowan said.

Postseason hopes on the line for Wildcats

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The next three games for the Wildcats could prove to be the most important of the 2004 season, as postseason aspirations are on the line.

Heading into Saturday's game against the Missouri Tigers (4-4, 2-3), the Wildcats (3-5, 1-4) must win their last three games in order to become bowl eligible and keep the program's string of 11 consecutive years of playing in a bowl game intact.

The Wildcats have won the past 11 games in the series, including last year's 24-14 win that propelled K-State into the Big 12 Conference championship game against Oklahoma.

INJURY UPDATE

The K-State defense has been plagued by injuries throughout the entire season and will have to fill another hole against Missouri.

At K-State's weekly press conference on Tuesday, Coach Bill Snyder said senior defensive end Kevin Huntley is doubtful for Saturday's game. Huntley is the Wildcats' fifth-leading tackler with 31 total tackles and also leads the team with three sacks.

Snyder said the defensive end position will be filled by committee.

"If Kevin is not able to go, we will go the same way we went last week and play with two guys with somebody to spell each one of them," Snyder said.

O-LINE IN A GROOVE

One area of the Wildcat team that has stayed away from the injury bug has been the offensive line.

The combination of seniors Jon Doty, Malcolm Wooldridge, Mike Johnson, Michael Weiner and junior Jeromey Clary have started every game for the Wildcats in 2004 and are continually improving, Snyder said.

"I appreciate the fact that they take 80-90 snaps a ball game. When you're carrying the kind of weight around that they are carrying, that's not always an easy task, and I appreciate that," Snyder said. "I think we are making some head-way, gradually week-in and week-out."

Johnson said the offensive line has benefited from playing eight games together.

"We are starting to get into a little groove, and we are starting to have special little calls and we are able to communicate a little better, so I think we are starting to get into more of a rhythm as an offensive line," Johnson said.

NOT SO SPECIAL TEAMS

Once a staple of Wildcat football teams, the special teams units have been inconsistent throughout 2004, ranking last in the Big 12 in punt return average (5.5 yards per game) and punting (31.6 yards per game).

Last week, the special teams unit did not help K-State's cause in a 35-25 loss to Texas Tech by giving up a 90-yard punt return for a touchdown.

"I think maybe it's just one guy not in the right place or one guy missing a tackle, and if you are not in the right place at the right time then they are going to have a big play on you," freshman holder Marcus Watts said.

"It's very frustrating, especially when you are on those teams and people are going to criticize you for giving up big plays, but we just have to correct our mistakes."

Coach Bill Snyder said defensive end Kevin Huntley is doubtful for Saturday's game against Missouri, due to an injury.

WGLF | Quick finishes with career-best score

Freshman Kali Quick capped off a career-best tournament, but the K-State women's golf team dropped to a 10th place finish Tuesday at the Edwin Watts/Palmetto Intercollegiate in Kiawah Island, S.C.

Quick

Quick shot rounds of 74 and 75 on Tuesday, as she shot a 223 for the tournament — her best 54-hole score as a Wildcat. She finished in a tie for 14th place.

After starting the day in ninth place, K-State as a team shot rounds of 297 and 309 to drop one place overall.

The end of the tournament marks the end of the fall season for K-State.

MLB | 10 Red Sox file for free agency

Right-hander Derek Lowe and catcher Jason Varitek led a parade of 10 Red Sox who filed for free agency Monday, two days after they were honored in Boston following the team's first World Series title since 1918.

Lowe

Shortstop Orlando Cabrera and backup catcher Doug Mirabelli also filed along with right-handers Curtis Leskanic, Ramiro Mendoza and Scott Williamson, left-hander Mike Myers, first baseman Dave McCarty and second baseman Pokey Reese.

Leskanic filed after Boston declined a $1.25 million option, electing to pay a $100,000 buyout.

Thirteen Red Sox have filed for free agency since Boston won the World Series last Wednesday, and three more are eligible, including pitcher Pedro Martinez.

NBA | Carter loses court battle with ex-agent

A federal jury ordered NBA star Vince Carter to pay his imprisoned former agent, William "Tank" Black, nearly $4.7 million in lost commissions and damages.

Carter

The panel said Tuesday that Carter breached his contract with Black's company, Professional Management Inc., when the Toronto Raptors guard dissolved the agreement in 2000. It awarded Black $4,675,640.45 in actual damages.

The jury also found that Black violated his fiduciary duties to Carter and ordered the one-time sports agent to pay $800,000 to Carter. That was the total of two loans Carter made to Black.

The decision brought a temporary end to the court case. Carter spent several days away from his NBA club as he fought Black, a federal prisoner.

Golf | Report says Lehman next Ryder Cup captain

Tom Lehman wanted to play on the next Ryder Cup team. Instead, he'll go to Ireland in 2006 as the next U.S. captain.

The Palm Beach Post reported that Lehman, 45, will be introduced as the U.S. captain at a news conference in Amelia Island, where the PGA of America is holding its 86th annual meeting.

The newspaper did not cite a source in its report.

Neither Lehman nor PGA president M.G. Orender returned phone calls from the Associated Press seeking comment. PGA spokesman Julius Mason confirmed that a news conference would be held Wednesday to announce the captain.

Downtown plan to seek STAR funds

By Matt Gorney
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Manhattan City Commission discussed a downtown redevelopment initiative at Tuesday's meeting.

In a 5-0 vote, commissioners voted to begin the process of obtaining Sales Tax Revenue (STAR) Bond Financing from the State of Kansas.

The money, if granted, would be used to fund the Downtown Redevelopment project. The goal of the project is to build a visitor's center along with new retail space, town homes and other areas to bring new life to the downtown area by bringing new businesses and increased revenue.

"It is definitely in the interest of our community to go forward with the STAR bond application," Commissioner Bruce Snead said. "To me it's well worth the risk of going forward."

Even though it was a unanimous decision, other commissioners were not sure the redevelopment project would be able produce everything it was supposed too.

"I truly do not want to expose this community to something it can't financially support," Brad Everett, mayor, said.

After the vote and a brief break, the commission continued the meeting and addressed the second issue of the evening.

That issue involved the building of a new, 33,000-square-foot facility at the K-State Research Park to serve as the headquarters for the National Institute for Strategic Technology Acquisition and Commercialization, or NISTAC.

A unanimous vote from the commission gave permission to city administrators to finalize lease agreements between the city and K-State for the use of land and between the city and NISTAC.

Ownership of the building proved to be the hot topic though.

Commissioners spent time debating the portion of the agreement with NISTAC dealing with who would buy the actual building from the city.

"I want the building bought or moved off our ownership," Everett said.

In other business, the commission approved the first reading of two ordinances, one dealing with the annexing and rezoning of land west of the Miller Ranch water tower and the other with the rezoning of a piece of land on Enoch Lane from C-5, Highway Service Commercial District to C-6. Heavy Commercial District.

in a new leadership, a new direction, a fresh start," the Massachusetts senator said after casting his ballot.

Thousands of supporters gathered in Copley Square Tuesday night as Sheryl Crow, James Taylor, Carole King, Black Eyed Peas and Jon Bon Jovi performed between election updates.

However, the biggest story of this election year might turn out to be not whom people voted for, but how many of them voted.

Officials predicted a turnout of 117.5 million to 121 million people – the most ever and rivaling the 1960 election in the percentage of eligible voters going to the polls.

Bush wins re-election, Kerry concedes

By Ron Fournier
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – President Bush claimed a re-election mandate Wednesday after a record 59 million Americans chose him over Democrat John Kerry and voted to expand Republican control of Congress as well. He pledged to pursue his agenda on taxes and Iraq while seeking "the broad support of all Americans."

Kerry conceded defeat in make-or-break Ohio rather than launch a legal fight reminiscent of the contentious Florida recount of four years ago.

U.S. PRESIDENT

Kerry
U.S. SENATOR

"I hope that we can begin the healing," the Massachusetts senator said.

Claiming a second term denied his father, George H.W. Bush, the president struck a conciliatory tone, too.

"A new term is a new opportunity to reach out to the whole nation," he said, speaking directly to Kerry's supporters.

"To make this nation stronger and better, I will need your support, and I will work to earn it," he said. "I will do all I can do to deserve your trust."

It was a warm-and-fuzzy close to one of the longest, most negative presidential races in a generation.

Bush didn't use the word mandate, but Vice President Dick Cheney did, and the president's intention was clear as he ticked off a familiar list of second-term goals: overhaul the tax code and Social Security at home while waging war in Iraq and elsewhere to stem terror.

Bush stands to reshape the federal judiciary, starting with an aging Supreme Court that voted 5-4 to award him Florida four years ago. In all branches of government, the GOP now holds a solid, if not permanent, ruling majority.

Bush's vote totals were the biggest ever and his slice of the vote, 51 percent, made him the first president to claim a majority since 1988 when his father won 53 percent against Democrat Michael Dukakis.

Like Dukakis, Kerry is a Massachusetts politician who was labeled a liberal by a Bush. This president also called Kerry a flip-flopping opportunist who would fight feebly against terror.

None of that rancor was evident Wednesday, when Kerry called Bush to concede the race. He told Bush the country needed to be united, and Bush agreed. But the numbers suggest the country is deeply split.

Bush's victory ensures Republican dominance of virtually every quarter of the U.S. political system for years to come the White House, Congress and the

USD-383 Board votes to close school

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

USD-383 Manhattan-Ogden School Board members voted 4-3 Wednesday to close Theodore Roosevelt Elementary at the end of the 2005-06 school year.

The decision came after more than three hours of public hearing and two hours of discussion among board members.

Those who voted in favor of closing the elementary school included board members Jim Shroyer, Nancy Knopp, Randy Martin and Dave Colburn. Opposers included Dorothy Soldan, Roger Brannan and Walt Pesaresi.

Originally, the members were planning to vote on closing the school following the 2004-05 school year. However members were torn because of the expectation of more Fort Riley troops in January who may bring more children.

According to the Manhattan Mercury, Fort Riley officials have confirmed that a total of about 3,400 soldiers from the 6th Brigade of the 25th Infantry will begin moving to the post starting in January.

Knopp said she was struggling with closing Theodore Roosevelt because she didn't

Pottery makers fire up wood kiln

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students and professors within the art department have been working hard on developing a train wood-fire kiln this year.

This past weekend, the kiln was put to the test.

Graduate students within the department began building and testing the kiln more than a year ago. The first launch of the kiln, however, was not a success.

"Well, we built the kiln last fall, and we fired it once, and it was okay, but it didn't turn out the way we wanted it," Lazare Rottach, graduate student in ceramics, said.

"The kiln project was basically a trial and error," he said. "We built the kiln to the specifications people said it should be, but one of the main problems was our control of the fire."

The fire endangered the 20 students working the kiln and produced strange results with the pottery, Rottach said.

This year, the project was more refined as the group decided to built a door for kiln.

"Building the door was a good idea, for it kept the sparks inside the kiln and also helped maintain higher temperatures necessary for the kiln's success,"

K-State group begins collection drive for shoes destined for Afghan women, children

By Kristi Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

John Harty and others are working to collect shoes for Afghan women and children at K-State.

After serving in the Peace Corps in Uzbekistan and hearing from a friend who served in the Peace Corps in Afghanistan, Harty has started to collect shoes for Afghan women and children.

Jeri Stroade, statistical and informational officer in the office of planning and analysis, said they started to collect shoes for women initially. After discovering there has been a proposed fitness facility in Kabul, they opened the shoe drive to children as well.

Boxes are located in the K-State Student Union, Seaton Hall 126, the International Student Center and Manhattan Christian College.

Harty said Tracee Kensley, MCC graduate, and Suzie Orebaugh, K-State alumni, were key in developing the idea. Both Kensley and Orebaugh have served in Afghanistan in the Peace Corps.

Harty, doctoral student in geography and president of the geography club, said after contacting his senators, Senator Tom Daschle, D-S.D., put him in contact with a person in Kansas City who offered to ship the shoes to Afghanistan for free.

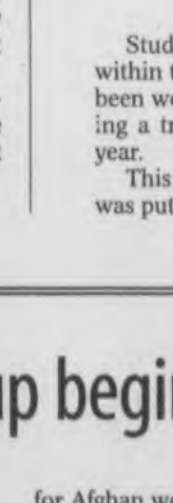
The program was initially kept low key, Harty said, but after finding out they could be shipped for free they started to push the idea.

"We've gotten quite a ways on the collections," Harty said. "We really started to push the program forward once we found out about the free shipping."

Stroade said the collection has gotten about 400 pairs of athletic shoes.

"I've been amazed by the amount people have donated," Stroade said.

The collection is sponsored by the Geography Club, Geography Honor Society, International Coordinating Council and the Women's Center.



Students interested in donating are asked to deposit the shoes in the designated boxes. Tennis shoes in women's sizes up to 11 and men's size up to 12 are being seeked.

"All we ask is that they tie the shoes together so they don't become lost," Harty said.

Breaker recalls
An Illinois company is recalling about 700,000 circuit breakers because of concerns they could lead to fire, the Consumer Product Safety Commission said Wednesday. The recall involves two models of electrical circuit protection devices.

Deer cautions
Drivers should be cautious this fall as increased deer mating routinely means more deer-related crashes, the Highway Patrol said. The Kansas Department of Transportation reported 9,108 deer-vehicle crashes in Kansas in 2003, causing 332 injuries.

Ballots salvaged
Labette County election officials found a curious solution to ballots jammed in an electronic scanner — a hair dryer. Election officials tried to fix the machine and called a technician, but a concerned citizen stepped up with her own idea.

Daschle ousted
John Thune, Republican senate candidate in South Dakota, beat Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle. Republicans were assured 55 Senate seats, strengthening their 51-48 margin, with one Democratic-leaning independent.

Students bowl to bash Bush, cream Kerry

COLLEGE PARK, Md. - Some came to cream Kerry, others to bash Bush. But they all had one thing in common: free popcorn and bowling.

Nearly 300 people showed up at the University of Maryland Stamp Student Union Tuesday night, long after the winding lines of voters were gone, to bowl in the Terp Zone bowling alley with lanes designated for students vying to "cream Kerry" or "bash Bush" and to watch the election results in the Hoff Theater.

Hamida Dar, an exchange student from Kenya, could not vote in the presidential election, but that didn't stop her from showing her support for Sen. John Kerry last night, bowling in the "bash Bush" lane.

As Dar rolled the rock in one of the four lanes designated pro-Kerry, she voiced her support for his international policies.

"He's more sensitive to what's going on," she said.

Dar was one of countless Kerry supporters filling the right lanes of the alley. A handful of George Bush supporters bowled in the four lanes to her left.

The voices of Wolf Blitzer and his CNN cronies blared from large televisions and competed with the din of falling bowling pins. Students faced the screens while seated in large green chairs as red and blue states flashed across the screens.

Election night festivities at the student union were meant to bring students together for the poll results, said Andy Mrusko, Union marketing coordinator.

"As long as students are together, rather than sitting in their rooms, it's a good thing, especially with the voter turnout upstairs," he said.

EATING DISORDERS ON DISPLAY

LINCOLN, Neb. – Potato chips, stacks of Mountain Dew and heaps of junk food are piled on the floor of the Rotunda Gallery in the Nebraska Union.

It's not an Election Day party – the display is to show the food and health-related images common in daily life, and the dangers these images pose.

Eating Disorders Education Prevention Student Association and SHINE, a peer program of EDEP, displayed visuals representing the progression of eating disorders.

One of the 17 members of EDEP, Vickie Kelty, said the exhibit might help encourage people to have positive images of themselves.

"I think it's great project (that) increases people's awareness," said Kelty, a senior news-editorial major.

The display is a combination of popular media images of men and women, distorted mirrors, prerecorded discouraging voices, information pamphlets and more.

ARIZONA HOLDS COURT ON CAMPUS

TUCSON - The Arizona Supreme Court will hear arguments at the University of Arizona on Thursday on Tucson billboards owned by Clear Channel Communications.

The annual visit is part of the Court's continuing outreach efforts to bring its courtroom activities to local communities and citizens across the state.

Tom Augerton, a public information officer for the Arizona Supreme Court, said the Court's visit to the UA's law school is an annual fall tradition.

Augerton said while the Court receives 1,200 requests to hear cases a year, the Court hears approximately 50 cases a year.

Toni Massaro, dean of the James E. Rogers College of Law, said the visit gives students a chance to see how the state's highest court works.

"We're very thankful to the justices and the litigants for providing the campus community with this insight into the workings of the Court," Massaro said.

CALLERS HANG UP ON LAND LINES

DEKALB, Ill. - Although Northern Illinois University provides a telephone in every residence hall room, these phones are being used less as cell phone use is on the rise.

"Over the past four years, NIUTEL has observed a steady decline in long distance calls made from residence hall phones," said Elizabeth Leake, associate director of ITS customer support services.

The decline is largely due to the increasing popularity of cell phones, because they are mobile and offer attractive free-nights-and-weekend packages, Leake said.

NIUTEL has generated less revenue due to more cell phone use, but they have not lost money, she said.

"We haven't been able to investigate as many new technologies or easily upgrade existing ones because we have less money to work with," Leake said.

While cell phone use is increasing, some students still use the residence hall phones, as there is no charge for "753" numbers.

"I think the best part of having the phone here is being able to call people [who] live in the dorms," said Jacklyn Trznadel, a freshman pre-elementary education major. "I'm not wasting my cell-phone minutes, which is good."

SCHOOL BOARD | USD-383 to close Roosevelt after 2005-06

know how many more children the district would receive from the additional soldiers.

She said if the school was immediately closed after the end of the 2004-05 school year, it wouldn't be prepared for an increase in the amount of children.

"I'm ready to look for a solution that buys us some time," she said.

Martin proposed that the board close the school in 2006 so they can plan for the future.

This proposal allows the board members enough time to monitor how many students will come in because of the increase of soldiers.

If the board decides not to close Theodore Roosevelt, they can rescind their vote.

Knopp said the decision to close Theodore Roosevelt in the future completes another piece of the budget puzzle.

However, the board made no decision on how to make up their $1.7 million deficit.

Some of the members raised the possibility of using all or part of the contingency fund, Associate Superintendent Bob Seymour said.

"It covers possible legal actions that could take a lot of money out," he said. "It has already been used to settle negotiations with teachers."

Seymour said the contingency fund has less than $1 million, more than $700,000 less than the budget deficit.

Soldan said the proposal would be risky.

"I'm concerned for how much is in the contingency for how much we need to accomplish," she said.

Other suggestions for making up the deficit included the possibility of a quarter cent sales tax or, if necessary, cutting programs from schools.

Pesaresi said the school board is facing problems that built up from previous school boards and a lack of support from Topeka.

"We are at the low end of the food chain," he said. "It falls down on us here."

In other business, the board voted unanimously in favor of not setting the salary for the new superintendent. Instead, the salary will be negotiated.

K-State accounting wins Pinnacle Award

By Karthik Reddy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Microsoft Business Solutions recently awarded the K-State Department of Accounting with the Pinnacle Award for Excellence in Education.

The Pinnacle awards honor Microsoft Business Solutions customers who have achieved outstanding success with their Microsoft Business Solutions applications.

The awards are presented in a variety of categories such as excellence in education, teamwork, innovation, and customer service.

Microsoft Business Solutions customers, partners and other team members nominate the recipients of the awards, said Stacy Kovar, associate professor of accounting.

The award was presented at the eighth annual customer conference of the company, Convergence 2004, she said.

"It is a great honor that provides opportunities to share course curriculum and connect with other people using the latest software to educate students," she said.

The Excellence in Education award is presented to customers who have improved the standard of their students' learning experience by integrating Microsoft Business Solutions products in their curricula.

The department was chosen for the award because of its innovative use of Microsoft Business Solutions, products such as Great Plains, in the classroom, Kovar said.

Great Plains offers interconnected business management solutions that allow small and medium sized companies to be successful in the interconnected economy.

"To be recognized by someone as important and big as Microsoft greatly enhances the University's reputation and gives us national exposure," said Richard Ott, head of the department of accounting.

He said the primary focus of the department would be to provide students with cutting edge technology in the classroom and familiarizing them with it.

Distance course offerings expand with Telenet 2

By Zin Zin Ting
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State is offering a few distance education courses from both the Manhattan and Salina campuses on Telenet 2.

Among the courses offered this semester from the Manhattan campus include grant writing and two business courses from K-State Salina, marketing and management concepts.

According to Susan White, coordinator of Kansas Regents Network, Telenet 2 is a Kansas statewide educational videoconference network. There are 25 Telenet 2 sites in Kansas. Telenet 2 can link to all 25 sites simultaneously.

"The purpose is to allow students from other parts of Kansas who cannot travel here to do courses at K-State. We are here in Manhattan and a number of people in Liberal want to take a course, and that is quite a distance to drive. They can go to our site in Liberal and participate," White said.

All 25 Telenet 2 sites are equipped with Polycom video conference equipment with remotely controlled camera, microphone and large monitors.

"The difference between classroom and Telenet 2 teaching is that the instructor can see every student in a classroom, while in Telenet 2, the instructor can only see one person at a time," White said. "If somebody has a question, he has to speak up and ask the question."

Furthermore, Telenet 2 is more structured, and advance planning is necessary.

"Sometimes instructors want to show students something in the last minute and the Telenet 2 setting makes it difficult to do that. You either have to show it on the overhead projector or send copies to students by mail beforehand," White added.

Currently, the primary users of Telenet 2 are the College of Education and College of Technology and Aviation.

White welcomed other colleges to conduct courses via Telenet 2 if interested.

David Stewart, assistant dean for Program Development and Marketing at the Division of Continuing Education, said he agreed that the main reason to do Telenet 2 on distance education is to allow students who live in other parts of Kansas to pursue education at K-State.

"We deliver courses through Telenet 2 to help people who work and have family responsibilities that restrict them from staying in Manhattan or Salina and take courses," Stewart said. "The advantage is to bring in people together in a group so that they can interact with each other, though they are physically in different locations."

He said Telenet 2 not only can be used in an educational setting, but also can be used in a company setting to conduct meetings and save on travel time and daily expenses.

However, he said one of the limitations of Telenet 2 is it cannot go to all the sites where the Internet can go.

Frederick Guzek, K-State Salina professor, said he also agreed Telenet 2 erases the distance between the students in the state and facilitates them in taking courses at K-State.

"I think the difference between Telenet 2 and other delivery methods is that students are more self-paced in Telenet 2," Guzek said. "Students have enough time to prepare before coming to class. Though there is no direct contact between the instructor and the students, the students have to either call or email the instructor if they have more questions after class."

TO THE POINT

Despite problems, election isn't without merit

This year's presidential election has come and gone. Absent from the 2004 vote were the major challenges, partisan drama and weeks of anxiety that plagued the 2000 election.

After the polls closed and the projection maps became inundated with red states, John F. Kerry conceded defeat yesterday morning with dignity and class.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

We should take pride in our electoral system, but we cannot let the system go unchanged if problems occur.

Multiple news outlets reported incidents of voting machine failures and efforts to discourage voter turnout across America. These incidents must be investigated and brought to a fair and proper resolution.

While there are many issues left to be debated and decided by the new Congress, as well as electoral practices that require review, there is much for which to be thankful.

The relatively quick close to the race between President George W. Bush and Kerry is one of those elements.

To echo the sentiments of NBC News anchor Tom Brokaw, one element stands out against all the others – the fact that our country endures through these tests to our democracy without resorting to military action in our own streets or other autocratic repressions.

Call to arms

History shows pacifism to be ineffective, for wimps

GRANT REICHERT

Lately on campus I've noticed a distinct hostility towards hostility. Nonviolence has bloomed this fall like some belated, ignorant flower.

Nonviolence has many forms (not punching, not kicking, not etc.), all of them defined in the negative sense. The truth is nonviolence can't even open a pickle jar, whereas violence, BAM!, can liberate those pickles with extreme prejudice.

Violence (applied three times daily in stabbing motions) is vitally necessary, as we are currently in the middle of World War 5 here – WW3 being the Cold War, and WW4, the defeat of the Macarena.

The War on Terror, a.k.a. Operation Assisted Martyrdom, like many other wars, by necessity involves much smiting, in this case smiting terrorists.

But, get this, I did some research on "nonviolence," and it turns out nonviolence never killed anyone. To be fair, it has gotten a lot of people killed, namely its adherents, but I consider this Darwinism in action.

There is much talk from pacifists (talk being something these people excel at) about the necessity of combating the root causes of terrorism.

I agree; tear terrorism out by the roots. Methinks this is a process that will involve much carpet bombing, random civil rights abuses, and Republicans.

"But Grant," you ask, "won't that just cause more terrorists to spring up and take the place of the old ones?" Yes, I agree, but here's the real beauty of my plan… we kill those terrorists, too! It's like the wonderful cycle of life, but thrown into reverse and with much smiteyness.

Don't get me wrong, there are circumstances where nonviolence is a good thing. For example, if the Nazis had been nonviolent, just think how easy they would've been to kill. There are even a few circumstances where limited nonviolence is required, such as to rest your punchin' arm or to celebrate Jesus' birthday.

Has nonviolence ever solved anything? Admittedly, there is the case of Israel, which is beating the intifada, in part, with … a wall. It's possible this just reflects poorly on either the martial prowess of the Palestinian terrorists, or their ability to operate ladders.

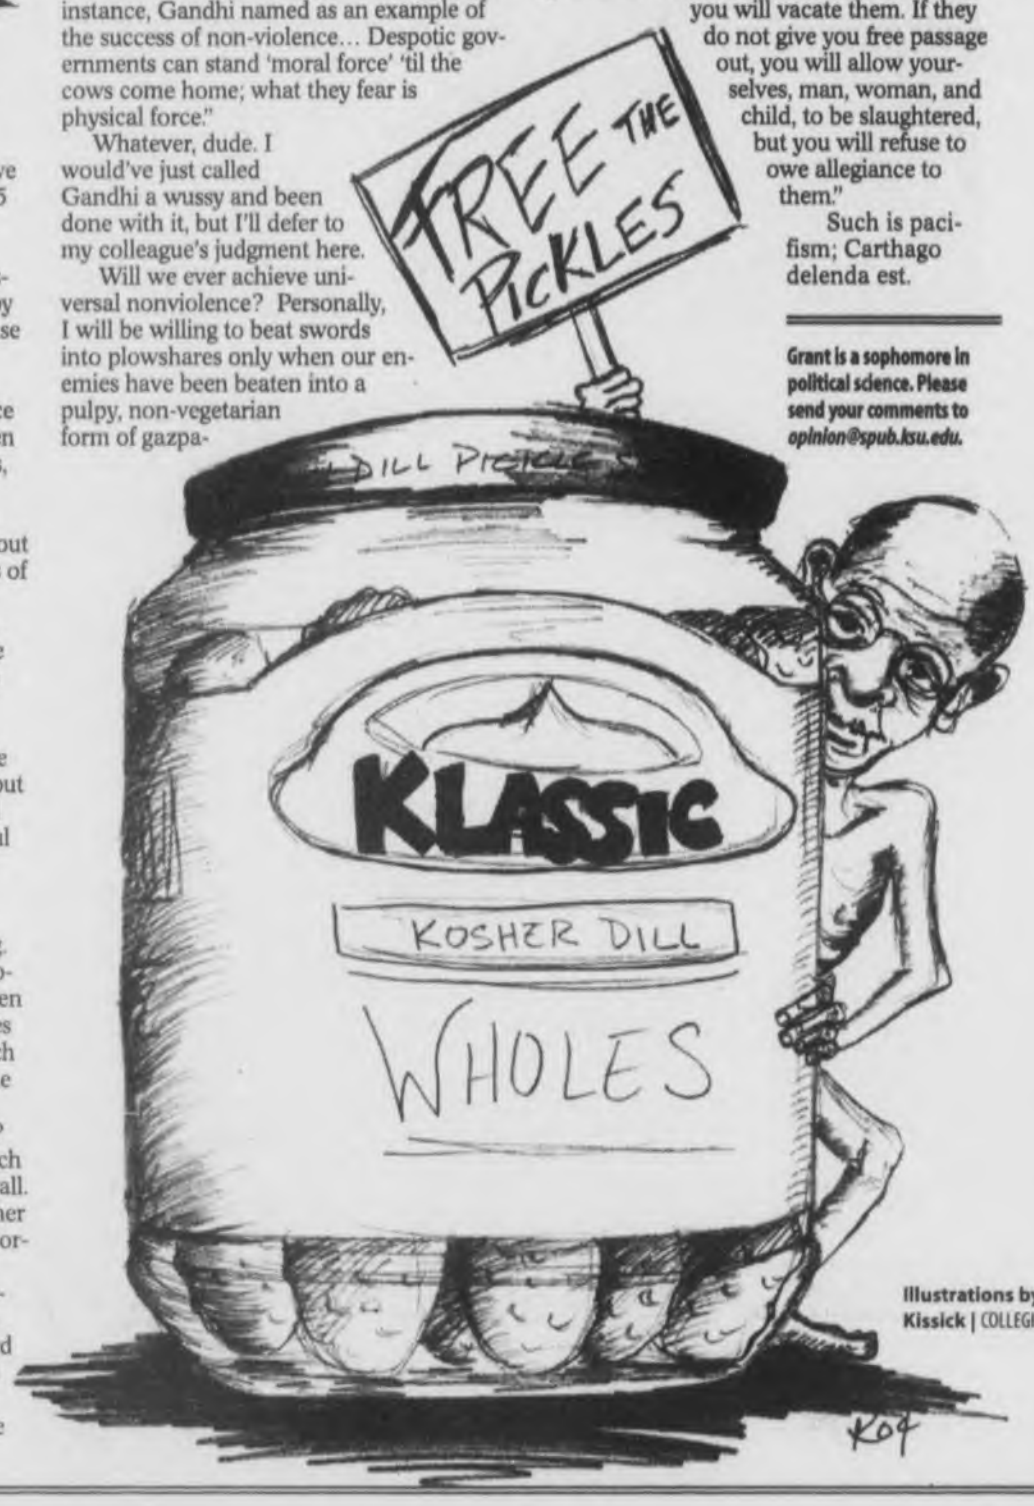
Now, I don't know whether it's the former or the ladder, but I tend to give them the benefit of the doubt and assume a third scenario: this is the meanest, most violent wall ever. Like if the Berlin Wall and the Great Wall of China made passionate love and produced a third wall, which then shot itself up with 'roids and trained with that guy from "Rocky."

Or maybe the intifada is just a wiener.

But what of Gandhi? Didn't he use nonviolence to devastating…er… nondevastating effect? I'll let my friend George Orwell, of "1984" fame, field that one:

"As an ex-Indian civil servant, it always makes me shout with laughter to hear, for instance, Gandhi named as an example of the success of non-violence… Despotic governments can stand 'moral force' 'til the cows come home; what they fear is physical force."

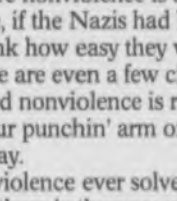
Whatever, dude. I would've just called Gandhi a wussy and been done with it, but I'll defer to my colleague's judgment here.



Will we ever achieve universal nonviolence? Personally, I will be willing to beat swords into plowshares only when our enemies have been beaten into a pulpy, non-vegetarian form of gazpacho, salt to taste.

As for those of you that think peace is always patriotic, here are some words from that sadistic bun pup Gandhi that show exactly what nonviolence entails:

"I want you to fight Nazism without arms… You will invite Herr Hitler and Signor Mussolini to take what they want of the countries you call your possessions... If these gentlemen choose to occupy your homes, you will vacate them. If they do not give you free passage out, you will allow yourselves, man, woman, and child, to be slaughtered, but you will refuse to owe allegiance to them."



Such is pacifism; Carthago delenda est.

Election coverage proves enlightening

JAMES HURLA

Finally, I had hit it big.

The Collegian sent me and a photographer to Washington, D.C., to cover President Bush's campaign party on election night.

This was it. I was a real journalist, up there with elite publications like the New York Times, Washington Post and University of Delaware's biweekly newspaper.

I realized quickly, though, that I was more similar to other college writers than I was to the professional powerhouses.

The Republican National Committee waited until the 11th hour to decide where it would host its campaign party. The RNC decided on the Ronald Reagan Building – perfect for the event, as it was close to the White House, named after a former president most revered for ending the Cold War and being dead, and it had enough room for as many as seven people.

Actually, it was slightly larger than that, but the 1,000 or so people were hand-selected by the Committee.

Apparently, the Collegian didn't make the short list.

What the event provided me with was a quick lesson in politics and media access. Despite repeated assurances that we would have no problem gaining access to the election party, the RNC had no obligation to let us in.

Finally, I had my first personal disappointment by a political figure.

But all was not lost – the photographer with whom I was traveling, Chris Hanewinckel, was able to gain access to the event. He says he talked circles around the volunteers and got the credentials he had been denied for two days before.

My theory is that he had to take off his shirt for someone.

Whatever he did, it worked. Chris gained access to the platform that had been reserved for only major media, and he spent the next dozen hours waiting for the election to produce a clear winner.

It did not, until Sen. John Kerry conceded defeat Wednesday afternoon.

The experience of a professional journalist was both agonizingly painful and wonderfully gratifying – like the time my first-grade crush kicked me in the groin.

I spoke with people who deal with the wretchedness of politics on a daily basis, and those who couldn't name the vice-presidential candidates. I met people from all along the political spectrum.

A nice young man told me that if Bush were to be re-elected, we would become a society similar to Hitler's Nazi Germany.

Another spoke at length about how confident he was that CNN commentator Wolf Blitzer was completely drunk throughout election night.

When the cable news networks projected Kerry had won New Jersey's electoral votes, a mostly drunk Congressional staffer stood up and announced the terrorists were winning. He then said he wasn't feeling well and told the rest of the bar patrons that he was going to go take a Democrat – a colloquial term he uses to signify a bowel movement.

As journalists, Chris and I tried to make the most of what was given to us on election day.

As Americans, each of us has to do the same.

James is a senior in print journalism and public relations. Please send your comments to opinion@spub.ksu.edu.

Thanks to Shanna Hajek, I'm going have to bring my boyfriend to the sidewalk in front of the English building the next time that I want to jump him in public.

I'm pretty sure I just saw Shanna Hajek and her husband making out in front of Kedzie.

I'm a student at Kansas State, but a Canadian citizen, and I've lived through four years of Republicans. I'm glad I'm graduating and going back to Canada.

I sure feel sorry for Mr. Hajek.

Fair weather flip-flop wearers, you disgust me. Flip flops are a way of life, not a fashion accessory!

George W. is my daddy. It's awesome to pick up the Collegian and see on the front page two things that are going for Kerry when you say that you're a fair, unbiased paper.

Yeah, I just saw a really fat guy on a light blue moped, and I think the tires are getting ready to pop.

If you have gas on your hands, don't pick your nose.

To cheer, or to vote, that is the question. Go, K-State cheerleaders.

He who waits longer, should get to park first. People need to learn their parking etiquette.

Honestly, who head butts somebody?

I think I just experienced hell on earth voting at the Leavenworth Senior Center.

I came to K-State for unbiased education. Obviously, the Collegian did not get the memo.

Hey Collegian! There are some Republicans that go to school at K-State.

Dishing the dirt on dirt

WILL KLUSENER

Last week I discussed the interesting topic of entomophagy, which is the practice of eating insects.

Well, I've discovered another, perhaps even more unusual practice.

It's geophagy, the practice of eating soil and clay. People around the world involve themselves in this practice, though most of this occurs in Central Africa and the Southern United States.

Why eat dirt? One can gain valuable nutrients and minerals from the lithosphere, and it is especially helpful for lactating or pregnant women.

Nutrients such as phosphorous, magnesium, copper, zinc, potassium, iron and manganese are found in this clay and are used to supplement their diets and provide the extra nutrition women's bodies crave while pregnant.

Many Americans still practice geophagy.

Children, according to Rosenberg, will often eat soil to fill a physiological need, but they are unwittingly ingesting harmful substances like laundry starches, ashes, chalk and lead-based paint chips.

This is often seen as a psychological condition and is known as pica. Now, mothers and mothers-to-be out there needn't worry, as this happens mostly in areas where basic nutrition isn't met on a regular basis.

As long as your kids aren't being sustained by McNuggets and Ding-Dongs, they should be all right. But if you just can't seem to get junior to quit stuffing his face with your yard, do him a favor and smoke it first. I hear it tastes marvelous that way.

There are also certain Native American tribes in the Americas that practice geophagy as well.

Clay is mixed with acorns and a nasty type of potato that can cause stomach pains and vomiting, according to www.uic.edu.

Naturally occurring tannic acid can be neutralized by alkaloid-binding minerals in the clay. It is assumed this knowledge was achieved by trial and error.

Geophagy isn't only a human practice either. Bears and many other hooved species in America eat soil. Studies where hooved animals were fed selected soils, growth was enhanced by 20 percent. Certain species of parrots in South America do it, too.

I've spoken with a number of people who are familiar with this practice, and it seems that geophagy has become quite a fad amongst many vegan circles.

Find a safe and reliable dealer, make sure the earth isn't cut with anything and sprinkle it over a salad or mix it in your vegetarian chili.

For vegans out there looking for a way to spice up your food life, try some fresh, chalky clay.

Will, senior in psychology, wants to hear from you. If you have any food related questions, e-mail him at edge@spub.ksu.edu.

K-STATE GRADUATE

Poets to rock the mic at Purple Masque Theatre

By Jessica Grant
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Slam poetry began as a way for dispossessed members of society to have their voices heard.

Tonight K-State students will have a chance to participate in a slam poetry reading, Kara Wilder, sophomore in speech communication, said.

The award winning K-State Ebony Theatre is sponsoring a spoken word poetry reading at 10 p.m. at the Purple Masque Theatre.

"It has an open mic format, and anyone can do it (read)," Wilder said. "It will be a slam poetry event."

Wilder said this is a first-time event, and each person will have five minutes to read original poetry.

Like hip-hop music, slam poetry is rooted in a political tradition that gives voice to the strife of people whose influence is not usually recognized by mainstream society, K-State graduate Nathan Jackson said.

"There have been festivals that focus on slam poetry, and it is a way for people to express themselves," Jackson said. "Originally, a lot of these poets came from inner cities and were frustrated because they felt that their voices were not being heard."

Jackson also said there was a connection between hip-hop traditions and slam poetry.

"There is a direct connection with slam poetry, the rhythm and rhyming sounds it uses, and hip-hop music," said Jackson.

Tyler Woods, senior in applied music, and president and director of Ebony Theatre, said this type of event is something the Ebony Theatre would like to do on a regular basis.

"Ebony Theatre would love to have a monthly event like the 'Spoken Word Poetry' to gain a standing on campus as another outlet for student expression," Woods said.

"This event also serves as a great outreach tool for Ebony Theatre to shed light on what it is that we do, raise social questions and promote our future auditions or performances on campus."

Woods said Ebony Theatre was established in 1977, and it is a collegiate theatre company dedicated to presenting works written by African American playwrights or works that deal specifically with the struggles and lives of African Americans.

Tiffany Lee, K-State graduate in theatre and business and former President of Ebony Theatre said interest had been lost in the organization until about seven years ago when she and former student Donna Davenport re-started the organization.

"We are supported by the theatre department and SGA, and every year we try to do a production," Lee said. "This year the production will be Mark Twain's 'Puddin' Head Wilson' and we try to get everyone involved, not just theatre majors."

Lee said that Ebony Theatre has thrived since its re-inception, and several members have since won awards and become nationally recognized.

"It's really gone well for us," Lee said. "We've taken trips to Winston-Salem, North Carolina for the National Black Theatre Festival, and some of our members have won awards for their work."

Wilder said that slam poetry is something that anyone can appreciate.

"It's a cultural experience," Wilder said. "Anyone can participate and enjoy slam poetry. It's an outlet that was created to give voice to minorities of society. I don't just mean racial minorities, but anyone was has ever been the underdog."

Slam Poetry History

- Formally began in Chicago in 1984 when construction worker and poet Marc Smith began reading poetry at the Chicago Jazz Club, the Get Me High Lounge.
- In 1986, Smith approached Dave Jemilo, the owner of the Chicago jazz club the Green Mill and began a weekly poetry competition on Sunday nights. The Uptown Poetry Slam is born, the name came from baseball and bridge terminology.
- Informally, slam poetry has roots in Black Panther history and is influenced by the work of poet Leroy Jones. The Last Poets were instrumental in shaping the genre.

Clapton gets honor from Buckingham Palace

Rock guitarist Eric Clapton set aside his guitar to become a Commander of the Order of the British Empire, or CBE.

The 59-year-old singer-songwriter described the honor — conferred by Princess Anne, daughter of Queen Elizabeth II, during a ceremony Wednesday at Buckingham Palace — as the "icing on the cake" of his career.

Clapton

But Clapton conceded that he would have found it hard to accept the honor, with all its establishment connections, earlier in his life.

"I had a rebellious streak in me," he told reporters after the ceremony. "As a kid I would not have been able to accept this. I was very immature about the way I looked at that. I was against the establishment.

"Now I have grown up, I really think it is an important thing to be able to set an example of some kind."

Harris torches EA Sports

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Coach Jim Wooldridge said he knew Lance Harris had talent and skill.

But even he was taken aback by the sophomore guard's performance Wednesday night in Bramlage Coliseum.

"What'd he score? Twenty-six? Yeah, that's a bit of a surprise," Wooldridge said.

Yes, Harris did score 26 points, as the Wildcats defeated the EA Sports All-Stars 71-59 in an exhibition game.

Harris was on fire from the floor, hitting 10-of-15 shots, including 4-of-8 from 3-point land.

Starting in place of injured sophomore transfer Fred Peete, Harris wowed the crowd with three dunks on the night.

One in particular showcased Harris' athletic ability.

With just over three minutes remaining in the first half, and K-State holding a 29-19 lead, senior forward Jeremiah Massey

Cats beat Cyclones 3-1

The women's volleyball team knocked off Iowa State Wednesday night, winning on the road in four games, 30-26, 25-30, 30-20 and 30-25.

The No. 18 Wildcats improved to 15-7 overall and 9-4 in Big 12 Conference play, as they prepare to clash with No.3 Nebraska in Lincoln on Saturday. The Cyclones dropped to 8-15 overall and 1-13 in the Big 12.

Coach Suzie Fritz said her team did several positive things but struggled at times against the Cyclones, especially in the game two loss.

"There were two things that caused most of our problems: defending their left-side attack and break downs in our passing game," Fritz said. "The combination of those things led to our inability to side-out at times.

"We did a better job as the match went, getting in a side-out rhythm and making things happen off medium and bad passes."

Senior outside hitter Vali Hejjas led the Cats with 21 kills on .315 hitting, and senior setter Gabby Guerre had her fifth career triple-double and first of this season, finishing with 48 assists, 11 digs and 10 kills.

Fritz said she was pleased with Hejjas' clutch play.

"Vali was our high-efficiency player tonight," Fritz said. "In tough situations, we went to her. She was a bright spot tonight."

Freshman libero Angie Lastra put up another outstanding performance with 31 digs – the best mark for a four-game match in the Big 12 this year. Junior Agata Rezende had her first career double-double with 10 kills and 10 digs, and middle blocker Lisa Martin had another 10 kills and eight blocks.

Fritz said she was pleased with her team's ability to improve and make adjustments during the course of the match, particularly with the defense against Iowa State's left-side attack.

"It did get better as the match progressed," she said. "We weren't doing a good job of making adjustments, and then we started doing a better job of defending their offensive kills."

Ultimately, Fritz said the match was another chance to improve and get a quality win away from home.

"The positive thing was we put together a good effort against a very aggressive serving team on the road, and we were able to do some things late to get the win."

Tamar Kvaratskhelia returns a volley during practice at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex. Kvaratskhelia opened up her first season at K-State winning 11 straight matches, her first loss came in the Round of 16 at the ITA/Wilson Region V Championship last weekend. Kvaratskhelia holds the record for best freshman fall record at 11-1.

Tennis team readies for Thunderbird Invitational

By Stacy Ryan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After a slight bump in the road, freshman tennis player Tamar Kvaratskhelia is ready to get back on the wining side of the game.

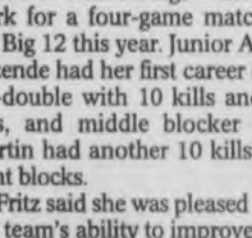
Kvaratskhelia opened up her first season at K-State winning 11 straight matches – the longest winning streak from a Wildcat beginning her career since senior Maria Rosenberg's 6-1 start her freshman season.

Kvaratskhelia's first loss came in the Round of 16 at the ITA/Wilson Region V Championship last weekend, but Kvaratskhelia still holds the high-mark for best freshman fall record in K-State history at 11-1.

Coach Steve Bietau said Kvaratskhelia's performance so far is just an indication of what is to come.

"It shows that she can be a very good player, and she still has the capacity to play better," Bietau said.

Kvaratskhelia said she is happy with her record so far but would have liked to have gone 12-0.



"It was really hard when I lost that match, and I was really upset about it, but my team helped me to feel better. Now, I need to focus and get better," Kvaratskhelia said.

Kvaratskhelia's tennis career began early in her life. She started playing tennis when she was seven, at the request of her father.

"I didn't like it when I started, but then in my first

Dumb comments made by fans serve humorous ends

MICHAEL ASHFORD

The K-State football season is coming to an end, and sadly, my Wildcats have not been as strong as I had hoped.

In order to entertain myself during the games that have been less than enjoyable – Fresno State, Oklahoma, Texas – I have turned to listening to the comments in the student section as a way to amuse myself.

I have come to the conclusion that a majority of the comments spewed during the games are the result of two things: alcohol and sheer stupidity.

One example happened Saturday against Texas Tech. The outcome of the game was still in doubt, so one would think the students would stick behind their team and try to cheer them on. Then, cornerback David Rose gave up a pass on third down to keep the Red Raider drive alive, and a chorus of shouts came from behind me that blew my mind.

"Jesse Tetuan sucks," a slightly-inebriated fan said.

"We are never going to win with Tetuan on defense," his buddy next to him said in return.

I couldn't understand how Jesse Tetuan was responsible for a bad play Rose made. Tetuan wasn't even on the field.

I turned to them and pointed out how Tetuan had not been in the game. They explain to me how everything that goes wrong this year must be Tetuan's fault.

I half expected those guys to blame Tetuan for the interception quarterback Dylan Meier threw in the second half.

Another one of my favorites lines came at the end of the first half, as K-State was running a two-minute offense in hopes of scoring a touchdown before halftime. For the last play of the half, quarterback Allen Webb was inserted in the place of Meier, and the verbal venom was released upon the K-State coaching staff.

"Unbelievable," one guy said to his girlfriend. "Our coaches must want us to lose this game, because Webb couldn't make a throw downfield to save his life."

First, to say the coaches were trying to lose is ludicrous. Second, had this "fan" been watching the game, they would have seen the nasty hit Meier took on the previous play and realized the coaches didn't want to risk another hit, who hasn't exactly been healthy this year.

I will admit, there are some comments that make me laugh. Most of these come from the female population of students. Sorry ladies, but you say some things that just crack me up.

A girl who sat behind me during the Nebraska game cheered the loudest every time Darren Sproles touched the ball.

It is completely understandable. Darren Sproles is a great football player.

Then, after a long run by Sproles down to the one-yard line, she turned to her friend sitting next to her and explained why she loves Sproles.

"He is the cutest thing when he runs," she said. "I just love how his cute little legs look when he is running."

I think my stomach hurt until the end of the game from laughing so hard.

While not all comments border on insane and extreme stupidity, I would ask students to make the final home game against Iowa State an enjoyable one for the players and for the fans who still support this team.

Keep the dumb comments to yourself, and if you have something bad to say, just think about Sproles and his "cute little legs."

MCBB | Weiser announces jerseys to be retired

K-State Director of Athletics Tim Weiser announced Wednesday three former Wildcat basketball All-Americans will have their jerseys retired.

Bob Boozer, Ernie Barrett and Jack Parr's jerseys are to be retired at halftime of the Colorado basketball game on Feb. 5, 2005.

Boozer was a two-time first-team All-American in the '50s, Barrett led the Wildcats to the NCAA Championship game in 1950-51 and Parr still holds the two best single-season rebounding averages in K-State history.

WCBB | Wildcats ranked No. 18 in coaches poll

The USA Today/ESPN coaches poll, released Wednesday, ranked K-State women's basketball No. 18 in the country, tied with Boston College.

In 2002 and 2003, K-State was ranked No. 5 in the preseason.

K-State is one of five conference schools selected for the poll this year. Texas is No. 3, Baylor is No. 8, Texas Tech is No. 9 and Oklahoma is No. 25.

MCBB | Missouri Tiger basketball reprimanded

Missouri's basketball team was placed on three years' probation Wednesday for NCAA recruiting violations but avoided a ban on postseason play.

Snyder

The infractions committee took away one scholarship next year and two in 2006-07 and limited all basketball coaches to recruiting on campus until November 2005.

The penalty prevents coaches from visiting high schools, making home visits, attending summer camps and even giving speeches at high school awards banquets. Yeager said the ban had not been imposed since 1990 when Illinois' basketball team was punished.

Missouri chancellor Brady Deaton said the school would not appeal.

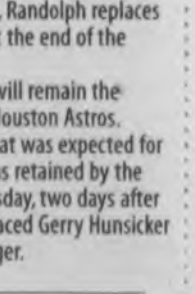
Coach Quin Snyder said he hoped the Tigers would still be competitive in recruiting because of the school's new $75 million arena.

MLB | National League gets 2 new managers

Charlie Manuel will be the next manager of the Philadelphia Phillies, replacing the fired Larry Bowa, baseball officials told the Associated Press Wednesday night.

Manuel

Willie Randolph was hired Wednesday night by the New York Mets, taking over as manager of a troubled team trying to compete with its crosstown rival for success, free agents and fans.



A six-time All-Star who was a coach with the New York Yankees for the past 11 years, Randolph replaces Art Howe, fired at the end of the season.

Phil Garner will remain the manager of the Houston Astros.

In a move that was expected for weeks, Garner was retained by the Astros on Wednesday, two days after Tim Purpura replaced Gerry Hunsicker as general manager.

NFL | AFC names Holmes October player of the month

Priest Holmes, who leads the NFL in rushing and scoring, was named the AFC offensive player of the month for October.

Holmes

Holmes was instrumental in the Kansas City Chiefs going 3-1 last month and getting back in the AFC West race.

"We're all pleased," said Chiefs fullback Tony Richardson. "If anybody in the NFL deserves it, it's Priest."

Over the past four games, Holmes has rung up three 100-yard rushing games, totaling 482 yards and nine touchdowns on 106 carries. He has also caught 10 passes for 170 yards and one touchdown.

POTTERY | Potters gain unique experience with kiln

Rottach said.

Approximately 20 KSU Potters Guild and art department members began loading and starting the fire Friday night. They continued revamping the fire overnight until Saturday afternoon.

Lynette Rathers, junior in ceramics and metals and jewelry design, said the group had use a truck-full of wood for the fire.

"There must be enough wood to get the fire to build up to our goal temperature, around 2,383 degrees," Rottach said.

Participants continue feeding the fire every three minutes throughout the night. To ease the workload, the people rotated in 30-minute shifts.

Yesterday the pottery was released from the kiln to cool down. Today, the artists get to see their results.

Participating in the wood kiln firing is a unique experience, Rathers said.

"It is very anti-technology, and I think we are using very ancient techniques, so I found that fascinating," Rathers said.

"This experience was something deep to us all," Lutterman said.

ELECTION | Victory affirms Bush's campaign style

pored over election results and sadly determined that the GOP base was bigger, more rural, suburban and Hispanic than they had ever imagined.

They looked within their own party, and found plenty of Democrats to blame – Kerry, his running mate John Edwards, their layers of consultants and legions of former Bill Clinton aides. The jockeying began in earnest for the 2008 race, with Edwards signaling his ambitions by pressing Kerry to wage a legal fight for Ohio. Democrats love to fight the GOP, particularly those Democrats who vote in primaries and caucuses.

"You can be disappointed, but you cannot walk away," Edwards told supporters at Kerry's concession. "This fight has just begun."

Supporters of Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton, herself a potential candidate in 2008, accused Edwards of posturing.

Kerry himself showed no signs of exiting the political arena. "I'll never stop fighting for you," he told backers.

Still, it was a grim day for Democrats.

Party strategists had longed hoped to supplant their political losses in the Midwest and South with growth in the Hispanic-rich Western states, but those plans were put in doubt Tuesday night. Exit polls suggested that Bush had increased his minority share of the Hispanic vote since 2000.

One-third of Hispanics said they were born-again Christians and nearly 20 percent listed moral values as their top issue, suggesting they have more in common with Republicans than Democrats.

The election also vindicated Bush's unorthodox strategy of governing from the right and then targeting his voters with a volunteer-driven organization run through his campaign headquarters. Kerry played to the center and relied on a loosely knit conglomerate of liberal groups who paid get-out-the-vote workers.

Americans Coming Together, the Media Fund and other liberal special interest groups spent more than $200 million to defeat Bush. Kerry spent tens of millions more, and what did he get? Just one state won by Bush in 2000, New Hampshire, switched to the Democratic column this year.

Young voters didn't increase their turnout as Democrats had hoped. Neither did blacks or union members, two keys to the party's base.

Bush, meanwhile, saw a surge in rural and evangelical voters, according to strategists on both sides. The rural vote, once reliably Democratic, swelled in size and supported Bush over Kerry.

In Ohio, exit polls suggested the rural vote increased from 15 percent of the electorate in 2000 to 25 percent on Tuesday. Rural voters backed Bush over Kerry 60 percent to 40.

In Ohio and Florida, the two most important states Election Night, Democrats said they met their turnout targets, only to see Bush's forces trounce them. They said state ballot measures to ban gay marriage may have driven GOP voters to the polls.

The most stinging defeat was in Ohio, which may no longer be considered a swing state. With 232,000 jobs lost under Bush and state voters uneasy about Iraq, it was as ripe as it will ever be for Democrats, strategists said.

Ohio's 20 electoral votes gave Bush 279 in the Associated Press count, nine more than the 270 needed for victory.

stole the ball and led a two-man fast break with Harris. Massey hit Harris with a pass, Harris returned the favor and then, Massey lobbed the ball up for the 6-foot-5 guard.

Harris slammed it home.

"I knew Jeremiah was going to do that," Harris said. "Jeremiah's that kind of guy. He wants to see stuff like that."

Massey, who had a solid night of his own with 13 points, nine rebounds and four assists, said he did not doubt Harris' ability to make the high-flying play.

"He's one of our most athletic players on this team," Massey said. "I knew he'd go up there and get it, so I had no problems throwing it up to him."

Harris' production did not stop with scoring. He also added seven rebounds and a game-high three blocks.

Besides Harris and Massey, the Wildcats had several other bright spots on the night.

Sophomore Cartier Martin had 10 points, freshman guard Clent Stewart dished out five assists in his first start and the team was 11-of-13 from the free-throw line.

Wooldridge said he did see the team fall back to some of its mistakes it made in October during the Wildcats' four-game exhibition tour in Canada.

"I thought some of the things we did in Canada popped up again," he said. "Sometimes our shot selection was poor. Some of our recognition was poor, and we got sloppy with the ball."

The Wildcats wrap up exhibition play against Division-II Pittsburg State at 7 p.m. Nov. 11 in Bramlage Coliseum.

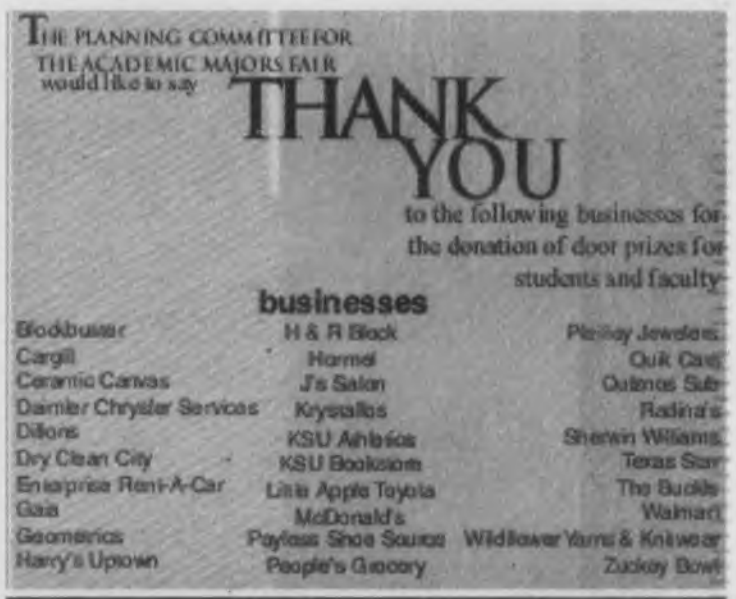
tournament I got third so that got me a little more excited about it, and I got into it more. In my second tournament, I got first and that's when tennis became my life," Kvaratskhelia said.

Rosenberg said Kvaratskhelia contributes to a positive environment and she helps to push the rest of the team to higher levels.

"She is very competitive and intense in practice which helps to make practice better. When she competes hard, everyone else raises their level because we want to keep up with each other," Rosenberg said.



This weekend's tournament will feature four Wildcats in Tempe, Ariz. at the Thunderbird Invitational. Along with Kvaratskhelia and Rosenberg will be junior Jessica Simosa and freshman Olga Kilmova. The athletes will be facing opponents from the Pac-10, Mountain West and WAC conferences, all of which are very strong with players ranked in the top 50 of the ITA preseason rankings.

Bietau said the level of play will be high and will give them good opportunities to improve.

"We are always looking for improvements, and this tournament will give those four exposure to some good players. Every time they get on the court they have the chance to learn something new, and it will give them a good opportunity to take steps forward," Bietau said.

Kvaratskhelia said she has been practicing by working on her stamina and focus and an already impressive record.

"I just want to keep getting better and show what I can do," Kvaratskhelia said.

Arafat's condition worsens amid death rumors

Arafat
PALESTINIAN LEADER

By Lara Sukhtian
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CLAMART, France – Yasser Arafat was reportedly fighting for his life Thursday at a French military hospital after losing consciousness, as anxious Palestinian officials transferred some of their 75-year-old leader's powers to Prime Minister Ahmed Qureia.

Doctors at Percy Military Training Hospital outside Paris, where Arafat was airlifted last Friday after more than two years of confinement in the West Bank, quashed a swirl of reports that he had died. But the French doctors would not say much else, and confusion ruled as Palestinians issued conflicting reports about Arafat's condition and how close to death he was.

Outside the hospital, some 50 well-wishers held a vigil late into the evening. Some held candles, others portraits of Arafat. A large Palestinian flag hung from the hospital's outer wall.

"It tears your heart up," said Mahmod Nimr, a 36-year-old unemployed Palestinian. "I can't see someone taking his place."

In an emergency meeting in the West Bank town of Ramallah, the PLO executive committee empowered Qureia to deal with urgent administrative and financial matters in Arafat's absence, said committee member Qais Abdel Karim.

Qureia also will meet with security chiefs in the Gaza Strip on Friday to ensure that no internal conflict erupts in the volatile area at a time of uncertainty, a Palestinian official said.

A prolonged Arafat incapacitation – or death – could have profound impact on the Middle East. There are fears of unrest among Palestinian factions, which Arafat, viewed as a national symbol by even some who opposed him, was largely able to prevent. Furthermore, chaos in the West Bank and Gaza could make any cooperation with Israel even more difficult.

On the other hand, Israel and the United States have in recent years shunned Arafat as a terrorist and an obstacle to peace, and his replacement by a new leadership could open the door to renewed peace talks. Such a scenario could affect Israel's plans to pull soldiers and settlers out of the Gaza Strip in a move not coordinated with the Palestinians.

Arafat's chief of staff, Ramzi Khoury, called an Associated Press reporter to say the Palestinian leader was alive but that his condition was grave.

"I am standing next to the president's bed, he is in grave condition," Khoury said.

The problem with pests

Fall beetle infestations on the rise

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Swarms of beetles have been pestering Manhattan residents this fall.

The Multicolored Asian Lady Beetle, also called lady bugs or lady bird beetles, are looking for a place to get warm, and they are choosing neighborhood homes.

Jeff Whitworth, extension specialist in entomology, said this is a usual occurrence for the beetles.

"It's what they do this time of year," he said. "They look for suitable over-wintering sites."

However, Whitworth said he has received more calls than ever from residents who are complaining about the beetles.

"I've gotten several calls where people say they are just swarming homes," he said. "They really aren't a pest, but they are a nuisance."

Whitworth said the beetles also have been biting people.

"It's not a dangerous bite. It's just an irritant," he said.

The abundance of beetles this year has to do with the weather, Whitworth said.

"The cool, damp weather this summer allowed for good growing conditions and lots of plants, " he said.

Plentiful crops have allowed aphids to strive, which is the lady beetles' food of choice.

According to the Ohio State University Extension Fact Sheet at the Web site ohioline.ag.ohio-state.edu, the beetles were first introduced in the United States as early as 1916.

However the Multicolored Lady Beetles, or harmonia axyridis, didn't became a permanent fixture in the United States until after tens of thousands of the insects were released by the U.S. Department of Agriculture during the late 1970's and early 1980's.

In the beetles' native home of Asia, they typically hibernate along cliff faces in cracks and crevices, according to the OSU Extension

Online directory gaining favor

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

New online student directories are gaining popularity across the nation. The most popular Web site, thefacebook.com, has connected more than 200 universities and 604,967 registered student users since its launch last winter.

And their numbers continue to grow, said Chris Hughes, Harvard student and site press representative.

"A group of us here just started the site at Harvard, and now we are getting up to 13,000 students to register in a day," he said. "We are the largest site of our kind to date, with our closest competitor reaching up to 1/10th of number of users we have."

Sarah Cossidente, freshman in hotel and restaurant management, believes the site is informative and fun.

"I look at the site every day, because there are more people added on," she said. "I really like seeing the pictures and personal information of students from not only KSU and other universities."

Thefacebook.com incorporates sections where students can fill out personal information, including academic classification, messenger screen-names, sexual orientation, birthday, residence, extracurricular activities, political views, high school and course schedule.

For those concerned about releasing information, all information placed on the site is strictly voluntary. There are no requirements other than one's involvement in the university.

"I was a little hesitant about telling people everything about me," Michael Denning, freshman in kinesiology, said. "I decided to not release my address."

Another feature of the site directory is the ability to post a photo, Hughes said.

At the click of a button, users can be connected to other students at the university or across the country who may have the same common interests.

Elise Gaines, freshman in communicative sciences and disorders, said she has also gained from the Bush vows to focus on unifying America during 2nd term

By Terence Hunt
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – Contending Americans have embraced his conservative agenda, President Bush pledged Thursday to aggressively pursue major changes in Social Security, the tax code and medical malpractice awards, working with Democrats if they are receptive and leaving them behind if they're not.

"I earned capital in the campaign, political capital, and now I intend to spend it," Bush said a day after a decisive victory that made him the first president in 68 years to win re-election and gain seats in both the House and Senate.

"I'll reach out to everyone who shares our goals," said Bush, who 24 hours earlier had promised to try to win over those who voted for his Democratic opponent.

Buoyant and relaxed on Thursday, Bush cracked jokes at his first postelection news conference and said he had not decided on any changes in his Cabinet for the second term. He took congratulatory calls from world leaders from Russia, Poland, Iraq, Afghanistan, Israel and Italy before flying to Camp David for four days of rest after the grueling campaign.

As U.S. forces in Iraq mobilize for an all-out offensive in Fallujah and other Sunni militant strongholds, the president refused to say how much the war would cost or whether he planned to increase or cut troop strengths. "I have yet to hear from our commanders on the ground that they need more troops," the president said. He is expected to ask Congress early next year for up to $75 billion for Iraq, Afghanistan and operations against terrorism.

1 | FEELING INCREDIBLE?

A family of superheroes is out to save the day and make for one "incredible" moviegoing experience.

"The Incredibles," Pixar's latest animated film, chronicles the adventures of a family of undercover superheroes who go up against an old nemesis. The movie features the voices of stars such as Craig. T. Nelson (formerly of TV's "Coach"), Holly Hunter, Samuel L. Jackson and Jason Lee.

The movie, rated PG for action violence, opens today in theaters nationwide.

2 | SHOWDOWN IN THE SHOW-ME STATE

All eyes are on K-State's football team as the Wildcats travel to Columbia, Mo., to play the University of Missouri.

K-State's 35-25 loss to Texas Tech last week now leaves the Wildcats no room to make mistakes — if the Cats lose another game, they blow their chances at a bowl game this winter. Before this year, according to kstatesports.com, the Wildcats and the Tigers had met at the end of the season for six consecutive seasons.

Kickoff is at 11:40 Saturday at Faurot Field in Columbia. The game will be broadcast on Fox Sports.

3 | SONGS IN THE KEY OF PURPLE

Music lovers will enjoy two days full of song this weekend.

The K-State Singers and Men's Glee Club, directed by Gerald Polich, will perform at 7:30 tonight in McCain Auditorium. Both groups have traveled nationwide extensively, performing at universities and other venues across the country.

On Saturday, the Flint Hills Choral Festival will take place from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. in All-Faiths Chapel.

Both events are sponsored by K-State's Department of Music.

4 | OH, GROW UP

This weekend's After Hours, sponsored by the Union Program Council, will help fine-tune your dance skills and give you a belly laugh in the process by making you feel like a kid again.

After Hours tonight features belly dancing at 9 p.m. in the K-State Student Union Courtyard; after getting exercise, take a bit of culture with you by getting a Japanese tattoo or making origami figures.

All of that dancing and folding paper probably will make you hungry, so grab some free nachos before you head off at midnight to Forum Hall to watch "13 Going on 30," a teen-aged comedy about a young girl whose dream of being older really comes true.

All After Hours events are free and open to the public.

Senators hear advising concerns

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Senators on Thursday heard concerns during the first open session about advising in the College of Business Administration.

Ryan Windsor, senior in management, gave a presentation on what he said were inadequacies in the advising offered by the college.

The College of Business of Administration has roughly 600 students per adviser, and Windsor said colleges like Agriculture, Human Ecology and Architecture, Planning and Design all have adviser-to-student ratios considerably lower.

He advocated students be given full-time advisers once they declare a major. Currently, juniors and seniors are given "academic mentors" after they declare but still have to share the full-time advisers with the freshmen and sophomores.

Windsor said they may not be able to get the ratios down below 40 students, but it would still be better than the current situation.

"Even having 40 students would be better than fighting off all 600 of them," he said.

In other business, senators debated the amount of money to be allocated to agricultural honor fraternity Alpha Zeta to fund its annual fall event, a lecture by K. Russell Weathers titled, "Own Your Assets."

The Allocations Committee recommended $992.80 for promotion of the event, including three ads in the Collegian, as well as $100 for posters.

Arts and Sciences Senator David McCandless said he felt the allocation was too much.

McCandless said in his years on Senate he had only seen a few allocations of more than $350 for promotions and offered an amendment to allocate only $350.

Agriculture Senator Nick Levendofsky said he thought they should receive the full amount.

"They have one big event each year, and this is it," Levendofsky said. "I think we need to give them the full amount."

Eventually, the body agreed on an amount of $486, and the bill passed on special order.

Event compares history, film

By Melissa Baier
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Tonight marks the first night of a series that explores Hollywood film depictions of historical events versus their historical accuracy.

The History Graduate Students' Organization is hosting this year-long program not only to educate but also to highlight the interesting aspects of history said Jonathan Berhow, president of the organization.

The first Friday of every month, the Department of History will highlight a different movie. The first film is "The Patriot," starring Mel Gibson. It will be shown at 7 p.m. tonight in 15 Eisenhower Hall.

These viewing sessions are free and open to the public.

"This is an opportunity to have fun and to learn more about history for ourselves and undergraduates. It's also to raise awareness of what the history department at K-State is doing. Hopefully, it will be something that will appeal to a broad range of people in order to get them interested in history," Berhow said.

The film will be followed by discussion hosted by Michael Ramsay, associate professor of history, with commentary from both attendees and graduate students, said Sue Zschoche, professor and chair of the of history department.

"This really is a wonderful opportunity for students. I can't overemphasize how hard the members of the graduate organization have worked to put this together. This program was their idea and will be implemented by them," Zschoche said.

The history department is interested in presenting more than just military history, Berhow said. They are planning to show films that exhibit other societal issues, such as "Mississippi Burning," which depicts the United States during the racial revolution.

"We'll have a professor there to talk about racial issues and historical representations of how we remember the civil rights movement. We'll discuss racial attitudes of the time, which will hopefully appeal to more people," Berhow said.

These viewings and discussions are intended to dispel some historical inaccuracies or misconceptions Zschoche said.

This project, however, isn't simply to dismiss artistic liberties taken by Hollywood directors. As Berhow said, history is ever changing.

Veterans Day events to include parade, meal

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Flint Hills Veteran's Association will kick off its Veteran's Day celebration Sunday with the fourth annual Salute to America Sunday afternoon program.

Lowell Jack, special projects chair for the coalition, said the event is only part of an entire week of celebration organized by the group.

Dick Jepsen, former chair of the coalition, said they have been organizing Veterans Day events since the early '90s when a monument commemorating those who died in World War II was removed from the courthouse and not replaced.

Jepsen said the events are designed to celebrate the end of wars, as well as commemorate those who serve our country.

"Each war has its own characteristics, even today's army of non-draftees, I'm sure their glad to get out of fighting," he said. "The other part of it is to try to inform the public of the sacrifices and what all the guys had to go through in the different eras and the different events that went on."

In addition to the celebration and other veteran's day activities, Jack said the organization traveled to nursing homes and presented veterans living there with American flags.

The event Sunday will be at Manhattan City Auditorium, 1101 Poyntz Ave. It will include patriotic music, performances by individuals from K-State, Manhattan High School and others from the Manhattan community. Open to the public

1 | FEELING INCREDIBLE?

A family of superheroes is out to save the day and make for one "incredible" moviegoing experience.

"The Incredibles," Pixar's latest animated film, chronicles the adventures of a family of undercover superheroes who go up against an old nemesis. The movie features the voices of stars such as Craig. T. Nelson (formerly of TV's "Coach"), Holly Hunter, Samuel L. Jackson and Jason Lee.

The movie, rated PG for action violence, opens today in theaters nationwide.

2 | SHOWDOWN IN THE SHOW-ME STATE

All eyes are on K-State's football team as the Wildcats travel to Columbia, Mo., to play the University of Missouri.

K-State's 35-25 loss to Texas Tech last week now leaves the Wildcats no room to make mistakes — if the Cats lose another game, they blow their chances at a bowl game this winter. Before this year, according to kstatesports.com, the Wildcats and the Tigers had met at the end of the season for six consecutive seasons.

Kickoff is at 11:40 Saturday at Faurot Field in Columbia. The game will be broadcast on Fox Sports.

3 | SONGS IN THE KEY OF PURPLE

Music lovers will enjoy two days full of song this weekend.

The K-State Singers and Men's Glee Club, directed by Gerald Polich, will perform at 7:30 tonight in McCain Auditorium. Both groups have traveled nationwide extensively, performing at universities and other venues across the country.

On Saturday, the Flint Hills Choral Festival will take place from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. in All-Faiths Chapel.

Both events are sponsored by K-State's Department of Music.

4 | OH, GROW UP

This weekend's After Hours, sponsored by the Union Program Council, will help fine-tune your dance skills and give you a belly laugh in the process by making you feel like a kid again.

After Hours tonight features belly dancing at 9 p.m. in the K-State Student Union Courtyard; after getting exercise, take a bit of culture with you by getting a Japanese tattoo or making origami figures.

All of that dancing and folding paper probably will make you hungry, so grab some free nachos before you head off at midnight to Forum Hall to watch "13 Going on 30," a teen-aged comedy about a young girl whose dream of being older really comes true.

All After Hours events are free and open to the public.

Senators hear advising concerns

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Senators on Thursday heard concerns during the first open session about advising in the College of Business Administration.

Ryan Windsor, senior in management, gave a presentation on what he said were inadequacies in the advising offered by the college.

The College of Business of Administration has roughly 600 students per adviser, and Windsor said colleges like Agriculture, Human Ecology and Architecture, Planning and Design all have adviser-to-student ratios considerably lower.

He advocated students be given full-time advisers once they declare a major. Currently, juniors and seniors are given "academic mentors" after they declare but still have to share the full-time advisers with the freshmen and sophomores.

Windsor said they may not be able to get the ratios down below 40 students, but it would still be better than the current situation.

"Even having 40 students would be better than fighting off all 600 of them," he said.

In other business, senators debated the amount of money to be allocated to agricultural honor fraternity Alpha Zeta to fund its annual fall event, a lecture by K. Russell Weathers titled, "Own Your Assets."

The Allocations Committee recommended $992.80 for promotion of the event, including three ads in the Collegian, as well as $100 for posters.

Arts and Sciences Senator David McCandless said he felt the allocation was too much.

McCandless said in his years on Senate he had only seen a few allocations of more than $350 for promotions and offered an amendment to allocate only $350.

Agriculture Senator Nick Levendofsky said he thought they should receive the full amount.

"They have one big event each year, and this is it," Levendofsky said. "I think we need to give them the full amount."

Eventually, the body agreed on an amount of $486, and the bill passed on special order.

Event compares history, film

By Melissa Baier
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Tonight marks the first night of a series that explores Hollywood film depictions of historical events versus their historical accuracy.

The History Graduate Students' Organization is hosting this year-long program not only to educate but also to highlight the interesting aspects of history said Jonathan Berhow, president of the organization.

The first Friday of every month, the Department of History will highlight a different movie. The first film is "The Patriot," starring Mel Gibson. It will be shown at 7 p.m. tonight in 15 Eisenhower Hall.

These viewing sessions are free and open to the public.

"This is an opportunity to have fun and to learn more about history for ourselves and undergraduates. It's also to raise awareness of what the history department at K-State is doing. Hopefully, it will be something that will appeal to a broad range of people in order to get them interested in history," Berhow said.

Veterans Day events to include parade, meal

The Flint Hills Veteran's Association will kick off its Veteran's Day celebration Sunday with the fourth annual Salute to America Sunday afternoon program.

TO THE POINT

Bush should use re-election to unite, not divide

During the campaign leading up to the 2000 presidential election, George W. Bush promised Americans he would work to be a uniter, not a divider.

His first term in office has shown him to be just the opposite, polarizing the nation with questionable foreign policy and embracing wedge issues founded more on religious dogma than the nation's best interests.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

In a speech outlining his focus for the next four years, President Bush emphasized more domestic issues, including Social Security, taxes and education, as well as emphasizing his willingness to work in a bipartisan effort with Democratic members of Congress.

While those much-needed domestic reforms are necessary, Bush must improve upon his previous record to truly make a difference.

With a clear victory in the Electoral College and the popular vote, President Bush should not use his "political capital" to continue the polarization of American politics, but instead to bring together a country in need of unity.

MONDAY'S OPINIONS

JEREMY PARKER

Jeremy Parker writes about the little known musician Wesley Willis.

JONAS HOGG

Jonas Hogg provides a different perspective on campus parking.

Unconventional studies

Courses in parking, real-world issues should become norm

For all you Oprah fans out there (you know who you are): you're in luck – or at least you would be if you were students at the University of Illinois in spring 2001, where "History 298: Oprah Winfrey, the Tycoon" was taught.

The class focused largely on the economic aspects of Winfrey's career, and after completing the class, the majority of the students appeared on Winfrey's show. Not a bad way to end a class, I would say.

LETA REPPERT

This isn't the only unusual course offered in recent years. In fact, in the spring semester, the University of North Carolina will offer "Examining 'American Idol' Through Musical Critique." In addition to learning music history, students will watch the show twice a week.

I would prefer a course in learning how to win "American Idol," but nobody asked me.

The University of Texas offers a class in the Czech language which includes taking a field trip to a brewing company. I bet low attendance isn't a problem in that class.

The University of Iowa offers a class called "Elvis as Anthology." So get out your blue suede shoes, Elvis fans.

Canada has been getting in on the fun, too, and the University of Victoria offers a course on the literature of hockey. ABC13.com quotes Doug Beardsley, the English professor teaching the course, as saying that "hockey is 'so much a part of us' that its absence, for Canadians, is 'like losing a limb.'"

Not to be outdone, K-State offers some unique courses of its own.

One of these is "Harry Potter's Library," taught by Dr. Phillip Nel, who, according to the "Shameless Self-Promotion" section of his Web site, is the author of a reader's guide to the Harry Potter books as well as a book titled "Dr. Seuss: American Icon" and "has been quoted or featured in dozens of media venues" (which I would list, but that would take up the rest of the column–although some might think that would be a good idea).

Another interesting class offered at K-State is "The History of Baseball in American Culture," taught by Dr. Robert Linder. The course description says that its field of interest ranges from the major leagues to music and politics.

UFM also offers a few courses that can be taken for K-State credit. These include scuba diving, belly dancing, gencing, boxing for women, and judo. A complete list can be accessed at www.ksu.edu/ufm.

With these courses in mind, I have a few of my own I'd like to propose:

Parking 101. Students would learn parking etiquette, lot selection (considering time constraints, distance to class, etc), and when it is best just to walk.

Real World 010. This course would include cooking classes, laundry lessons (including washing, drying and folding), and would address the question of how frequently it is necessary to vacuum.

Caution! The answer to this last issue is a bit more complicated than it sounds, depending largely on the theory of relativity (i.e. how dirty is really dirty) and is directly proportional to how soon your relatives are coming to visit.

Unfortunately, I doubt my suggestions will be implemented any time soon, but we do have a pretty interesting course list to choose from in the meantime.

Well, I've got to run to class; intro to underwater basket-weaving starts in five minutes.

Inconvenience worth it for voting

For the record, I did not want to write about the election for my column this week.

I wanted to write something whimsical, something apolitical, something that did not mention Bush, Kerry, or the horrors of pregnant chads and an undeterminable electoral winner.

ABBY HILES

But as it happens, that was really all that was going on this week: An election was counted down to the last absentee ballot. Ohio nearly became the new Florida.

And two arguably qualified men waited while the nation decided who was to lead us through the next four years.

So frankly, I'm exhausted.

Not from lack of sleep due to staying up half the night on Tuesday to watch six different networks display six different electoral counts, but exhausted after my own personal wait in the election line.

I stood in the Riley County Senior Center for almost an hour and a half to vote on Tuesday. All of that time I could have been doing something constructive, but I waited to fulfill my civic duty with a dull pencil and receive my highly coveted "I Voted" sticker.

Being a proud voter, I showed up a little before 9:30 a.m. to cast my vote. I figured that I would be one of the few at this hour, considering that people in Manhattan work, have class, or are lazy and wait until an hour before the polls close.

But I was wrong.

Already by that time there was a line of nearly 50 people in the Senior Center. We were all snaking around the front desk, dining tables and magazine racks with "Arthritis and You" pamphlets in them.

About half way through the line I had to stop myself from ...ing at the calendar behind th... ceptionist, since it was sponsored by a local funeral home and two advertising majors as they discussed not knowing the difference between serif and sans serif fonts.

When I finally reached the voting room, I spelled my name for the nice lady, even though she pronounced it wrong, and proceeded to mark my ballot.

My first vote as a Democrat.

And did it make a difference?

I think so. I would like to think that my Democratic vote made Kerry's percentage in Kansas jump just a little. Obviously not enough, though, considering nearly all the networks called Kansas in favor of Bush before our polls even closed. But just the same, my vote counted... my vote made a difference.

So, although I wasted half of my Tuesday morning, I am proud of my own contribution to the political process. I may be partially disowned from the Republican side of my family and from my hometown for siding with Kerry, but at least I put myself out there and voted my conscious.

Plus, by voting at all, I got the right to complain about whatever I feel the need to in the next four years.

Maybe that's the silver lining in the voting process. I only had to wait an hour and a half to be rewarded with four years of justified grumbling and nitpicking.

And my guy didn't even win.

I don't know about you, but I find it severely refreshing to wake up in a comforting Republican world.

Now that Bush has won, do we have to read any more comments or columns from Collegian staff and the Mercury about Kerry? Please stop it. Please, please stop it.

Hail to the chief, you hippie liberals, four more years with Bush, yeah baby.

God help us all, Bush is back.

Yes, this is for Logan Adams. You know what, we don't want you in our party. You go vote for Kerry, and you spend the rest of your life in the Democratic party, and we could care less. Thank you.

Four more years! Eat it, hippies!

I only wish our president were able to admit his mistakes as bravely as Logan Adams did yesterday.

Instead of four more years with a question mark on the first page, it should say four more years with an exclamation point.

I'm getting out of this country before it gets blown off the map because the American people are stupid enough to elect a warmonger president who thinks the country is an island unto itself.

Quit your yakking, homecoming is over.

To whoever owns the cat in the Delta Chi house: It pooped in my mouth, and I will get that cat.

John Kerry is so "conceded."

Hey Collegian, who's your daddy? That's right, it's G.W. Bush.

I just saw my gay gynecologist in the student union, and that bothers me.

I'm glad that everyone that voted for Bush won't have a place to send their kids because he's gonna close all the schools. But hey, at least you can feel safe from terrorism. Oh, wait.

Four more years of Bush will be like four more years of syphilis.

There's a movie coming out next year based on Avril Lavigne's "Sk8er Boi" song, and it's called "Sk8er Boi." She should be nominated for an Oscar. lol.

Stop whining, Pi Phi, homecoming's over.

The three most hated groups on campus: the FIJI's, the Phi Delts, and the parking Nazis.

To the guy who eats in Kramer at 6:50 on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday: SHUT UP. No one wants to hear what you have to say.

Well, here's to four more years of hell.

Hurrah!

Just want to let you know that we know who took our duck, and we're coming for you.

Hey Kerry, why the long face?

I wonder if George Bush is even remotely concerned about the fact that 50 percent of the country wanted him gone.

I'm moving to Canada.

How many times has a Bush been the President? How many times has one of those Bushes been in a war.

Wow, four more years. I wonder who we're gonna bomb next.

Hey Collegian, too bad your candidate lost.

If you want more money, don't cry for tips. Get a real job!

Hey Democrats, who's your daddy?

To the cute blonde I bumped into at the Union doors... I'm sorry; not sorry for bumping into you, sorry for not meeting you.

Oil paintings on canvas (left) and charcoal on paper (right), pieces of art by Constance Ehrich, will be on display with pieces by other artists at the Strecker-Nelson Gallery starting today and continuing through Jan. 14, 2005. The exhibit titled "Nature Morte: Alive and Well," displays new paintings by 10 new Kansas landscape painters.

Still life on display

Group of artists comprise latest exhibit at Strecker-Nelson Gallery

By Tony Herrman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For the first time ever, a Strecker-Nelson Gallery exhibit is featuring a group of still-life artists instead of one particular artist.

The exhibit also includes a group of area landscape painters and ceramic artists.

"It would take the pressure off the artists," gallery owner Barbara Nelson said of the decision to do the group exhibit. "A group landscape exhibit is something we haven't done for a long time, and we haven't ever done a group still life exhibit."

Nelson said the exhibit is a holiday show (it runs until Jan. 15), and customers can take the art home as soon as they buy it since there are 11 still-life artists, 10 landscape artists and other pieces waiting to replace those that are sold.

Nelson said the art is also more affordable than usual. One reason for this are a plethora of small paintings, but the exhibit does have a variety of painting sizes.

"Looking at all postage-stamp sized paintings is really boring," she said.

The exhibit title, "Nature Morte: Alive and Well," is a commentary on the status of still life, Nelson said. "It's not passé, painters paint paintings for different reasons.

"Most people think still life's are all wine bottles and oranges," she said. "Nature Morte" includes still life's of such objects as a carburetor, Mr. and Mrs. Potato Head and even one that combines aspects of both still life and landscape.

"These artists are exploring what it means to do still life," she said. "They are going beyond how students set up a still life for drawing classes.

Connie Ehrlich painted Mr. Potato Head. Her objects also include toys of the Pillsbury Doughboy, Jolly Green Giant and Scooby Doo.

"I like mimetic objects, which are objects that mimic nature," Ehrlich said. "Right now I'm using toys from when I was younger and putting them in positions like real people."

One of her paintings, "Dirty Rotten Scoundrel," is of Little Sprout and Mr. Potato Head. Little Sprout stole several of Mr. Potato Head's appendages.

Ehrlich's contribution to the summer exhibit at Strecker-Nelson was a series of paintings focusing on lingerie.

"It makes people laugh," Ehrlich said of her art. "Humor is not always popular in art, but I like to do things that are more whimsical.

"The few people we've had in here, since we were closed on Monday and Tuesday, have been amazed."

Lisa Grossman is one of the landscape artists. She said her paintings are "plein air" the French term for "open air," and her landscapes are of the Flint Hills.

For Grossman, the group exhibit is a good change from the solo exhibit.

"We all love to have solo shows, but it takes a very long time to fill a gallery," she said. "It takes me nine months to a year to create the art, and I work pretty fast.

"Personally, it's a good way to get exposure, but not have all the pressure to fill the large space."

Warning signs of rejection often can be easy to spot

This past Sunday, Halloween night, my friends and I went out for some adult trick or treating (aka bar hopping in Aggieville).

LACEY STORER

Hoping for some Halloween excitement, we headed to Rusty's.

It wasn't very long before we were approached by a guy looking for conversation. We talked to him as we ordered our drinks and then excused ourselves as we went to find a place to sit. The guy followed and continued to try to make conversation, which none of us were getting into.

The situation was repeated when another guy came and tried the same thing. Again, my friends and I talked to him for a few minutes, but the conversation wasn't going anywhere.

These guys were nice enough and weren't ugly or anything, but none of us were really feeling it for them. We were polite, but after a few minutes of making strained conversation, we were shooting glances at each other saying "please go away."

What made the situation even worse was these guys kept coming back for more of the same. They'd talk to us, go away for a few minutes and then come back to us. By the second or third time we were all wondering if they were ever going to get the hint.

The world of dating isn't a series of guaranteed successes, sadly enough. Not everyone you hit on is going to respond the way you want them to. When they want to you to get away, they will send out signals telling you to stop while you're still ahead.

It's not always easy to spot these signals, especially when you've been drinking a few and it's sometimes hard to spot anything. Here are a few things people of the both sexes claim to do when they want you to back off:

1. THEY DON'T LOOK YOU IN THE EYES.

This is a universal signal that they're not paying attention to what you're saying. If they're looking around the room trying to see what everybody else is doing, give up because they're not really there. Or they could feel bad about not liking you, so they can't look you in the eyes.

2. THEY DON'T MOVE THE CONVERSATION ALONG.

If the person you're hitting on is giving short answers, or barely answering at all, then they're not engaged in the conversation. They have no desire to learn about you or let you learn about them.

3. THEY BRING THEIR FRIENDS INTO IT.

If they've been talking to you for a few minutes, then try to make their way back to their friends, then they're not interested. If they were, they would stay and talk longer, knowing they could easily call

Yoko Ono has No. 1 song on U.S. dance chart

Yoko Ono isn't known for her voice, but it's still a hot commodity. The famously off-key singer and wife of John Lennon has the No. 1 single on the dance chart.

Ono

"Everyman../ Everywoman... (Basement Jaxx Club Mix)" is a mix of techno beats and her screeching vocals. It's her second No. 1 dance song this year.

Ono says once she allows someone to remix her song, she is hands-off and gives them rein to create beats and rework the song.

Ono, 71, is already working on her next single, a version of "Give Peace a Chance." She says she's putting contemporary beats on it and she updated the words after the Sept. 11 attacks.

John Mellencamp to perform at Thanksgiving

John Mellencamp will perform at halftime of the Thanksgiving game between the Detroit Lions and the Indianapolis Colts.

Mellencamp

Mellencamp will perform for the NFL and the United Way on Nov. 25. He'll sing "R.O.C.K. in the U.S.A." and his new single, "Walk Tall." Accompanying Mellencamp on "Walk Tall" will be singer-producer Kenneth "Babyface" Edmonds.

The theme of the halftime show will be "Join the Team: Millions of People Giving Back in Hundreds of Ways to Celebrate One America."

Perry steps up on kickoffs

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Every Saturday, No. 36 for the K-State Wildcats puts some of the most vicious hits on opposing players fans will ever see, but you won't find him on offense or defense.

Freshman linebacker Marcus Perry is making a name for himself on the Wildcats' kickoff team by sacrificing his body every time down the field, taking opposing players with him.

"I'm one of those guys that will go down there and take a hit for hit and take out as many guys as I can," Perry said. "I'm wired enough that if you told me to go run through a brick wall, I probably would end up going and doing it."

A former quarterback and linebacker at Rockhurst High School in Kansas City, Mo., Perry came to K-State as a walk-on hoping to win a spot on the roster after leading his high school team to an undefeated season and a state championship.

Perry said he had other offers to play football, but chose K-State for the engineering school and a chance to play Division-I football.

"One was for school, and I wanted to play for a top program," Perry said. "I figured if I was going to play, I could have a chance here, and they gave me a chance. So I decided to come here."

In his first season on the field, Perry has registered three tackles and is continually adjusting to the higher level of football.

"It's kind of like starting all over again," Perry said. "It's a little bit different level than high school, but overall, I think I'm doing a pretty good job for myself coming in as a walk-on."

Before every kickoff, fans can find Perry lined-up next to senior kicker Joe Rheem, bouncing around and getting teammates fired-up for their 10 second war.

Perry said once the ball is set, he scans the opposing team for weaknesses.

"I go through all their alignments. I look at them and usually pick out somebody staring at me or who looks a little bit uncomfortable, and after Joe kicks that ball, it's a full go and a full adrenaline rush, and nobody gets in my way," Perry said.

Linebackers' coach Chris Cosh said it is that type of attitude that will earn the 6-foot-1, 210 pound Leawood, Kan. native a spot at linebacker.

"He's been very productive, especially on our kickoff team," Cosh said. "He's a guy that moved to linebacker and I think has a future there and he is improving daily as a linebacker. You don't see that now, but you can see some of the things he can do in the kicking game."

Like many of his coaches, players have also noticed Perry's work on special teams. Freshman holder Marcus Watts said Perry is going to have a bright future for the Wildcats.

"Marcus is a great guy," Watts said. "He's a competitor, and he loves to go out there and hit people. He's crazy, I'll give him that. He'll be a good football player at K-State."

K-State looks to Sproles

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For the first time in his four-year career at K-State, Darren Sproles looked to be human.

In the first three conference games this season, Sproles rushed for 61, 73 and 34 yards. Going into the Nebraska game two weeks ago, Sproles had only one touchdown in conference.

Those rushing numbers did not come close to the 292 yards he racked up in the last non-conference game against Louisiana-Lafayette.

Slump or not, his numbers were a far cry from what many expected from the preseason Heisman Trophy candidate.

Then, against Nebraska, Sproles got back on track against a Husker defense that was ranked No. 2 in the nation against the run.

Sproles popped the Huskers for 135 yards and two touchdowns, in the Wildcats third straight win over Nebraska.

Some said Sproles was in a slump, but Coach Bill Snyder said he did not believe that.

"I don't think Darren was ever in a slump," Snyder said. "The numbers aren't always as you would like for them to be, but I don't think it was Darren that was in a slump. We'd been in a slump collectively – a major slump."

Senior offensive lineman Mike Johnson said the offense made a commitment to the running game, and Sproles made the most of his opportunity.

"Its just one of those things where we know we have to run the ball to win," Johnson said. "I don't know if we've really done anything different or if it's just been him. He's a guy who's just going to make plays."

Last Saturday, Sproles rushed for 83 yards and two scores.

Offensive coordinator Greg Peterson said Sproles' play recently has been what everyone has been accustomed to seeing.

"Any time you put the ball in his hands, he's going to perform," Peterson said.

The Wildcats take on Missouri this Saturday, who are No. 9 in the nation in total defense, but are giving up 146 rushing yards per game this season.

Peterson said for the team to do well, Sproles must play well.

"When Darren Sproles is on top of his game, that means we're going to play well offensively.

"If we do that, we'll like the results," Peterson said.

Wildcats, Tigers clash in must-win

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

If K-State loses Saturday, it will fail to be bowl-eligible for the first time since 1992.

These are the stakes when the Wildcats play the Missouri Tigers at 11:40 a.m. in Columbia, Mo.

K-State (3-5, 1-4) comes off a 35-25 loss to Texas Tech last Saturday that has put the Wildcats in a situation where they must win their final three games of the season for a chance at a bowl game.

Coach Bill Snyder said earlier this week he told his squad its focus should be on the team it will line up against Saturday.

"My message to our football team is not win three or else," Snyder said. "It's get better, and get ready for this week."

The Tigers (4-4, 2-3) are almost in as much of a precarious position as the Wildcats. Missouri is on a three-game slide, losing at Nebraska last weekend 24-3.

Missouri Coach Gary Pinkel's play-calling and use of versatile junior quarterback Brad Smith have been questioned for most of the season. He also found himself wrapped up in controversy when he suspended tailback Damien Nash for negative comments he made following the Tigers' 20-17 loss to Oklahoma State.

But Nash, the Tigers' leading rushing with 610 yards and seven touchdowns, returns Saturday, and K-State coaches and players said they are not thinking any less of Missouri even with its recent struggles.

Concern especially centers around containing Smith. The junior enters the game with 1,568 yards passing and 435 yards on the ground. However, Smith's 54.6 completion percentage is almost six points down from last season, and he's already thrown seven interceptions.

Though the Wildcats have had success in the past against Smith and his overall numbers are down so far this season from a year ago, linebackers' coach Chris Cosh said the quarterback is still a big-time threat.

"He's the kind of guy that he can go from second gear to fourth without hitting third," Cosh said.

On defense, the Tigers should challenge the Wildcats as well.

The Missouri defense is No. 3 in the country defending the pass and is No. 9 in total defense.

Snyder said he's been impressed with the Tigers' defense this season.

"It's certainly apparent they're not tentative," Snyder said. "They are a very aggressive football team, and I think they play very well up front. They're a very physical front four and at the same time athletic."

There is little doubt – it's all on the line this weekend. Sophomore safety Maurice Mack said motivation to win goes beyond keeping postseason hopes alive.

"We've got to go out and win this game just for us," Mack said. "It's not about the bowl game, its not about the conference championship, it's about us and our pride."

Men's crew team prepares for season's end

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN

K-State's men's Novice A crew team practices Thursday evening at Tuttle Creek Lake. The team will compete on Sunday in Wichita, Kansas.

By Kelly Olson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State men's crew team is different.

Not only different in the fact that rowing does not take place on a court or field or that there are women on the men's crew club. There is an unique aura within the mentality, competition and reward that comes with being a rowing competitor at K-State.

"It's one of the harder sports, both mentally and physically," said Amy Thornburrow. "It holds a very unique atmosphere."

Thornburrow, freshman in pre-journalism, is the coxswain for the novice team. As coxswain, she acts as the "voice" of the boat and is in charge of steering. She is also one of the few women on the team.

The club wraps up the fall season with two regattas. The Frostbite Regatta will be Sunday in Wichita, Kan., and the Marathon Rowing Championships will be Nov. 13 in Natchitoches, La.

Club president Michael Lesko, senior in computer information systems, said the team has done very well this fall.

"We have had a rather strong year, particularly from our novice crew, who has medaled in every race, and a strong showing from the varsity crew who has medaled in two regattas," he said.

When the team concludes its season, the members will move into winter training, which will consist of working out on rowing machines, weight lifting and other forms of cardiovascular training.

"Our spring season will consist of two-kilometer races, as opposed to our five-kilometer

Taking on tradition

Volleyball team to face Nebraska

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The volleyball team will walk into a wall of history and tradition this Saturday when it takes on Nebraska at the Nebraska Coliseum in Lincoln.

One of the most storied programs in collegiate volleyball, the Huskers have won two national championships and have amassed an incredible 413-30 record at home since the program began in 1975.

Coach Suzie Fritz said the Husker tradition is a model of where the Wildcats would like to be one day.

"They have a longer-standing tradition of success than we have here," Fritz said.

"I think we have a tradition now. I'm proud of that. But I think we're still in the early phases of building a perennial power or a tradition that is everlasting."

But while Nebraska has been the traditional powerhouse, K-State has come on strong in recent years. Last year, K-State beat the Huskers in Lincoln and Manhattan on its way to the Big 12 Championship.

Nebraska has just three losses to conference opponents at home, but two of those defeats have come at the hands of the Wildcats.

However, in their first meeting this year, Nebraska beat K-State 3-1 in Manhattan.

Senior Gabby Guerre said she is ready to play the Huskers again.

"Both teams get really fired up to play each other," Guerre said. "I don't feel intimidated when I go into other peoples' gyms. I go to play volleyball."

Nebraska (20-1, 14-0) is ranked No. 3 and is led by freshman Sarah Pavan, who averages 4.49 kills per game on .320 hitting. Sophomore Amanda McCormick averages 4.56 digs per game, helping the Huskers lead the league in digs.

Fritz said the Huskers' balanced attack is her biggest concern.

"Generally, teams that are very good at digging are also very good at blocking and very good at serving, because all of those components are tied together pretty closely," she said. "I don't know if I'm all that concerned about them being a good digging team as much as I am them being a great serving team and a great blocking team. I think it's all just a package that goes together."

K-State (15-7, 9-4) is led by senior Vali Hejjas, who leads the team with 3.67 kills per game. Freshman libero Angie Lastra has continued her stellar play, as she paces the team in digs with 4.20 per game.

Junior Agata Rezende, coming off her first career double-double against Iowa State on Wednesday, said the team will need to stay focused if they are to pull out a win Saturday.

"We just have to be focused on our side of the net with good passes, good sets and good hits," Rezende said.

"We are getting better every day. I think it's going to be an awesome match."

Fritz said some problems the Wildcats had in the first match against Nebraska this season have hopefully been fixed.

"I think our biggest difficulties (in the first match) came from our inability to defend tips and not being able to sustain a high level of play over a period of time," Fritz said.

"I like to think we've made some changes to remedy that. Time allows us to improve on some of those things."

Women's golf team strives for routine

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The women's golf team wrapped up its fall season earlier this week with a 10th place finish in Kiawah Island, S.C., at the Edwin/Watts Palmetto Intercollegiate. Although the season was not as successful as the Wildcats anticipated, Coach Kristi Knight said it was anything but disappointing.

"This season was an eye-opener and good learning experience. We all know what needs fixing," Knight said. "I know the players are going to do everything to improve individually, and I'll do everything to help them improve."

Inconsistency proved to be the main problem for the Wildcats this fall, Knight said, as the team struggled with putting together a complete tournament. Despite solid individual finishes, the Wildcats failed to place in the top three of any tournament this season, while last fall they finished in the top three of all but one.

"There is definite talent on this team," Knight said. "We just failed to all come together and play well in one tournament."

Freshman Kali Quick, who led the Wildcats at the Palmetto with a 14th place finish, agreed that inconsistency has been a challenge this season but is optimistic it will improve in the spring.

"We were all getting to know each other this season, and I think the spring season we'll develop more of a routine," Quick said. "We know that we are all capable of shooting low rounds, we just need to put it together."

Senior team captain Sarah Heffel said even though the season has been frustrating, overcoming obstacles together has brought the team closer together.

"It's been difficult this season, because we can't really pinpoint what's going wrong," Heffel said. "We've really bonded through all of our struggles, though."

As Knight looks ahead, she said there were positives taken from every tournament.

For one, all three freshmen qualified for at least one tournament, which according to Knight, is crucial.

"Our freshmen all traveled and did well," Knight said. "The experience will pay off in the spring and the future."

However, the greatest overall strength Knight said she attributes to this year's team is their competitive spirit. The Wildcats' ability to keep battling is always impressive, Knight said.

"The girls are always playing hard – there is never a round where their effort is in question," Knight said.

"They always give 100 percent."

WCBB | Media picks Cats third; Wecker top player

Big 12 Conference media have tabbed the K-State women's basketball team No. 3 in the conference in a poll released Thursday.

Wecker

The Wildcats were picked behind No. 1 Texas and No. 2 Baylor. K-State did snag two first-place votes.

Senior forward Kendra Wecker was named the Big 12 Preseason Player of the Year in the poll. Wecker already was named preseason player of the year by conference coaches.

Baylor's Sophia Young and Texas' Jamie Carey, Tiffany Jackson and Heather Schreiber joined Wecker on the All-Big 12 Media Team.

Wildcat seniors Laurie Koehn and Megan Mahoney earned honorable mention honors.

MCBB | Cats picked No. 8 in preseason media poll

Big 12 Conference media picked the K-State men's basketball one spot higher than the coaches, as the Wildcats were slotted at No. 8 in the conference in the preseason media poll released on Thursday.

K-State earned three more points (65) than Nebraska (62) to take the eighth spot. Kansas was tabbed as the conference's top team, with Oklahoma State picked second and Texas rounding out the top three.

Kansas forward Wayne Simien was named Big 12 preseason player of the year and was joined by teammate Keith Langford, Iowa State's Curtis Stinson and Oklahoma State's Joey Graham and John Lucas on the All-Big 12 Media Team.

CFB | Spurrier out of consideration at Florida

If Steve Spurrier decides to coach again, it won't be at his alma mater.

Spurrier

Spurrier withdrew his name from consideration Thursday to replace Ron Zook, saying his time at Florida has passed.

The announcement relieves any reservations boosters and school officials had regarding Spurrier's potential return. It also opens up a coaching search that was widely considered Spurrier's to lose.

The Gators won six Southeastern Conference championships and the 1996 national title under Spurrier. He posted 122 victories in 12 seasons, tormented opponents with his offensive flair and witty one-liners, and left town with the best winning percentage in league history.

Zook, hired in 2002 after Spurrier left to coach the Washington Redskins, was fired last week after the latest in a series of embarrassing losses — a 38-31 defeat by lowly Mississippi State.

Spurrier quit the Redskins after two losing seasons, and indicated last week he would consider a return to Gainesville.

Olympics | 2006 Turin Games organizer resigns

The chief organizer of the 2006 Turin Olympics is quitting in a power struggle with the Italian government, just 15 months before the start of the Winter Games.

Valentino Castellani, head of the organizing committee known as TOROC, said Thursday he will submit his resignation at a Nov. 24 board meeting.

Castellani said he was undermined by the government's nomination of Mario Pescante, culture ministry undersecretary and former head of the Italian Olympic Committee, as overall supervisor for the Feb. 10-26, 2006 games.

Pescante's appointment was confirmed in a meeting in Rome on Wednesday.

TOROC has come under sharp criticism for a $227 million budget shortfall. The games also have been hindered by a lack of public awareness and enthusiasm in Italy.

International Olympic Committee president Jacques Rogge met with Italian Premier Silvio Berlusconi last month to press the government to step up support for the games and encourage state companies to sign up as sponsors.

Pilots in training get their wings

By Nathan Ryerson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Thirty-seven K-State-Salina students have earned a variety of pilot and flight ratings.

The ratings they receive are based upon the number of hours of flight time they complete. They start from a minimum of 35 hours to obtain a private pilot certificate, to a multi-engine instructor, which requires pilots must have 15 hours of twin-engine training, receive an endorsement from their flight instructor and pass a practical exam demonstrating their skills in this type of aircraft. A multi-engine instructor trains other pilots desiring a multi-engine rating.

"Private pilots can fly with passengers in good weather, day or night," said Kristen Magette, coordinator at K-State-Salina in the Department of Salina Public and Alumni Relations.

A majority of the students earning their ratings at K-State-Salina are from Kansas, but some were from out-of-state, ranging from Arizona to Indiana.

As one might suspect, students spend hours upon hours in the air.

"The hours spent in the air are similar to that of taking flying lessons," Magette said.

"Flight courses leading to pilot ratings are governed by Federal Aviation Administration," said Marlon Johnston, head of the K-State-Salina aviation department.

K-State-Salina's flight program is just like any other major a student can enroll in at K-State.

"What is commonly called the 'flight program' are more correctly the Professional Pilot degrees," Johnston said. "We offer students the technical training and professional education to enter the aviation industry with a Bachelor's degree from Kansas State University in either flight, maintenance or management."

Upon graduating, these pilots enter a competitive job market. This job market is not unlike any job market that a student graduating with any other degree might enter, Johnston said.

"While most of our PPIL students are looking forward to the airlines, many are beginning to look for opportunities as corporate pilots," Johnston said. "In either case, once students graduate, they are challenged to build their experience levels, the number of flight hours they have achieved, to qualify for an interview.

"We also see many students pursue the business minor or graduates complete a second major to increase their competitiveness in the job market and ultimately their value to their employers."

Students have shown a devotion and passion for flying despite the economic status of the aviation industry, as well as the economy.

"The freshman enrollment for fall 2001 was our largest with 110 PPIL students, but this was also the fall in which we suffered the 9/11 terrorist attacks," Johnston said. "The students who stayed with the program during the subsequent industry and economic downturn have demonstrated a real passion for aviation and flying.

"They obviously aren't in it just for the money or job security," he said.

KC voters approve Sunday liquor sales

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

While Sunday liquor sales won approval in suburban Kansas City, the southwest Kansas town of Satanta remained one of only a few in the state that still prohibit the sale of packaged liquor.

The suburbs of Olathe, Shawnee, Gardner and Edgerton on Tuesday joined several cities – mostly along the border with Missouri – that have approved Sunday liquor sales since a 1949 prohibition was successfully challenged.

A Wyandotte County District Court ruled that local governments can opt out of the law prohibiting Sunday sales, and the ruling was upheld by the Kansas Supreme Court.

Sunday sales passed with 61 percent of the vote in Olathe, 63 percent in Shawnee, 60 percent in Gardner and 58 percent in Edgerton.

Opponents have raised concerns about alcoholism. But proponents say Sunday liquor sales allow the communities to better compete with Missouri, where not only liquor stores but also grocery stores, convenience stores and discounters such as Wal-Mart can sell liquor.

Meanwhile, in Satanta a proposal to lift a ban on the sale of packaged liquor fell 233 to 224.

While people can buy beer locally at a grocery, convenience store or tavern, if they want liquor or wine they have to make a 30-mile round trip to Copeland, or a 60-mile round trip to Ulysses, Liberal or Hugoton.

Supporters had said the proposed change would have kept revenue from draining out of the county. But opponents said alcohol hurts families.

Indian Student Association celebrates Tarang festival

By U. Bhagavathy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The India Student Association will celebrate its annual cultural festival called "Tarang 2004."

"'Tarang,' in the national language Hindi, means 'waves', and aptly describes how rhythm, melody, dance and harmony are woven into one flowing element. The significance of the event lies in its efforts to showcase the rich cultural heritage of India." Sham Kashyap,President of the India Student Association, said.

As a precursor to the actual cultural evening, a small exhibition of India is scheduled.

Event co-coordinator Shikha Sachdeva said the exhibition is to show facets of the Indian way of life.

"Arts, crafts, food, languages, festivals, music, films, politics, sports, etc. A stall has been dedicated to the ancient art of Mehendi (temporary tattoos)."

Indian cuisine will be served, comprising Indian breads, curries, spiced rice and milk based dessert.

Om Prakash, faculty adviser for the ISA said everyone is welcome.

"We look forward to everyone's invaluable presence, participation and most importantly enthusiasm to make this event a rollicking success," Prakash said.

ONCE IN A LIFETIME

Compromise can help in survival of holidays with future in-laws

AMY PRESTON

My fiancé, Jack, finally asked me the dreaded question.

No, not the question that landed a ring on my finger.

This was the loaded question, the tough question, the question that will change my life completely at the end of this month.

"What do you want to do for the holidays this year?" he sweetly asked me while taking a walk at his parents' house a few weeks ago.

It's a little too early to be talking about this, I thought, but the longer we walked, it all came to me.

Thanksgiving is three weeks away, and Christmas is soon after. We are now in the midst of holiday season.

Humph.

My initial response to Jack's question was simple and followed this easy timeline:

For Thanksgiving, we'll watch the Macy's Day parade at my house, eat with the family, and then end the day at the local bowling alley for the annual Preston Thanksgiving Bowling Tournament.

For Christmas Eve, we'll go to the good Lutheran church for candlelight service, followed by dinner at my grandparent's house. After dinner, we'll open one gift and save the rest for the following morning.

On Christmas, we'll spend the morning unwrapping gifts with my family, eat breakfast and spend the rest of the day in our pajamas watching the "A Christmas Story" 24-hour marathon on television.

And then it hit me.

It's not about my family's holiday traditions anymore. It's not about his family holiday traditions anymore. It's all about the family holiday "tug-of-war."

Yes, Jack and I have spent the past two holiday seasons together. But these were spent just as a couple. No ring. No permanence. No problem.

If I wanted to spend Christmas Day with my family, Jack and I would exchange our gifts the night before.

If Jack wanted to celebrate Thanksgiving with his family, we would go our separate ways and meet up later that evening.

Now, though, things have changed, and I'm not alone.

A number of my close friends have married these past two years. One of my friends said she and her husband spend the holidays doing the "every-other" year thing. You know, where one year they spend Christmas at her parents' house and the next year, they travel to spend the holidays with his side of the family.

Another friend who married this summer said she doesn't quite know what she's going to do for the holidays, but it will all work out.

As high school sweethearts, she and her husband have had to balance the family holiday outings for quite some time.

Fortunately this year Jack's family and my family will have opposite holiday schedules, allowing us to share each and every tradition with loved ones. We'll get to eat turkey at my house and then eat turkey again the following weekend at his house.

However, there will be a year where we'll have to make some sacrifices, and I don't know if I'm ready for that.Instead of spending the Christmas lounging in my pajamas, I'll be hitting the pavement in a car, balancing time between the two families.

Toben and Joanne Heim know all about making sacrifices during the holiday season. In their book, "Happily Ever After: A Real-Life Look at Your First Year of Marriage," the Heims focus not on sacrificing tradition, but merging them to create unique ones to fit the couple's taste.

Here are some suggestions taken from their book:

1. Don't wait until the last minute to make holiday plans. A month or two before the holiday season, ask family members their plans for the holidays. It may seem early, but allows family members to begin planning out Turkey Day.

2. Think of different ways to merge your families' holiday traditions. Last Thanksgiving Jack's family decided to have a huge reunion, bringing in aunts, uncles, and cousins from across the country. As a result, I spent the afternoon with his family – and later that evening, we went bowling with my family, a tradition that we Prestons never miss.

3. Create your own unique way of celebrating. Holidays are busy, but don't forget to spend alone time with just you and your partner. Set aside Christmas morning to exchange gifts by yourselves, and then go meet and greet with the families.

4. Integrate holiday gatherings. Invite both sides of the family to holiday dinners and events – this way you can see your entire family at once without the balance beam act.

I can't say that I'm looking forward to actually getting out of my pajamas on future Christmas mornings. But I am looking forward to spending time with my family, Jack's family, and all the good food I get to eat at each gathering.

Let the holiday tug-of-war games begin.

Color, cost important in choosing wedding-day flowers

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's all about the color.

And type, and cost and number.

Selecting wedding flowers can seem overwhelming, but area florists said it can be done without all of the stress.

"Trust the florist, and let them guide you as far as where you want to put the money," said Karen Medlin, owner of Westloop Floral.

From real to silk, expensive to inexpensive, area florists offer their advice to choosing beautiful wedding flowers.

REAL VS. SILK

Medlin said a bride can't beat fresh flowers.

"They just look so classy," Medlin said. "Silk flowers are nice if you want something afterwards, but most people don't really care to have them afterwards. Sometimes people think the real flowers aren't going to last, but you won't wear that bridal dress again.

"Everything is pretty much for that one time, and the flowers are, too."

Flowers, she said, are one item couples don't want to skimp on when making wedding plans, mainly due to the important role they play in photographs. When the flowers look classy, she said, everything surrounding the flowers looks nice as well.

Some brides today, however, are turning to silk flowers for their weddings.

Shirley Leem, designer and manager of the floral department at Hobby Lobby, said she's seen a number of brides shop for their flowers at the store, mainly due to cost and convenience.

"Silk flowers are a lot cheaper," Leem said. "They can shop for them and have them done ahead of time. You don't have to wait until six hours before the wedding to have everything laid out and see what it looks like."

Silk flowers, she said, are becoming more and more realistic. As a result, brides are opting to go the silk flower route.

"If you're not a real flower person, you probably wouldn't know it was real – whether it be calla lilies, roses or orchids," Leem said. "Real flowers are real beautiful for about 12 hours, and then they're gone."

HOT TRENDS

Tammy Sinn, designer for the floral department at the Dillon's in Westloop, said fall and winter weddings bring out deep, dark colors, including deep purple, plum, green and burgundy.

Medlin agreed.

"We do a lot of monochromatic looks. People tend to think of the more darker, richer colors when it gets dark and dreary out," she said.

Brides don't have to stick to one or two colors when choosing flowers, though. Medlin said often brides will have their flowers the same colors as the dresses.

"So many people think that if you have a blue dress you have to do blue and white," she said. "There are so many neat things you can do to really make it stand out and look pretty. It's just fun to do the colors."

But colors aren't the only option the bride and groom have. The type of flower also plays a key role in the arrangements.

Roses, Medlin and Sinn agreed, are the most obvious and popular choice year-round. Other popular fall and winter flowers include mums, lilies, and orchids, and aren't the only ones.

"Flowers aren't as seasonal as they used to be," Medlin said. "We get flowers from all over the world now so pretty much everything is available."

Did you know?

Tips for saving money on wedding flowers

1. Location: Choose a ceremony or reception location in a natural setting, filled with flowers and trees.
2. Keep it simple: Opt for simple arrangements, such as cala lilies in a glass vase with floating candles. Or, place one or two different types of flowers in pots tied with ribbon. These types of arrangements are relatively inexpensive.
3. Go solo: Instead of a full bouquet, have bridesmaids carry one single-stem flower with a ribbon around it down the aisle.
4. Shop around: Go to a flower market to check out the most affordable flower types. Inexpensive flower types include dahlias, zinnias, sunflowers, daisies and baby's breath.
5. Avoid holiday seasons: Flower prices tend to increase around the big holidays: Valentine's Day, Christmas and Mother's Day. Keep this in mind when selecting your wedding date.
6. Bulk buy: If you find a great price on a large amount of flowers, go ahead and purchase them. Extra flowers can be used throughout the reception and ceremony.
7. Reuse: Don't leave the flowers at the ceremony. Instead, bring them along and use them as arrangements at the reception. Large arrangements used in the church can be placed next to the cake or at the bride and groom's table at the reception. Think of different ways to implement one arrangement at two places.

CUTTING THE COST

Sinn, Medlin and Leem all said they work with a variety of budgets, starting with a shoestring budget, working its way up to thousands of dollars.

Despite the budget, though, Medlin said it's important for the bride and groom to use the florist when making flower decisions.

"The florist can help them decide where they want to concentrate the money and where it's not going to make as much difference," she said. "A lot of times people will come in and ask how much it costs for flowers in a wedding. That's impossible to say because you have to determine how many people are in the wedding, the size of bouquets – you have to be pretty detailed before you can tell them."

Sinn said the cost of flowers depends on a number factors, including the size of the wedding party. How much a bride wants and what she wants also play into the cost, Sinn said, but there are ways to save money.

"You can downsize – not everyone in your whole family needs corsages and boutennieres, and the bride can have a pretty bouquet with a few roses and filler," Sinn said. "We can still dress it up to make it look expensive."

FLORIST SERVICES

Silk or real, florists said they can provide a number of services to their customers.

At Hobby Lobby, Leem said customers who want to try silk flowers but don't know exactly how to do the arrangements can receive help from employees and how-to books.

"If they come in and say they're lost and need 15 corsages for their wedding, we'll tell them how to do it – we're a how-to craft store," Leem said. "We can help them pick out their flowers and we do some custom work on a limited basis."

Sinn said at Dillon's, customers come in and discuss floral options with a trained designer.

"We sit down with them and let them express their ideas and see if they have pictures of things they want," she said.

Medlin said she, too, has books that brides can view. She also gives her personal preferences, telling the customer which styles and shapes work as well as customizing the bridal bouquet.

"We custom-design the bouquets for that bride, instead of telling her to pick out a picture," she said.

Checklist helps in wedding organization

Recently engaged or almost married? No matter what stage you are in your wedding planning, here's a month-by-month checklist to help smooth your walk down the aisle.

12 or more months

- Announce your engagement. Tell your family and friends about the exciting news.
- Start thinking about the style of your wedding.
- If your parents are paying for your wedding, sit down with them and decide a budget. If you are paying for it, talk to your significant other. Talk about things in the wedding you want to splurge on and things you can do for less.
- If you aren't planning your own wedding, interview local wedding coordinators.
- Brides: Think about your wedding gown style.
- Pick your wedding date. Keep in mind popular holidays and family gatherings when making your decision.

Nine to 11 months

- Begin looking at reception sites. If you're wanting alcohol at your wedding, make sure to look at sites that allow consumption of these beverages.
- Start thinking about who you want to officiate the wedding.
- Once you find a reception site that fits your needs and falls on your wedding date, book it.
- Set a date for an engagement party and purchase the invitations for it.
- Get organized by starting a file folder to keep all of your wedding paperwork in one place.
- Start working on your wedding guest list and decide on the size.
- Select your attendants/groomsmen and ask them to be in your wedding.
- If you are not getting married in your church or house of worship, find a ceremony site.
- Hire a wedding coordinator, if interested.
- Take engagement photographs.
- Contact local newspapers to announce your engagement. You may need an engagement picture with the announcement.
- Choose a color scheme, keeping in mind the decor and style of your wedding.
- Select a caterer and begin working on a menu and catering budget. Execute a catering contract and send them a deposit. Remember to make duplicates of all contract information.
- Brides: Begin shopping for your gown.
- Finalize the guest list.
- Start thinking about what type of music you want at your reception and begin auditioning reception bands or DJs.
- If you're having an outdoor site, look into tent and lighting rentals.
- Discuss flower options with local florists.
- Meet with your officiant to discuss ceremony structure and any religious requirements.
- Get price lists from several photographers and videographers.
- Book a reception band or DJ, execute contract and send deposit.
- Brides: Make a final decision on your gown.

Six to eight months

- Research gift registries.
- Begin thinking about who you want to perform music in the ceremony.
- Look for a cake baker.
- Reserve photographer and videographer. Decide on a price package, execute contract and send deposit.
- Brides: Start shopping for bridesmaid dresses or look at patterns. Make sure to keep sizes of your bridesmaids in mind and get their input.
- Choose your florist and send a deposit to reserve their services.
- Register for your wedding gifts.
- Brides: Decide on the bridesmaid dresses.
- Set aside blocks of hotel rooms for out-of-town guests.
- Mail out save the date cards to out of town guests in order to inform them the date and time of your wedding.
- Book a baker, choose your wedding cake design and send a deposit.
- Brides: Collect necessary measurements from attendants for their dresses.
- Book ceremony musicians and send a deposit.
- Brides: Order your gown and make sure your order contains the correct information.
- Start planning the rehearsal dinner and provide the host with contact information for your attendants and any other guests.
- Start thinking about invitation designs.
- Finalize menu and services with the caterer.
- Order your invitations and announcement, along with plenty of extra envelopes for any mistakes made while addressing them.

Four to five months

- Grooms: Decide what style of formal wear you'll be wearing.
- Reserve tables, chairs, and other rental equipment you need.
- Start planning your honeymoon.
- Grooms: Start looking to buy or rent your tuxedo or suit.
- Book a rehearsal dinner site.
- Compile a packet of hotel reservation and city information for out-of-town guests and mail it out.
- Think about flower arrangements and see what flowers are in season.
- Book your honeymoon and make travel reservations.
- Decide on a floral scheme, choose flowers, and negotiate prices with florists. Be sure to sign a contract to agreements made.

Two to three months

- Grooms: Inform groomsmen all information they need to buy/reserve their formal wear.
- Brides: Choose accessories (shoes, gloves, etc.) for your attendants.
- Think about specific ceremony and reception decorations.
- If you haven't registered yet, make sure to do so before upcoming wedding showers.
- Brides: Now is the time to experiment with self-tanners and facials.
- Shop for and purchase wedding rings.
- Brides: Make sure your attendants have purchased their dresses and accessories.
- Make or buy favors to give to your guests. If you are getting them custom-made, allow for extra time.
- Grooms: Get measured for your tuxedo.
- Brides: Purchase any lingerie your gown requires in time for the first fittings.
- Get items required for an international honeymoon (passport, birth certificate, visas, vaccinations, etc.).
- Pick up invitations and start addressing them.

Red Sox.

And the sports calendar was at least that crammed for all of October and will be for November, especially with the start of the hockey and basketball seasons.

Oh, wait. The NHL is in the midst of a lockout, and there may not be any hockey played at all this season. It's no big thing. Most sports fans wouldn't have missed it until well into January.

Last year, the NHL television ratings for the 2004 Playoffs on ABC dropped 27 percent from the previous year, by nine percent on ESPN and 23 percent on ESPN2. For a league already losing money, it can't be good news to hear that the American people don't even care to watch your sport when the games actually matter.

It's probably for the best, though. Neither the owners nor the players think the lockout will be over in time for a 2004-05 season.

Then there's the NBA, or more popularly known as the highest-paid-job-you-can-get-with-just-a-high-school-diploma league. There's nothing more riveting than competition so intense it leads to whining, brawling and lawsuits. And that was just in the preseason.

Usually the summer months are the slowest in sports, filled with a lot of fairly meaningless baseball games and a few golf tournaments. But at least this summer we had the Summer Olympics and, thanks to Lance Armstrong, the suddenly popular Tour de France. Both offered their share of excitement, but the biggest disappointment of the Games was the play of a certain basketball team from the United States.

That's right, the same "Dream Team" of NBA All-Stars that couldn't beat Puerto Rico will make up much of the star power of this winter's professional basketball season. The rest of they hype will be focused on the Kobe-Shaq rivalry, which is good for a whopping two games of the season.

Ratings were actually up for last season's playoffs, and this year may offer some intriguing match-ups, as well. But it's May and June by that time, and wouldn't you rather be watching early season baseball or golf at that point?

I wouldn't either, but that's why I'm getting the entire WNBA season on DirecTV.

So, with the exception of college basketball (which still doesn't come close to the excitement of college football) at least until March, there isn't much worth turning on the tube.

Yes, sports fans, enjoy the fall while it lasts, because someday soon the long, cold days of winter will arrive, bringing with them a sports scene just as bleak and dreary as a cloudy day in February.

CREW | Club sport enjoys unique status while nurturing high school rowers races in the fall, and are considered a sprint race," Lesko said.

Although many sports have a long history of good coaching, another aspect that makes the team different is that the club is rebuilding with a new staff.

The varsity coach position was assigned to Ryan Hoskinson, and the coach of the novice crew is Phil Henke, senior in political science. Both are alumni of the team.

Varsity captain Todd Crawford, senior in math and statistics, said this year is the time to get stronger.

"This year is kind of like a rebuilding year, because we have had some changes in coaching and a lot of people graduated," he said.

Crawford also pointed out a further facet that makes the team a stand-out sport.

The men's crew team is the only sport at K-State that is classified as a club sport but provides the ability to earn a varsity letter.

"The sport requires so much work for the little time you actually compete," Crawford said. "I'm really happy I chose to row, and I think it would be good for anyone to come out and try. You gain confidence so you get involved, meet people and do better in school."

A final trait that crew prides itself on is the ability to work with athletes in the making.

The crew team has a juniors program, which consists of students from Manhattan High School. The members compete in the same regattas, but they compete and are their own team.

"The juniors add an interesting aspect. They act as a great feeder program into our club and the university's NCAA women's program team alike," Lesko said.

"They also add to the diversity of our team by adding to the age demographic and giving us another boat on the water to race against."

Give us your opinion.

FACEBOOK | Students enjoy simplicity of Web site

site connection between students of similar interests.

"I lost touch with one of my friends from high school, but through the site, I am now talking to my friend again," she said. "But I also like the fact that I can find students who are in the same classes as me."

Other features of the site include private messaging and a message wall, where students can post messages on a person's profile.

While the site is restricted to university students, no students have had many complaints, Hughes said.

"If you don't like other users on the site, you can prevent them from communicating with you."

Gaines said she likes the simplicity of the Web site. "Facebook is just less complicated than messenger services," she said.

"You can avoid the confusion of screen-names and the billion little buttons you have to push to talk to them."

"For those who don't like messenger, this is a really good program that doesn't force you to download programs onto your computer," Denning said.

LADY BEETLE | Damp weather produces rise in bugs

Fact Sheet. Since cliffs are not abundant in the United States, the beetles seek shelter from the winter in and around buildings.

Whitworth said the beetles are attracted to homes because they radiate heat.

The abundance of beetles, however, is annoying to some.

Jennifer McLaughlin, sophomore in business, said the beetles have been swarming her house for about two weeks.

"Over the past two weeks, about 1,000 have moved in and out of the house," she said.

McLaughlin said she first noticed the beetles gathering on the side of the house that the sun was on.

"I would leave the window open, and they would be on my curtains around the house," she said.

Once they were in, however, McLaughlin said she had a hard time getting rid of the beetles.

"I just caught them and threw them away outside, but it was really pointless because they would just come back," she said.

Since the weather has gotten even colder, McLaughlin said she hasn't seen as many of the beetles.

"I think they are kind of dying off eventually," she said.

Whitworth said in the spring when the weather is warm again, residents may see the opposite effect depending on how many beetles survive the winter.

"They will start aggregating around houses or barns to get out to the fields in the spring," he said.

How to Get rid of Lady Beetles

- Multicolored Asian Lady Beetles are best removed by sucking them up with a vacuum cleaner.
- Some typical pesticides may also work in removing the beetles from a home.

BUSH | Increase in taxes unlikely during 2nd term

The president was unapologetic about the unpopularity of his decisions in many world capitals, such as his commitment to spread democracy in the Middle East. "Listen, I've made some very hard decisions: decisions to protect ourselves, decisions to spread peace and freedom."

Bush said that at home, he had set an unmistakable direction for the country and he emphasized anew he does not foresee the need for any tax increase despite big budget deficits.

Coming from a campaign that offered clear policy choices, Bush said, "When you win, there is a feeling that the people have spoken and embraced your point of view, and that's what I intend to tell the Congress."

and find our friends later.

Some might also try to actually drag a friend into the conversation, hoping to break up the awkward tension.

4. THEY LEAVE AND DON'T COME BACK.

Good conversations often contain one person leaving to go to the bathroom, get another drink, etc., but with the promise to come back. If you see them leave the bar or bathroom, and then beeline toward their friends, they aren't in a hurry to continue the conversation.

These are a few of the subtle hints members of the opposite sex might give you if they're not feeling it the way you do. If you pick up any of these signs, excuse yourself and move on to the next person. Better to leave while you still have your dignity than to be left feeling like a loser.

Comeback Cats

Webb leads K-State to 35-24 win over Mizzou

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

COLUMBIA, Mo. – The job of a backup quarterback is to be ready whenever called upon. For the second time this season, sophomore quarterback Allen Webb did just that in K-State's 35-24 comeback victory over Missouri on Saturday.

Down 21-7 at halftime, Coach Bill Snyder replaced starting sophomore quarterback Dylan Meier with Webb, who proceeded to lead the Wildcat offense to 14 unanswered points in the second half.

In the first two quarters of the game, Meier was harrassed by the Tiger defense and crowd noise at Faurot Field, resulting in several delay of game penalties. Meier completed only four of 16 passes and rushed for 15 yards on seven carries.

Co-offensive coordinator and quarterbacks coach Del Miller said Meier not only struggled with the defensive fronts of Missouri, but also little practice time.

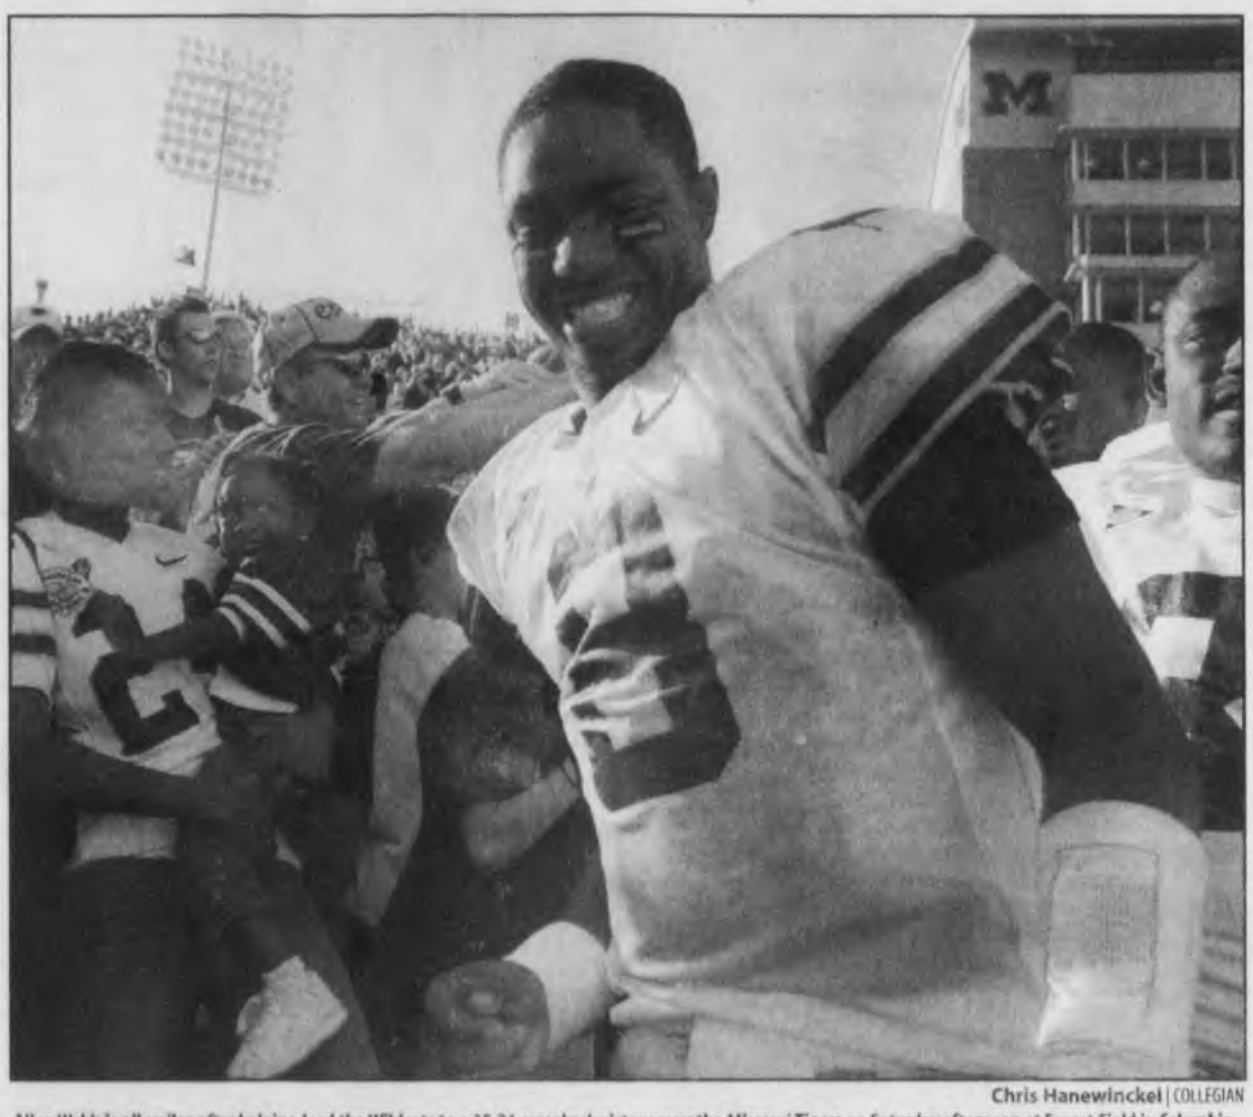
"Dylan struggled a little bit, but he's a young man that hasn't been able to practice a whole lot," Miller said. "They just did some things that were a little different from what we had anticipated, and it took us a little while to adjust."

Webb's first appearance into the game came early in the second quarter, but he didn't appear to be the answer. Webb bounced an option toss off of junior fullback Ayo Saba's helmet, resulting in a turnover.

The Indiana transfer said he wasn't sure he would get another chance after the fumble.

"I really didn't know if I would play again, but I wasn't really worried about that," Webb said. "I just wanted our team to have success out there and to pull out a win, and I was able to get back in there and lead the team to a victory."

Webb received another chance late in the second quarter, running for 10 yards and completing a pass for 38 yards before Snyder put Webb in for good to open the third quarter.



"He went originally because Dylan got dinged up, and then there was my reason to play both of them at certain points in time," Snyder said. "Then Allen really began to make some plays, and that was the direction I wanted to go at the time. He had the hot hand, so to speak."

With Meier and Webb both taking snaps at quarterback, it marked the seventh time this season Snyder has played both quarterbacks in the same game.

Webb finished the day completing six of eight passes for 111 yards and two touchdowns and rushed for 57 yards on 12 carries.

The Denver, Colo., native's biggest plays came on third down. Webb connected with sophomore wide receiver Jermaine Moreira for an eight-yard touchdown on

State votes reflect U.S. trends

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Riley County voters reflected national trends in voter participation, although local voters were more likely to go to the polls.

About 63.28 percent of registered voters in Riley County submitted ballots, while the nationwide participation was 59.6 percent.

County Clerk Rich Vargo said the numbers were unofficial because provisional ballots had not been counted. County elections officials will count provisional ballots and confirm final election results today.

While local turnout was slightly higher than the national average, some precincts in Manhattan produced drastically different voter turnouts.

In the precincts on and adjacent to K-State's campus, turnout was 49.17 percent. Vargo said the high concentration of college students in the area made the lower turnout predictable.

"That just makes sense," he said. "They are the ones that traditionally don't vote. Elections, unfortunately, are not their top priority."

In west Manhattan, near the Sharingbrook neighborhood, voter turnout was just shy of 80 percent. Residents near Sharingbrook are generally older and higher-income residents than areas near campus. Vargo said the disparity in the areas' voter turnout matched the Confusion at the St. Thomas More Catholic Church on Nov. 2 reportedly caused four people to cast provisional ballots at St. Joseph Center.

The two polling locations are in different districts for the State House of Representatives, meaning the individuals voted in the wrong election.

County Clerk Rich Vargo said he heard of the mix-up but could not confirm it happened.

"I cannot substantiate that story," Vargo said, "I have heard that they were sent there, but who sent them there I do not know."

He said the supervising judge, who is in charge of overseeing elections in the county, was unaware of the confusion until reading about it in the Manhattan Mercury.

U.S., Iraqi forces brace for attack in Fallujah

By Tini Tran
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq – The government declared a 60-day state of emergency throughout most of the country Sunday, as U.S. and Iraqi forces prepared for an expected all-out assault on rebels in Fallujah. Insurgents escalated a wave of violence that has killed more than 50 people the past two days.

Heavy explosions were heard in Baghdad as government spokesman Thair Hassan al-Naqeeb announced the state of emergency over the entire country except Kurdish areas in the north.

"It is going to be a curfew. It is going to be so many things, but tomorrow the prime minister will mention it," he said.

Interim Prime Minister Iyad Allawi will give more details Monday, he said.

Al-Naqeeb declined to say whether the announcement signaled an imminent attack on the insurgent stronghold Fallujah, saying, "We have seen the situation worsening in this area. Any obstacle will be removed."

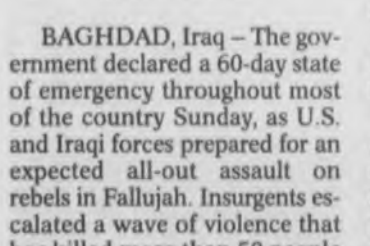
Allawi, who called a meeting Sunday with his defense minister, interior minister and provincial police commanders, said the state of emergency is a "very powerful message that we are serious" about reining in insurgents before elections set for late January.

"We want elections to take place. We want to secure the country, so elections can be done in a peaceful way and the Iraqi people can participate in the elections freely, without the intimidation by terrorists and by forces who are trying to wreck the political process in Iraq," he told reporters.

The announcement came as insurgents carried out a second day of assaults in central Iraq, attacking police stations, gunning down government officials and setting off bombs.

Three attacks on U.S. convoys in and around Baghdad killed two American soldiers and wounded five others Sunday, the military said. Residents reported grenades setting police cars aflame on Haifa Street in the heart of the city.

A car bomb also exploded near the Baghdad home of Iraq's finance minister, Adil Abdel-Mahdi, a leading Shiite politician, the Interior Ministry said.



Reda Jawad Taqqi, a spokesman for a major Shiite political party, said that neither Abdel-Mahdi nor any of his family were in his house at the time. "They are all safe, thank God, the minister and his family," Taqqi told the Associated Press.

The U.S. military said the bomb killed one Iraqi bystander and wounded another. A U.S. patrol came under small-arms fire as it responded, wounding one soldier, a statement said.

The wave of violence sweeping the troubled Sunni Triangle north and west of Baghdad, may be aimed at relieving pressure on Fallujah, where about 10,000 American troops are massing for a major assault if Allawi gives the green light.

At dawn Sunday, armed rebels launched deadly attacks against police stations in western Anbar province, killing 22 people according to police and hospital officials. At least seven of those killed were policemen, who were lined up and shot execution style.

WORLD IN REVIEW: 7 THINGS YOU DIDN'T KNOW 7 DAYS AGO

Four more years for Bush

Tim Sloan | GETTY IMAGES

U.S. President George W. Bush (right) delivers his victory speech as First Lady Laura (far left) and daughters Jenna (second from left) and Barbara look on Nov. 3 at the Ronald Reagan building in Washington, DC.

Staff and wire reports

It's officially unofficial – President Bush was elected to a second term, although the race remained too close to call until Wednesday afternoon.

Democratic challenger Sen. John Kerry conceded a Bush victory when his advisers determined Ohio's 20 electoral votes would go to the president. Bush won the popular vote by more than two million votes.

LOCAL RESULTS

In one of the state's most highly anticipated races, U.S. Rep. Jim Ryun defeated Democratic challenger Nancy Boyda to represent Kansas' 2nd District in the U.S. House. All three other Kansas incumbents won.

Ryun
U.S. REPRESENTATIVE

Sen. Sam Brownback was re-elected easily, and locally, Rep. Sydney Carlin won her bid to the Kansas House of Representatives. Roger Reitz was elected to the Kansas Senate.

ARAFAT'S AILMENT

Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat battled health problems, and Palestinian officials battled rumors that Arafat was dead.

Arafat's condition worsened throughout the week; his chief of staff said Arafat, 75, was in grave condition.

AILING CHIEF JUSTICE

U.S. Supreme Court Chief Justice William Rehnquist continued his battle with cancer and said Monday he will undergo radiation and chemotherapy treatment for thyroid cancer.

Rehnquist
CHIEF JUSTICE

Rehnquist, 80, said in a letter Monday he would work from home, and made no mention of leaving the court.

SOUTH DAKOTA SWITCH

Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., was defeated by Republican challenger John Thune in Tuesday's election.

Daschle became the first Senate leader to lose re-election in nearly 50 years.

SO LONG, TEDDY

The school board voted 4-3 to close Theodore Roosevelt Elementary School in 2006 with the understanding that the community could change enough before then to prevent the closure.

About 3,400 soldiers are expected to return to Fort Riley in January, and there is the potential for more. The change could mean the district would not need to close another school.

REFINISHING THE CABINET

Days after winning reelection, President Bush must answer questions about changes in his Cabinet.

Rumored to depart during Bush's second term are attorney general John Ashcroft and secretary of state Colin Powell. Secretary of defense Donald Rumsfeld is expected to stay with Bush.

Rhodes, Marshall reps named

4 K-State students vie for national academic, leadership scholarship

By Karthik Reddy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The students who have been selected to represent K-State in competition for the Rhodes and Marshall scholarships have been announced.

James Hohenbary, K-State scholar adviser, said 32 Rhodes and about 40 Marshall scholarships are awarded each year.

Students nominated for both Rhodes and Marshall scholarships are Julie Heaser, Jessica Heier and Seth Bridge. Tony Frey also nominated for the Rhodes scholarship is Tony Frey.

All of the Rhodes nominees have been asked back for interviewing while Heaser has been asked back for the Marshall.

"To be nominated for the scholarships is a significant achievement for the students and is intrinsically important for them in their future," he said.

Both scholarship programs provide support to the academic costs of studying in the United Kingdom. Rhodes scholars are required to study at Oxford University while Marshall scholars may study at any university in the United Kingdom.

Students compete for campus nominations, where a campus committee solicits applications requiring a 1000 word statement of purpose, references, a résumé and other transcripts along with the intended course of study, Hohenbary said.

"The entire procedure for nomination and the interviews that follow, will closely mirror that of the national competition in order to make students more focused and help them prepare. While the Marshall scholarship requires a GPA of 3.7 or higher, there are no restrictions to be nominated for the Rhodes scholarship," he said.

He said students, in addition to outstanding academic ability should also possess excellent leadership qualities and be involved in a variety of activities to strengthen their chances for nomination.

He also said students chosen for interviews for the Rhodes scholarship attend a cocktail reception the night before the interview, along with the committee members and interact with them.

The students chosen for the scholarships will be announced immediately after the interview is concluded, he said.

Interviews for the Marshall scholarships are usually held in November and the students selected for the scholarships will be announced two weeks after the interviews are concluded, he said.

"I felt very fortunate, honored and ecstatic to receive K-State's nomination for the scholarships. I studied abroad in Australia for a semester while attending K-State and would very much like to study overseas for a longer period of time," said Julie Heaser, senior in industrial engineering.

Heaser said if she wins the Rhodes she would do a master of science in economics for development and a master of science in industrial relations and human resource management.

"I am very grateful for the opportunity to represent K-State. The application process has helped me further define what I would like to do and identify ways to make that possible, whether in the United Kingdom or elsewhere," Jessica Heier, senior in industrial engineering, said.

If selected for the Rhodes, she would like to earn a master of philosophy degree in development studies with a focus in forced migration, Heier said.

If Bridge wins the Rhodes, he is proposing to enter a two-year master of philosophy program in Russian and Eastern European Studies at Oxford University.

If Frey wins the Rhodes he has chosen the politics, philosophy and economics two-year program at Oxford.

"The interviewing and application process has been a unique, rewarding experience. I am more knowledgeable today about my thesis topic due to this process," Frey said.

Shuttle transports students to KC airport

By Karthik Reddy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The International Student Shuttle can now transport spouses and children of K-State international students to and from Kansas City International airport.

Mary Beth Cook, graduate assistant in the Office of International Programs, said there was a state law in effect that limited transport facilities to just K-State students and faculty and not their spouses or children.

She said due to increased demand from students, extra vans would be used to transport the spouses and children and these vans did not come under the law.

These vans would be driven by state employees who received proper training in driving vans, while the K-State shuttle would be driven by student volunteers who were part of the Study Abroad program or worked in the Office of International Programs, she said.

The dates for dropping students off at the airport were between Dec. 16 and Dec. 19, both days included and pick up from Kansas City International Airport would be on Jan. 4 and 5, 2005, Cook said.

"There are many international students on campus and owning a car is not feasible for all of them.

"Most of them would welcome a ride and would like to have someone welcome them at the airport," she said.

She said demand for the shuttle services was high, and both international and out-of-state students could use it.

Kelsey Holste, peer group adviser at the office of international programs, said additional funds for the specific purpose of transporting international students have been received and found a way to transport students' spouses and children as well, owing to the increasing need for it.

TO THE POINT

Record voter turnout is encouraging

Many Americans invested tremendous amounts of time, money and effort into last week's elections.

While not everyone's candidate or initiative can win, all Americans should not be discouraged, as voter turnout levels across the country broke numerous records.

This trend occurred in Riley County, as well as many other counties in Kansas. More young voters also showed up to the polls, although their totals in comparison to other age groups were not out of the ordinary.

Hopefully the voter turnout of the election, which many hailed as the most important of this generation, will not be a one-time occurrence, but rather a new trend of invigorated public interest.

As for the increase of young voters making their voices heard, the numbers are encouraging, but it should be considered a good start.

Few times do watershed moments occur in American society in which the public renews its passion and interest in civics, especially voting.

It now is our job to tend to maintaining that interest so that more Americans will be informed and vote during the next election cycle.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Driven to insanity

Parking issues could be solved with rationality, initiative

JONAS HOGG

Almost everyday I encounter a strange phenomenon. Riding my bike to school I notice people getting in their cars, and going about their day.

Normally this would not seem odd, but when, only minutes later, I again pedal past them again, waiting in line for a parking spot, things just seem out of place.

This begs the question: why the hell are people, who live easily within walking or biking distance, driving to school?

So I just can't buy into the "we need more parking" argument. In fact, I think it's one of the dumbest things I've ever heard.

Let me be clear. There is absolutely no parking problem at K-state. What there is, is an absurd surplus of drivers.

We all know them: people who live a few blocks away, or sometimes directly across the street from campus. Yet, for some odd reason, they feel the need to drive their car half a mile every day to school.

There are the usual excuses: "It's too cold/hot", "it's raining/snowing," or my personal favorite, "but my class is all the way on the other side of campus" – as if crossing the K-State campus was some sort of epic undertaking.

Perhaps my worldliness has made me a little surly. But, in my life abroad I have learned that for most college-age people, owning a car is an awesome luxury.

Not so for us. We own them, and we're going to drive them no matter how stupidly short a distance we have to go.

Going down the block? Drive! To the store half a mile away? Drive! Driving through campus in between classes?

Illustrations by Jordan Mizell | COLLEGIAN

That's all right; it doesn't matter that it will probably take you longer to drive than walk. While you're waiting in the stand-still traffic you can roll down your windows and blare whatever egregious insult to good taste you happen to be listening to.

Cyclist or pedestrians in your way? Get menacingly close to them so they know not to mess with you. After all, you are the motorist; everyone else is just a speed bump.

In another stroke of genius, let's all get together and complain about rising tuition costs. And then, without skipping a beat, practically demand that we want a heinously expensive parking garage.

We want it all, baby! And we want it for free.

If the parking situation here seems so bad, you should visit other schools. When I visited Florida State University, the closest parking available was probably a mile and a half away. When your only parking option is a 12-minute walk and a six-lane highway away from campus grounds, then you have a parking problem.

This is not the case here. Even when I did live too far away to bike, I never had to park more than four blocks away from campus. Surely, even the least stalwart of us with a working pair of legs can manage four blocks.

So while we most certainly do need to plan for growth at our university, especially when we are looking at adding a hotel to our campus, the hue and cry of "more parking" needs to be tempered with a little bit of rationality.

My advice? Go out and buy a bottle of "No More Tears" shampoo and give it to someone you know who drives the eighth of a mile to school on a daily basis. Or better yet, just beat them over the head with a board and tell them to get over it.

If you really want a parking garage, raise the price of parking tags, do a fund-raiser, hold a bake sale... I don't care. Just don't expect to me subsidize every lazy moron on campus.

Musician's life proves only the good die young

JEREMY PARKER

If you have never heard of the late Wesley Willis before listening to his music, you might begin to think Mozart himself had been reincarnated in the form of a 6-foot-6, 350-pound, schizophrenic black man.

While Wesley Willis wasn't quite Mozart, he wasn't far off.

You may remember that a few weeks ago, I briefly mentioned that Wesley's music would enhance your super-sweet road trip tenfold.

After further contemplation, I realized that just a few sentences were not befitting of a man of such staggering genius. After all, this is the composer of "The Birdman Kicked My Ass" and "Kris Kringle Was A Car Thief!"

Whittling the hilarious brilliance of Wesley Willis down to a mere 650 words won't be easy, but it's my duty, as his number one fan, to try.

My introduction to him began during the Napster craze. A chum recommended I download a live version of Nirvana covering the Metallica song, "Enter Sandman," but he insisted that I not preview the file before it finished.

I was certain he was trying to bamboozle me into inadvertently watching a video of a midget copulating with a cantaloupe, but (unfortunately) my prediction turned out to be false. Instead, my speakers brought forth a sound so celestial, I swore my life would never be the same.

I had always considered myself a "hip dude," but I just could not figure out who this hot new vocalist was (or why he was telling me to "lick a camel's ass"). Regardless, I knew he was something special.

Further research confirmed that he was special and then some. This man was the most fascinating musician I had ever encountered.

Armed with his trusty Casio keyboard, the loveable yet profoundly disturbed Wesley Willis recorded more than 50 albums in roughly ten years (goo!). He wrote music such as "Rock and Roll McDonald's" and "STP Conked Out My Engine," to keep the schizophrenic voices in his head from taking him on a "demon hell ride."

His songs dealt with a fairly limited range of subjects – fights with superheroes, human-animal relations, and celebrities – but whatever the topic, each track shared a common thread. Mysteriously (and awesomely), each Wesley Willis song ends with the phrase, "Rock over London, Rock On, Chicago," and then a random company's name and slogan.

For example, a lyrical excerpt from the song "Dave Grohl" goes as follows:

"You are my buddy / You are my friend to the friendly end / You are on my side with the Midas touch…Rock over London, Rock on, Chicago. Subway. It's the place where fresh is the taste."

While there's no doubt about Wesley's captivating studio recordings, he also was interesting in the live venue.

He abandoned the traditional handshake, instead preferring to greet each of his fans with a firm, yet loving, head butt. A permanent bruise resided in the center of his forehead for years, thanks to thousands of encounters with concert-goers.

I ask myself on a daily basis, "how can anyone not love this guy?" The answer, of course, is that most people have never heard of him. That's why I've decided to make it my mission to convert as many people as I can into fellow Wesleynauts.

Go to the nearest computer and log on to your favorite illegal file-sharing program and start downloading. Or, if you're a dweeb and you still actually believe in "buying music," you can purchase his CDs online at amazon.com.

Regardless, it's time for all of you people to ditch The Cranberries, or whoever it is you kids are into these days, and start listening to our generation's Mozart.

Unfortunately, like Mozart, Wesley died young. Leukemia got the best of him last year, but his music and memory still live on and continue to "really whup that caribou's ass."

Rock over London…Rock on, Chicago. Pontiac. We build excitement.

Ha, Collegian. Bush won. He he he he.

John Kerry sucks at life.

Too bad Kerry lost, otherwise the hydrogen monoxide would've been taken out of our water supply.

To the evil-doer who flattened my squirrel friend, Butters: I'm coming for you, evil-doer!

To all the foreigners who are complaining about living in America: what are you doing here in the first place?

You know someone is an absolute tool when they can say the Greek alphabet backwards.

To the redhead girl who was "studying" in the library on Tuesday night: get off your phone, because the decibel level of your whining almost made me puke.

I think Chris Bluiett has asked out every girl on campus.

Thanks for getting off your tush and voting for Bush.

Now that Kerry has lost the election, it seems that the Collegian has nothing to write about.

To the person that we almost hit on the crosswalk today: sorry, but you were blended into the shadows.

Hey, to the parking nazis: God forbid that we pay anymore tuition with all $18 fines your handing out. I feel like I should be on scholarship just for parking on campus.

Student hopes to combine studies, photography

By Will Klusener
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Local student and budding photographer Tim Andersen, in conjunction with Blue Stem Bistro in Aggieville, opened his first exhibit this week.

Andersen was runner up in a Kansas City Star amateur photography contest for his picture titled "Stormwatchers." His exhibit will run through the end of this semester.

Andersen, senior in information systems, has been an amateur photographer for about a year, but has discovered a passion for the camera.

"I took a trip to Hungary for church last year and had my camera with me and just fell in love with taking pictures," he said. "I'm not sure what it was that actually got me started, but I just enjoy holding a camera."

The title of Andersen's contest piece, "Stormwatchers," is also indicative of the style of photography he prefers to shoot.

"I prefer landscape photography, it's kind of my niche," said Andersen. "I really like to shoot anything in nature, and a lot of my stuff is from the Konza Prairie and trips to Colorado."

Though he is new to the art of photography, Andersen said he wants his newfound hobby to expand into his professional life after graduation.

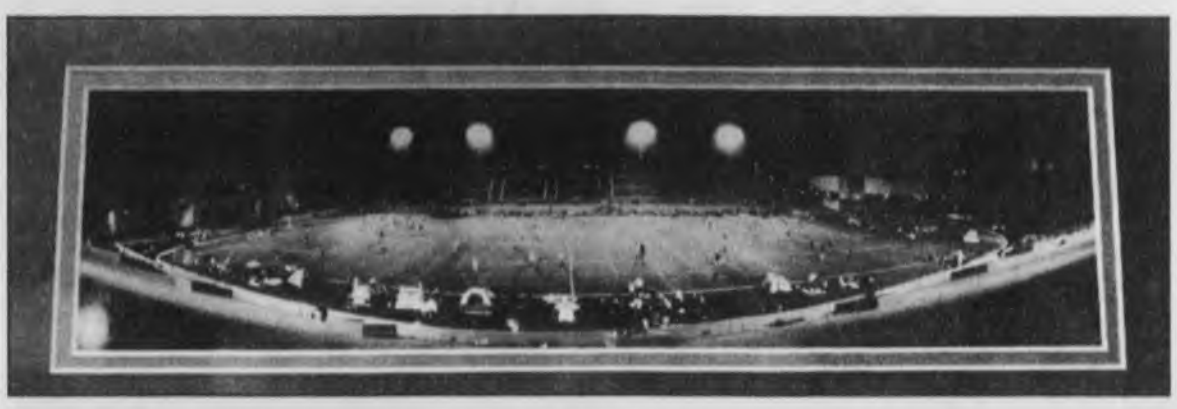
"I'm an information systems major graduating in May and would like to be able to merge the two," he said. "I'd like to maybe be a Web page designer and get my foot in the door with photography departments."

Because of picture clarity and cost efficiency, Anderson has broken from the tradition of shooting with and developing actual film and embraced the digital revolution.

"In February, I picked up a digital camera and it's really helped out," he said. "I used to spend so much money on film and development, and the digital camera has really helped me out."

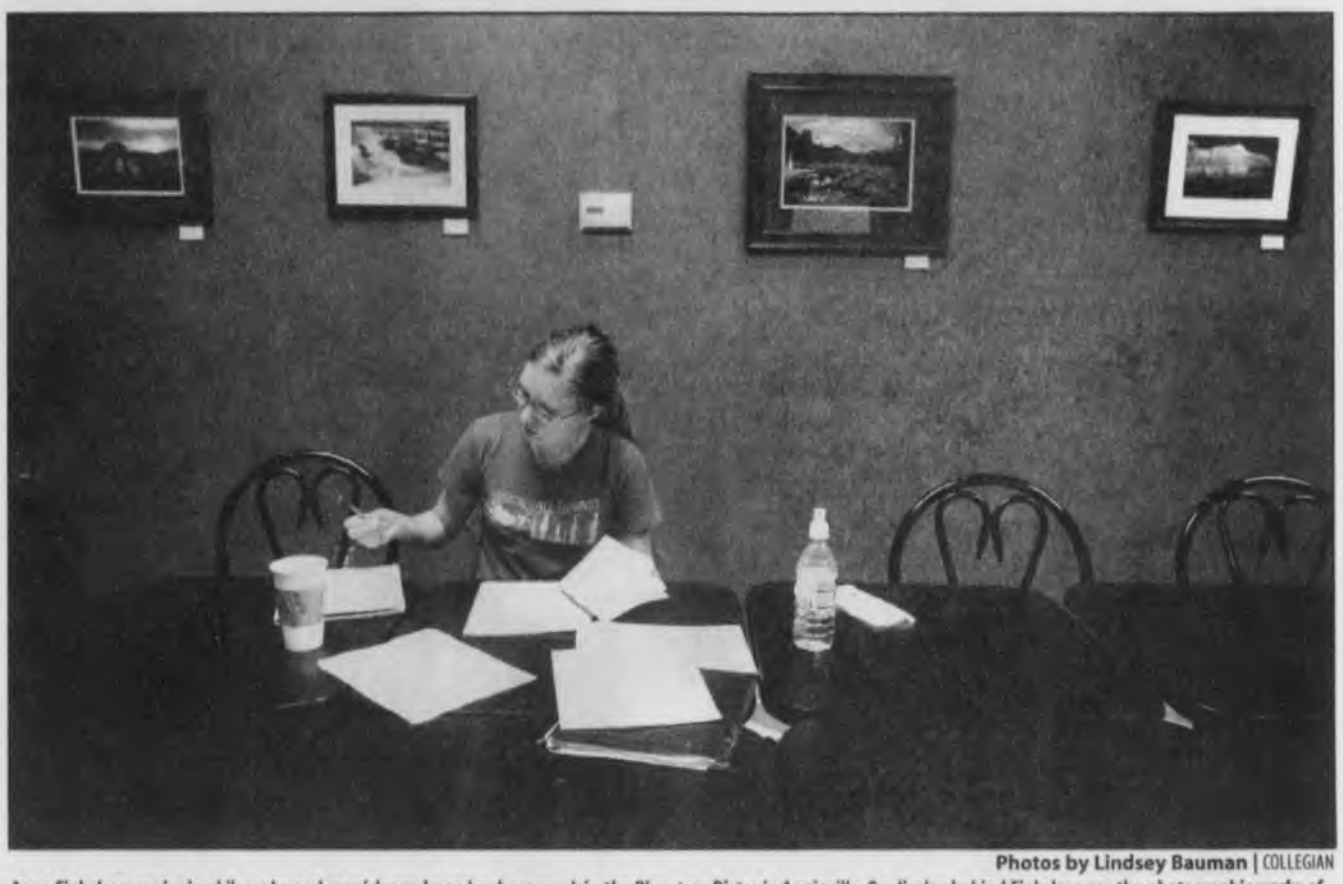
Andersen is enthusiastic about his work and customers who frequent Bluestem Bistro also have taken to his photos.

"I really like it," said Anna Finkelson, senior in Spanish and philosophy. "I think it's fun because of the color contrast and composition he uses."



Brent Aldridge, manager of the Bistro, said the feedback he's heard has been positive.

"(The customer's response) has been very positive and everybody's amazed at his talent," Aldridge said. "They all ask who the artist is, and he's usually here so I'll point to him."



Talent is an important factor in how exhibits are chosen at Bluestem, according to Aldridge. "First, he's a great artist, and second, he's a good customer and friend of the café's."

Despite this being his first exhibit, Anderson already has several more exhibits lined up and remains optimistic.

"I've got some [exhibits] coming up in Kansas City at local coffee shops, and I'm open to putting up my pictures wherever people want them," he said.

Pixar's superhero flick fun for the whole family

"The Incredibles"
Movie review by Corbin H. Crable

I just can't imagine a world without my favorite comic book hero, Superman. But apparently, Pixar Animation Studios could.

In its latest box-office hit, "The Incredibles," the world turns its back on superheroes, simply because saving the day becomes too messy for everyone involved.

This puts Bob Parr (a.k.a. Mr. Incredible, voiced by Craig T. Nelson, formerly of TV's "Coach") and his family in a superhero relocation program.

The Parr family, consisting of former superheroes Mr. Incredible, Elastigirl (voiced by Holly Hunter), and their children, Violet (Sarah Vowell) and Dashiell (Spencer Fox), are thrust into a mundane existence in a 1950s-esque suburb, where each member of the family must practice restraint in using their superhero powers, lest they expose themselves to the rest of the world.

Courtesy art

Just when you think things have become unbearably boring in the Incredibles' new lives, the family's patriarch is called back to action to thwart the plans of an old nemesis (Jason Lee). With the help of his family and old buddy Frozone (Samuel L. Jackson), it's up to the Incredibles to save the day.

This film weaves together many firsts for Pixar and Disney (didn't those two break things off a while ago?): it is the first movie the studio has filmed with an all-human cast, it is the first Pixar film to receive a PG-rating and it is the longest CGI film to date, clocking in at just under two hours, according to the Internet Movie Database (imdb.com).

"The Incredibles" also offers up just enough adult humor to keep the parents interested, while children of all ages can marvel at the very visual antics of the movie's characters. With this balance, it's sure to solidify the movie's popularity and keep it in theaters long after the Christmas holiday.

The storyline, meanwhile, presents a creative take on society's view of superheroes – that, instead of praising them for keeping society safe, we instead see them as a nuisance. And a costly one, at that – after all, if you're trying to put the bad guy behind bars, you might end up knocking over a few buildings in the process.

Without this reversal of viewpoints, that society is more annoyed with superheroes than grateful for them, the movie likely wouldn't have been nearly as successful.

In the end, in addition to the movie's humor and aesthetics, the story presents dual morals: love of one's family can be the most powerful force of all, and there's superhero potential in all of us.

That's a great, powerful statement for "The Incredibles," but I'd still rather leave that "saving the day" thing for Superman.

Gary Busey settles dispute with landlord

Actor Gary Busey and his landlord have settled a lawsuit filed against the star after he stopped paying the rent on his Malibu home, court officials said.

Busey

Busey's lawyer, Vicki Roberts, said Saturday that Busey handed over a check for the $30,000 in back rent. Under the settlement, the landlord must make repairs to the home, including fixing problems with the ventilation system.

The agreement came as the case was about to go to trial.

Busey has lived in the modest three-bedroom home with ocean views for more than a decade. He claimed that dust and mold in the ventilation system affected his breathing and stopped paying the $6,000 per month rent when the problems didn't get fixed.

Director Zemeckis gets star in Hollywood

Director Robert Zemeckis, traveling on "The Polar Express," stopped long enough to pick up a star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame. Zemeckis, who won an Oscar for directing "Forrest Gump," received the 2,268th star Friday.

Frequent collaborator Tom Hanks attended the ceremony along with hundreds of other fans.

"He is, to film, a visionary," Hanks said. "He is what Paul McCartney is to music. Bob is, without a doubt, the most inspirational example of the true work ethic that is needed in order to make movies in this day and age than any other human being I have worked with or come across."

Barker gives $1 million to UCLA law school

Bob Barker is used to handing out prizes as host of the TV game show "The Price is Right." But officials at the University of California, Los Angeles, law school announced last week that Barker has given out a prize of another sort: $1 million for an animal rights law endowment.

Barker, who has hosted the game show for more than three decades, often advises viewers to spay or neuter their pets.

He said he hoped the endowment would encourage more law students to get involved in protecting animals.

"Animal exploitation happens throughout this country and elsewhere," Barker said. "Animals need all the protection we can give them."

The Bob Barker Endowment Fund for the Study of Animal Rights Law will pay for teaching, research, seminars and lectures. The effort will be led by UCLA professor Taimie Bryant, who teaches a course in animal law.

Maker of 'Dessert' sues Jessica Simpson

Jessica Simpson has been sued by a California cosmetics company that claims it is still owed nearly $200,000 for products it supplied for the "Dessert" beauty line the singer endorses.

Simpson

In a lawsuit filed Oct. 21, Cosmojet claims Simpson and Dessert Beauty Inc. failed to pay the full $1 million it was promised for products it made for the line.

Simpson maintains she was simply a spokeswoman for Dessert and was not responsible for the company's accounting and billing procedures.

Randi Shinder, president of Dessert Beauty, acknowledged receiving almost $1 million in products made by Cosmojet, but said his company refused payment on a portion of the shipment because it did not "meet the company's high product standards and specifications."

Wildcats dominate second half against Tigers, still in hunt for Big 12 North division title

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Scott Edmonds chases Missouri quarterback Brad Smith out of the pocket during the first half of Saturday's game. The K-State defense shut down the Tiger's offense during the second half to help the Wildcats improve their record to 2-4 in conference play...

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

COLUMBIA, MO. – And just like that the K-State Wildcats are back in the hunt.

After spotting the Missouri Tigers a 21-0 first-half lead, the Wildcats roared back on Saturday for a 35-24 win at Faurot Field. The win keeps K-State's Big 12 North Division title hopes and bowl aspirations alive for another week.

The Wildcats (4-5, 2-4) now find themselves one game out of the Big 12 North lead behind Iowa State and Nebraska. If K-State wins its next two games against Colorado and the Cyclones and Nebraska falls to either Oklahoma or the Buffaloes to finish the season, the Wildcats will be division champions.

"I have no earthly idea what I've done to deserve an opportunity like this," Coach Bill Snyder said. "We haven't done anything to deserve the opportunity to do this, but if that's the way the good Lord wants it, then we'll take it."

At 7:45 in the second quarter, it looked as if it was all over for the Wildcats.

Missouri quarterback Brad Smith had just thrown a 31-yard touchdown pass to Sean Coffey, giving the Tigers a 21-0 lead, and starting K-State quarterback Dylan Meier and the offense was sputtering.

But K-State was not finished.

The Wildcats out-scored the Tigers 35-3 for the remainder of the game behind the play of sophomore quarterback Allen Webb off the bench, a revitalized defense and another big-time performance from senior running back Darren Sproles.

Other than an 18-yard Sproles' touchdown run at 5:33 in the second quarter, the offense was non-existent, compiling only 129 total yards and failing to convert on several opportunities in Tiger territory.

The second half was a different story.

Sproles broke off on a 74-yard touchdown run at 8:30 in the third quarter to bring the Wildcats within seven of the Tigers.

Junior right tackle Jeromey Clary said that touchdown helped swing the momentum the offense craved.

"We were starting to chip away with a little yardage here, a little yardage there," Clary said. "It just seemed like we broke it with Sproles, and once we got 'Big Mo' we never let go of it."

Sproles finished the game with 160 yards and two touchdowns on 20 carries – his third-straight multi-touchdown game this season.

In relief of a struggling Meier, Webb threw two touchdowns in the second half, including the go-ahead, 20-yard touchdown to senior Antoine Polite that gave the Wildcats a 28-24 lead in the fourth quarter.

Then there was the defense.

Lindsey Bauman | COLLEGIAN

Darren Sproles is tackled by Missouri's Nino Williams II during the second half of K-State's 35-24 win in Columbia, Mo. Sproles had 160 yards on 20 carries and scored two touchdowns.

The Wildcats forced four Missouri turnovers, including sophomore linebacker Brandon Archer's 25-yard interception return for a touchdown that gave K-State its final 11-point winning margin.

But the biggest Wildcat defensive play might not have seemed like it at the time.

With the score tied 21-21 early in the fourth quarter, Missouri tailback Damien Nash broke through the K-State defense and looked to be heading for the end zone, but Wildcat safety Jesse Tetuan caught Nash from behind at K-State's six-yard line.

The Tigers would be forced to settle for a field goal and would not score again.

"That was huge," defensive coordinator Bob Elliott said. "Not just huge because he saved us four points, but also the momentum that he saved us. I'm really proud of him."

Nearly all of the 63,412 attending the game likely wondered what was responsible for such a dramatic change in the Wildcats' play from the first to second half.

It was all attitude, several players said.

"Everybody went into the locker room (at halftime) and started pointing at themselves instead of pointing at everybody else, and said somebody's got to step up and make a play," sophomore wide receiver Yamon Figurs said.

Clary said the second half showed what the Wildcats can do when they play as a team.

"If all 11 of us play at one time, it's amazing what we can do," he said.

third-and-seven to tie the game at 21, and later hit senior wide receiver Antoine Polite on a third-and-10 for a 20-yard score to put the Wildcats up for good, with 9:39 left in the fourth quarter.

Webb said the credit for his play should go to the offensive line and senior running back Darren Sproles, who ran for 160 yards on 20 carries and two touchdowns.

"I have to give a lot of credit to our line, because it starts with the line, and and another thing is playing with Darren Sproles," Webb said. "He just takes so much pressure off of you as a player, because he is such a playmaker."

Miller said he was proud of Webb's ability to come in when the team needed him.

"We needed to go to the bullpen, and he came through," Miller said.

"It's a good thing he can do it and do it well, because we needed him."

K-State volleyball team falls versus No. 3 Huskers in Lincoln

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

LINCOLN, NEB. – Few teams come into Nebraska Coliseum and leave with a win. K-State did it last year, but the No. 3 Cornhuskers were too much for the Wildcats to pull off a repeat win on Saturday.

Nebraska survived a close first game and went on to win games two and three handily en route to a 30-27, 30-24 and 30-13 win over No. 18 K-State in front of a sell-out crowd of 4,154. With the win, the Cornhuskers improve to 21-1 overall and remain the Big 12 Conference's lone unbeaten squad in conference play, at 15-0. The Wildcats dropped to 15-8 overall and 9-5 in the Big 12.

Coach Suzie Fritz said the Wildcats were not able to perform well enough to hang with the Cornhuskers as the match progressed.

"You have to give consistent effort, you have to execute at a high level and we didn't," Fritz said. "We got worse as the match went; they got better."

The Cornhusker defense had 14 blocks on the game, while limiting K-State to a season-low .089 hitting. Outside hitters Sarah Pavan and Jennifer Saleaumua led Nebraska with 16 and 15 kills, respectively, as the team hit .291 on the game.

Fritz said those statistics reflected both Nebraska's ability and the poor play of K-State.

"I didn't think we played well defensively whatsoever," Fritz said. "But no doubt they're making great effort to save balls, and when we made big swings they were keeping them alive, returning them in transition and putting a great deal of pressure on us for most of the match."

Junior outside hitter Agata Rezende led the Wildcats with nine kills, senior setter Gabby Guerre chipped in seven kills to go with 21 assists and eight digs. Freshman libero Angie Lastra led the team with 13 digs.

Rezende had seven of her kills in game one but was held to just two for the rest of the match.

Fritz said that was a reflection of poor K-State passing in games two and three.

"She's a right-side attacker so we have to pass relatively well to get her some swings, and we weren't able to do that down the stretch," Fritz said.

One bright spot for K-State on the night was the season-debut of freshman middle blocker Rita Liliom. Liliom, a native of Budapest, Hungary, was cleared to play earlier in the week. She had one kill and two blocks Saturday.

The win gave the Huskers a season sweep of the Wildcats. K-State swept the season series last year.

Fritz said the difference between last season and this season came down to Nebraska's improvement and experience and K-State's younger team, which is trying to replace some key players.

"They're a more mature team. Their entire team is back from last year so they're more mature, more experienced," she said. "They've added Pavan, who's made a dent. We're trying to replace four starters from a year ago and so we're two very different teams. There really is no comparison."

WTEN | Fall play concludes at Thunderbird

Rosenberg

The fall season for the K-State women's tennis team wrapped up this weekend, as freshman Tamar Kvaratskhelia and senior Maria Rosenberg fell in their quarterfinal matches at the Thunderbird Invitational Saturday in Tempe, Ariz.

Kvaratskhelia lost 6-2, 6-2 to Stanford's Whitney Deason in the quarters, and then defeated TCU's Kewa Lewis 6-3, 7-6 (3) in the consolation draw to finish the fall with a 14-2 singles match record.

Rosenberg, who tied former Wildcat Alena Jecminkova for second on the K-State career singles wins list on Friday, fell 6-3, 6-3 to Stanford's Lejla Hodzic in the quarterfinals.

The Manhattan native is now just 10 wins shy of the K-State career singles record with an overall career record of 67-44.

K-State's spring season is set to begin Jan. 22 against Drake at Cottonwood Racquest Club.

NCAA | Chang breaks NCAA passing record

Timmy Chang remembers all too well when he was booed and benched at Hawaii.

Now he has not only cemented his legacy at the school, but he has left his mark on all of college football. He moved to the top of the NCAA career list for yards passing, breaking the record of 15,031 set by BYU's Ty Detmer from 1988-91.

The milestone came on a 7-yard scoring pass in the first quarter of Hawaii's 34-23 victory over Louisiana Tech on Saturday. He received a standing ovation for several minutes and was presented with the ball.

He finished the game with four touchdowns and 285 yards. The fifth-year senior from Honolulu has 15,303 yards with at least four games remaining.

Chang entered the game needing 14 yards to break Detmer's record. He overtook the Heisman Trophy winner with a toss to Jason Rivers on the Warriors' second series.

VOTING | Precinct confusion reportedly causes ballot fiasco

the 67th and 66th District State House of Representatives. The persons in question live in the 67th District, which includes much of western Manhattan, but voted in the 66th district.

Vargo said it is unclear what exactly happened, but that the four votes would not be included in either house race.

"I don't know that anyone really knows what happened. At this point, there's nothing that can be done about it. The votes have been cast," he said.

The provisional ballots cast in the 66th would be treated as partial ballots, Vargo said.

This means the votes in the house race would not count, but the rest of the ballot would be counted as it would if it were cast in the correct district.

Joe McGraw, Republican candidate in the 67th district, said he was unaware of the confusion until reading the Mercury article, but that he didn't think four votes would make a huge difference in either race.

"Four votes wasn't making any difference in any of the races that I could see or that I remember," McGraw said. "We're just waiting for the provisional ballots to see what they come back as, but it would take a lot for things to change."

Preliminary results had McGraw losing to Democratic opponent Tom Hawk by 93 votes with several hundred provisional ballots – ballots cast by people not on the list at their polling place – left to be counted.

McGraw said the County Clerk's office will begin determining the legitimacy of those ballots on Monday to determine the final outcome.

Hawk, along with 66th district candidates Paul Barkey, (R), and Sydney Carlin, (D) were unavailable for comment.

national trend of age and income playing a role in likelihood to vote.

Despite the relatively low turnout of college-aged voters, Vargo said preliminary figures showed the age group voted in higher numbers this year than in previous elections.

The total number of voters was up countywide, but the most significant increase in ballots cast was in advance voters, Vargo said.

More than 4,000 Riley County voters submitted their ballots before Nov. 2, which Vargo said is easily a record. In the primary election, there were about 1,500 advance ballots.

"It's a lot higher than ever before," Vargo said. "It's just tremendous."

Riley County's advance voting matched the nationwide record set in the number of people who voted early.

Not all Riley County results matched popular assumptions, though.

Many people assume young people and those in a university town might lean more toward a liberal agenda, but Riley County and Manhattan votes did not reflect this trend.

President Bush won a slim majority of the popular vote nationwide, and carried a larger majority in Kansas, with about 62 percent of the votes. Sixty-one percent of Riley County voters selected Bush.

Statewide, though, Bush lost 13 percent of voters age 18-29 compared to the 2000 election, according to CNN.com.

Riley County voters also voted more heavily Republican in races for the U.S. Senate and U.S. House of Representatives than the state average.

The Pressure Mounts

Administrators, coaches adjust to academic guidelines, national pressure

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

BEYOND THE SPORT

This is the final installment in a five-part series profiling the challenges involved in being a successful student-athlete at K-State.

The formula is often quite simple: Win and you stay. Lose and you are sent packing.

The pressure on college coaches and athletic administrators becomes even more intense when succeeding in the classroom is more important than achieving athletic success.

However, even when K-State student-athletes follow all the academic rules, other outside factors cause pressure to mount on coaches and administrators.

This past August, Mark Schlabach of the Washington Post wrote an article critical of schools that award graded class credit to varsity athletes.

The main subject of the article: K-State and Coach Bill Snyder's football team.

Schlabach's article called into question K-State's policy of awarding a grade and one credit hour to athletes who participate in a varsity sport.

Phil Hughes, associate athletic director for student services at K-State, said Schlabach's article was misleading and did not explore all the reasons for giving credit to varsity athletes.

"We are a school, and Ohio State is a school, where we actually say up front 'for the time and effort you put into this sport, here is a credit of participation,"

U.S. troops begin attack on Fallujah

By Jim Krane
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEAR FALLUJAH, Iraq – Thousands of U.S. troops, backed by armor and a stunning air barrage, attacked Sunni insurgents' toughest strongholds in Fallujah on Monday, launching a long-awaited offensive aimed at ending guerrilla control of the Sunni Muslim city.

After nightfall, U.S. troops advanced slowly on the northwestern Jolan neighborhood, a warren of alleyways where Sunni militant fighters have dug in. Artillery, tanks and warplanes pounded the district's northern edge, softening the defenses and attempting to set off any bombs and boobytraps before troops moved in.

At the same time, another force pushed into the northeastern Askari district, the first large-scale assault into the insurgent-held area of the city, the military said. U.S. tanks and Humvees from the 1st Infantry Division could be seen inside Askari.

Marines were visible on rooftops inside Jolan. This reporter, located at a U.S. camp near the city, saw orange explosions lighting up the district's palm trees, minarets and dusty roofs, and a fire burning on the city's edge.

Some 5,000 U.S. Marines and soldiers were massed in the desert on Fallujah's northern edge participating in the assault. Iraqi troops deployed with them took over a nearby train station after the Americans fired on it to drive off fighters.

The top U.S. commander in Iraq, Gen. George Casey, predicted a "major confrontation" on the streets of Fallujah in the operation

ELECTIONS 2004

Races unchanged after provisional ballot count

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After reviewing the 798 provisional ballots cast last Thursday in Riley County, the final outcome of the election remains the same.

Riley County Clerk Rich Vargo said in addition to reviewing the provisional ballots, his office also certified the election for the entire county.

Vargo said while there were some slight adjustments in the final tallies, there were no significant change in the results.

The final number of ballots cast in the county was 21,060, more total ballots than ever before in Riley County, though the percentage itself was not an all-time high.

Vargo said he attributed the high turnout to the presidential election, as well as a larger than usual number of contested local races.

Two races were close enough to possibly swing the other way after the provisional ballots were considered: 3rd District County Commission and 67th District Kansas House of Representatives.

In the County Commission race, preliminary results showed Republican incumbent Bob Newsome with a 79-vote advantage over Democratic challenger Geri Simon. Final results show Newsome with a 106-vote lead.

Newsome said he felt confident over the weekend despite the close race.

"I was confident. To overtake me she had to have two and a half votes for every one that I needed," he said. "I felt good going in. I thought I could at least break even."

Simon said she knew it was possible to overturn the deficit, but she didn't think about it a lot over the weekend.

"It was on my mind, but I knew it was a long shot," she said.

Bars respond to food ordinance repeal

By Annie Lewis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Now that bars don't have to generate 30 percent of their revenue in food sales, owners and managers say they are going to start selling more food.

On Nov. 2, 60.81 percent of Manhattan residents voted in favor of repealing the 30 percent rule.

This rule stated any establishment selling alcohol had to generate at least 30 percent of their revenue in food sales.

Preston Fox, manager of Rusty's Last Chance, said the repeal of the 30-percent rule is a big relief.

"Now we are going to try and sell more food," he said. "We're trying to revamp our menu and get people to come down to Aggieville."

For Rusty's, 30 percent of sales in food was an unrealistic expectation, Fox said.

"It was an unreachable goal," he said. "I think in the 15 years that it has been in effect, we have hit it once."

Fox said the change will come into effect at the first of the year, and people shouldn't worry about negative results.

"Aggieville will remain the same," he said. "People aren't going to come out more looking to get drunk because of this."

Kite's Bar and Grill is another bar that will continue selling food.

"We've always stayed above the 30 percent," Assistant Manager Ally Enderby said. "Hopefully some of the smaller bars will stop selling food."

Enderby agreed this change will probably not increase the numbers of drunken college students visiting Aggieville.

The judge in Scott Peterson's murder case lectured jury members Monday about the importance of deliberating with an open mind. After three days of deliberation, signs show possible deadlock.

READERS' REPRESENTATIVE FOR THE COLLEGIAN

CHRIS BLUIETT

Chris can be reached at cab66676@ksu.edu.

Student government is aware and concerned about the parking issue and has sent recommendations to the Parking Council. It is now up to the Parking Council to address the problems.

For now, readers should continue to e-mail and write student senators and keep advocating issues they are concerned about. Thanks to those who wrote me e-mails and let me know what has been done so far about the the parking problems.

Another concern K-State has to deal with is the unbalanced student to advisor ratio.

Most colleges at K-State require each student to see an adviser before his or her flag for enrollment can be lifted. Because of the growing student population, a shortage of advisers has occurred.

One would think with a policy like that, the colleges that demand this procedure would provide adequate advisers for the amount of students needing advising. That would only make sense. Besides, there are times as a student that I just want to see my advisers to ask them questions or raise concerns I have.

One of the main problems is the colleges are having professors act as advisers when they already have a heavy load of classes. These colleges should hire specially trained advisers who do nothing but advise students.

The quality of advising is not what it should be. Advising is not the first priority of a lot of advisers. Getting students in and out and not really taking the time with each student is causing a lot of unnecessary stress to the student and probably the adviser, also.

This lack of good solid advising has become a major issue to students, because a lot of you have told me this causes you to take classes you really don't need for your degree. This can add to the price of your already high tuition.

The first thing that needs to be done is that the university needs to hire more advisers and continue to hire more as the student enrollment goes up. Then the advisers need to open up their schedules to assure any student needing talk to them can.

I have been fortunate to have some pretty good advisors over the course of my years at K-State, but there have been times where I had to wait a long time to get in their office to see them. But when I did see them, at least they had my notebook ready to go.

As I always say in my column, there are things we as students can do about these issues.

"One of the main problems is the colleges are having professors act as advisers when they already have a heavy load of classes. These colleges should hire specially trained advisers who do nothing but advise students."

In this case the main thing that you, as a student, can do is show up when you make an appointment with an adviser. Be early so other students won't have to wait so long.

Money will always be one of the big issues when hiring more advisers, but this is something that would be a good and solid investment for the students and the university.

We can always raise more money, but getting people who care about counseling students is a whole other issue.

The fact we want and need more advisers is a good thing, because it shows to the faculty that students are concerned about their education, and we are continuing to grow as a university.

Having one adviser to every 50 students would be a solid way to assure students are getting the needed help we deserve.

I have seen some surveys on advising, but we now need to get something done on this issue that will make a different in this next semester at K-State.

Student couple drawn to Vet-Med

By Kristin Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When Cory Stamper first came to K-State, he was interested in the engineering program. Little did he know that more than three years later, he would meet his wife and decide to pursue the same career as her, veterinary medicine.

"K-State has a great engineering and physics program," he said. "I originally started out in engineering. I was kind of taking the long way around. Finally I arrived at a good place to be."

Stamper said the good place to be was the College of Veterinary Medicine. He became interested in veterinary medicine after he met his wife, Mandy, in 1998.

"Part of what got me interested in veterinary medicine was listening to Mandy study with her friends and hanging out with some of her friends from vet school," he said. "You get to know some of the students and the professors."

Stamper said he decided veterinary medicine was for him after a visit to a veterinary missionary in Haiti with Mandy.

"Going to Haiti was kind of the icing on the cake," Cory said. "It just kind of convinced me (to pursue veterinary medicine)."

Using his wife's books and techniques in veterinary school has helped him become a better student, Stamper said.

"All of her books are highlighted and everything. She's probably a much more conscientious student than I am," he said.

Stamper attends K-State for his bachelor's degree in veterinary medicine, and Mandy, who graduated in May, works as an intern at Mission Veterinary Medicine in Kansas City.

"In some ways, (her internship) is like the senior year at K-State," Stamper said. "She has two or three surgeries and then two or three routines with medicine. It's a good learning environment."

He said he is unsure about his plans for the future.

"I don't know if I'll end up doing an internship or whatever," he said. "I'm a little bit older than she is, so by the time I get done, maybe it's time to just start working."

Although they are both in veterinary medicine, Cory said he may not be in the same area as Mandy.

"One cool thing that you find out through vet school is that it's a pretty broad spectrum of what you can do and so the hypothetical is that we could be doing totally different things," he said.

"I could be designing biohazard security stuff, and she'd be working on dogs and cats. We wouldn't mind working together one way or another."

Mandy said she was not opposed to working in the same office as her husband.

"I think that we've learned to work pretty well together," Mandy said.

KU student group lobbies for drinking rights

Group advocates lowering legal drinking age from 21 to 18

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A group of students from the University of Kansas are making waves as they try to change the legal drinking age from 21 to 18.

The KU Political Activist Club plans to lobby the Kansas Legislature for their cause beginning in January.

KU student Jared Loehr, sophomore in nursing, started the club of about 300 members, according to the University Daily Kansan.

He said he wants to fight the connection between federal funding and the legal drinking age.

"With the war in Iraq and the possibility of a draft, someone can get drafted but they can't have a glass of wine at their wedding," he said.

This year Kansas received $324.7 million in federal transportation aid for meeting the federal minimum age drinking law. If Kansas was to reduce the legal drinking age to 18, they would lose about $25.65 million dollars in federal funding according to the Kansas Department of Transportation.

Rep. Sydney Carlin-D District 66, said because so much money is tied to the legal drinking age, she thinks it would be more effective if the club started at the federal level.

"If there is a multi-state unit it might have an effect," she said. "Until it's changed at the federal level, we can't jeopardize those funds."

Loehr said there would not be as many problems with underage drinking if the age was lowered.

"Other countries have less issues because their drinking age is lower," he said. "The amount of binge drinking that occurs doesn't even compare."

Loehr said he wants police officers to enforce harsher DUI laws instead of minor in possession charges.

"You lose respect for the government and the laws when they don't condone you for what society condones," he said.

Loehr said he wants students from other universities involved as well.

Student Body President Hayley Urkevich said although she has not heard of any groups involved in changing the drinking age, she is sure many groups would support it.

"Someone can get drafted, but they can't have a glass of wine at their wedding."

Jared Loehr
SOPHOMORE IN NURSING AT KU

"I would definitely support student groups pursuing their interests and their causes," she said.

Loehr said the drinking age may take a while to change, but he's not giving up.

"I will keep doing it even after I'm 21," he said. "It's a good fight."

Say it with a personal.

OPINION

TO THE POINT

Course credits should extend to sports, non-athletic activities alike

Football players can get credit for participation as long as every other student on campus has the opportunity for the same credit.

Athletes do commit an immense amount of time into their sports in practices, weight training and competitions. But so do club members, student board members, theater performers, peer ministers and other students who commit just as much time and effort to campus organizations.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

While athletics bring money into the university, clubs and other activities convince tuition-paying students to come to K-State.

As long as every student can get credit for their non-academic involvement then athletes are justified in gaining credit for playing a sport – perhaps a university-wide class where students have to document hours or write essays about their experience would work.

However, if the university isn't willing to provide equitable opportunities to all students, then the athletic credit must be eliminated.

Equality is not just about race, gender or age, but also the opportunity to be recognized for your talents and involvement.

Getting our asses kicked

Democratic Party needs to present vision for America

Illustrations by Kent Holle | COLLEGIAN

SCOTT SEEL

This has not been a good week for me.

As many of you may know, I bleed blue. I am a proud Democrat and have been for the majority of my life.

Sometimes though, the proud part of that statement ain't so easy.

Nov. 3 was one of those times.

I've known all along that John Forbes Kerry was a pretty weak candidate, which is why my money went to a certain Vermont resident during the primary season, but I never realized how weak Kerry actually was.

This was a prime opportunity for Democrats to represent from the top of the ballot to the bottom.

Our fearless leader George W. Bush has failed in every aspect of his policy. Everything he has touched has been an outright failure.

The war in Iraq, all justification – or lack thereof – aside, has been somewhat of a failure despite Bush's "Mission Accomplished" stunt aboard an aircraft carrier from which he could have spit and hit the San Diego coast.

The economy, which admittedly he doesn't have a lot of control over but still weighs heavily on the minds of voters, is still in what's known as a "jobless recovery." That's spin for "still in the crapper."

No Child Left Behind is an abomination and a complete and total failure. And what's worse is most people can't argue with this.

Ohioans are experiencing one of the most significant periods of job loss in the state's history, and yet they still voted for George W. Bush.

The reason for this is simple. Republicans masterfully used wedge issues like gay marriage, both as actual ballot initiatives in 11 states – including Ohio – and as policy platforms nearly everywhere, including right here in Manhattan, to get the fundamentalist Christian base to the polls.

Look at the voter turnout numbers; it worked. One quarter of everyone who voted in Ohio identified themselves as white, evangelical Christians.

So part of the success of conservatives is brilliant strategery used by the Republicans, but I think that's only part of it.

Democrats lost because of their own incompetence.

Not so much in Riley County or in Kansas. Riley County Chair Kathryn Focke and State Party Chair Larry Gates, along with the leadership of our representatives and Governor Kathleen Sebelius, have brought the party along well locally.

I'm talking about Washington, D.C.

That means you, Terry McAuliffe. As far as I'm concerned, you should be looking for a job.

As chairman of the party I love, you have done nothing. The last two candidates had a combined charisma that left them short of Alan Greenspan.

We find ourselves in a situation where many party faithful, including myself, voted not for John Kerry, but against George Bush. This is bad for the country, and it's bad for the party.

Bush has criticized John Kerry for not having a vision or a consistent message, and I don't think that is too far off.

All the great Democratic presidents of the 20th century had a vision that they sold to America, not a hodgepodge of vague policy initiatives.

FDR had a plan to bring America out of the Great Depression.

John F. Kennedy sold Americans on his view to bring this country forward in the emerging era of civil rights.

Bill Clinton wanted to unite a divided nation and end the 12 years of Reaganomics that had pillaged our economy and left us with incredible deficits.

All of these men brought the voters to them instead of pandering to whatever bloc of voters they happened to be aiming at that day.

When you have a vision in which you're confident enough to sell to voters (like George W. Bush does), it's hard to be called a flip-flopper.

Yes, the party that I love got served one week ago.

Maybe this will wake them up, but sadly I don't think so.

Heads have got to roll, because I don't know if I can take Hillary Clinton being our best hope in 2008.

How long until I get to vote for President Barack Obama?

Planet in need of renewed focus

America needs to abandon oil in favor of renewable energy sources

CHAZ STEIMEL

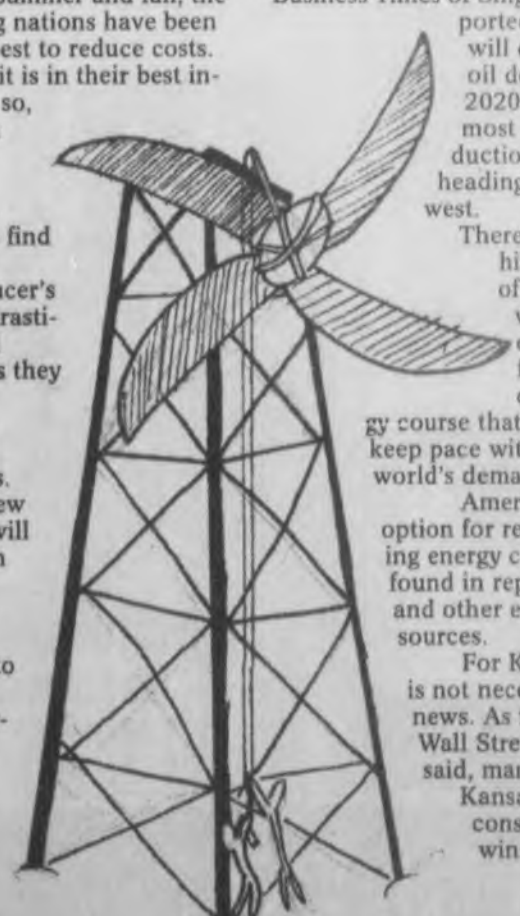
Oil cannot sustain the current trends in consumption. If the U.S. and other countries do not curb rates of consumption, oil prices will continue to rise, ultimately pushing prices up and lowering economic livelihood.

In short, high oil costs translate into higher transportation costs and production costs, causing widespread inflation.

More than 20 years ago, America hit some rough economic times when the price of oil dramatically increased, causing what has become known as "stagflation," or high inflation with a stagnating economy.

As Foreign Policy journal from November and December reports, by 2035 energy consumption will double. By 2055, it will triple.

Unfortunately, the oil industry cannot keep pace. In the 1970s, oil producing nations had plenty of reserves. If they needed to suddenly reduce the costs of oil, they could flood the oil markets and drop the prices.



However, much of that ability has now dried up. Saudi Arabia and other OPEC nations no longer have substantial reserves with which to flood the markets if they needed to.

This past summer and fall, the oil producing nations have been doing their best to reduce costs. Surprisingly it is in their best interests to do so, because high prices only encourage their chief customers to find alternatives.

The producer's inability to drastically ease oil prices signals they are as stretched to the limits of their abilities. Moreover, new production will not ease high oil costs.

Any new production will be sent to rapidly expanding markets in China. According to the Oct. 28 New York Times, one of the main reasons oil has been so costly is unexpected Chinese consumption.

Furthermore, as the Oct. 25 Business Times of Singapore reported, China will double its oil demand by 2020, meaning most new production will be heading east, not west.

Therefore, the high oil costs of the future will be our own fault for relying on an energy course that cannot keep pace with the world's demand.

America's only option for reducing rising energy costs will be found in replacing oil and other energy sources.

For Kansans, this is not necessarily bad news. As the Oct. 14 Wall Street Journal said, many places in Kansas are being considered for wind farms, one of the best sources of renewable energy.

Areas for future wind power cites include the Flint Hills and Cloud County, not to mention already developed "wind farms" located in the Southwest corner of our state.

Benefits of such programs would include increased jobs, greater land value, and additional sources of revenue for the region.

Besides just helping out the local entities in the state, it would also be a boon for Kansas as a whole. As the Oct. 25 Journal-World explained, Kansas is currently a net importer of energy. We simply do not produce enough as a state and it costs us extra money.

However, with more wind plants we would produce enough energy for our own demands, and have enough left over to export that energy adding to the states wealth.

In the near future, as Kansans and as Americans we will have to make some tough choices about our energy. The right choice is for renewable energy for America and wind power for Kansas.

Hip-hop duo makes strong debut

"The Foreign Exchange: Connected"

Album review by Mark Sibilla

Hip-hop has seen many strong releases this year among the classic MCs, as well as some newcomers displaying debuts that prove their genius is just getting started.

This year saw the Beastie Boys' "To the 5 Boroughs" successfully meld 'old-school' classicism with a 'new-school' mentality.

It saw Kanye West move from producer to one of the strongest rappers in the game right now.

In the underground scene, 2004 gave us the unstoppable collaboration between legends MF Doom and Madlib.

Now we are given "Connected" by the Foreign Exchange, the collaboration (a la last year's "Give Up" by the Postal Service) between North Carolina MC Phonte (Little Brother) and Dutch beat maker Nicolay.

The album is strong at recreating the feel and emotion of classic soul through Nicolay's production and Phonte's soulful hooks.

Phonte brings a lyricism rarely seen in rap today.

Most of the songs are tragically hopeful. That is, Phonte brings a strong emotion to his rhymes, often about the forgotten under-class of society, but his lyrics are always laced with a feeling of optimism.

The album opens with "Foreign Exchange Title Theme." Nicolay creates a sound reminiscent of a mesh of classic hip-hop and soul, but he laces the track with a shimmering, futuristic edge.

Over this, women soulfully sing "Thank you for the music/Thank you for...Right Now." This is significant because throughout the album, Phonte urges us to appreciate and live in the glory of the moment.

Phonte lyrically walks us through numerous aspects of his life throughout "Connected."

The track "Be Alright" brilliantly describes the worries associated with his girlfriend's pregnancy: "My girl was throwing up this morning/I pray it was something she ate."

"Let's Move," relates Phonte's monetary concerns, but also describes his disregard for the limelight.

The Foreign Exchange has successfully created a soulful hip-hop album that appreciates the qualities of both hip-hop and soul without bastardizing either one.

"Connected" only gets better with repeated listens: Nicolay's beats become more clear and the listener is able to appreciate their numerous intricacies; Phonte's rhymes become meaningful to the listener as his amazing flow and lyricism are displayed.

The chorus on "Happiness" is particularly significant to me in its striking simplicity: "Good people/Good loving/Good music in my life/That makes me Happy."

Amen brother, amen.

Visiting writer draws upon family life for material

K.L. Cook, creative writing and literature teacher and associate dean of the undergraduate program at Prescott College in Arizona, will be reading from his collection of short stories, "Last Call," today in the K-State Student Union.

The book won the inaugural Prarie Schooner Book Prize in Fiction. He lives in Prescott, Ariz. with his wife, playwright Charissa Menefee, and their four children.

If you go
Book reading

What: Reading from visiting writer K.L. Cook
When: 4 p.m. today
Where: Union 212

Q: When did you first realize you are a writer?
A: I think I wrote my first stories and poems in grade school and junior high like everybody else, but didn't think about it seriously till probably college, but even then I was an actor first... So I actually came to creative writing class formally fairly late... I wasn't writing stories till my mid-20s.

Q: How does your background in theater affect your fiction?
A: In a lot of ways, as an actor you're already forced to think about character in deep ways and in your body. When I first started writing stories, I used that training as an actor to carry over to my first-person stories, in particular. I would find my way into the character through the voice and then find the story by listening to that voice.

Q: Where does the subject matter for your work come from?
A: Most directly – my family. This book is loosely based on my mother's extended family. It covers three generations in the life of a West Texas family starting in 1958 before I was born, and extending to 1990. It deals with a lot of characters who are loosely based on my aunts, my uncles, my mother, my own experience. I have a rich material to go on.

Q: When you're teaching a class, and because this is a college newspaper, what advice do you have for young writers?
A: Certainly the best advice is keep the seat of your pants planted to the seat of your chair. It really is just the discipline of sitting down and writing and trying to find a rhythm for writing as much as you can. It's what I call the fertilizer theory of writing, which is you gotta lay down a bunch of s--t for the flowers to grow... There's also the old adage, write what you know, but I think it's also important to write the kind of stories you like to read.

Politically charged album powerful

"eMOTIVe"

★★★½☆

Album review by Will Klusener

Trying to guess what Maynard James Keenan will do next is like trying to glean the proverbial water from a rock.

In it's latest release, "eMOTIVe," A Perfect Circle focuses on politically charged anti-war anthems instead of the traditional hard-driving melodies blended with angst-ridden lyrics.

Interestingly enough, Keenan has seen fit to use the words of past songwriter gurus to get his message across, as "eMOTIVe" is, for the most part, a cover album.

This shouldn't be discouraging, though. Most of the remakes were masterfully restyled and recorded and provide the listener with a plethora of audio stimulation.

The song "Gimmie Gimmie Gimmie," originally written by Black Flag founder Greg Ginn, utilizes rich, dark distorted guitars overlayed with bagpipes.

Its choppy, distorted and industrial style reaffirms the original writer's message, and the lyrics reaffirm Keenan's hatred of warmongering.

One of the interesting songs on the album is a dark rendition of John Lennon's "Imagine." Keenan's version is recorded mostly in minor keys.

This is Keenan's trademark style and adds a more serious and realistic touch to the lyrics, "imagine all the people, living for today." This poignant remake seems to remind us it is important to cast aside our differences and learn to get along.

Using only his voice and a multi-track recorder, Keenan creates a beautiful a capella version of Joni Mitchell's "Fiddle and the Drum" that is sure to give one the shivers.

All melodies and harmonies are sung by Keenan in this ballad that urges people not to be so quick to "raise your sticks" to war.

Listeners looking for the familiar APC sound will enjoy "Passive," a Keenan original that harkens back to the days of their first album, "Mer de Noms."

A lone guitar beckons the rest of the band to join it with a sparse, yet beautiful eight-bar intro. Bass, drums and vocals slam into action with a straight forward audio assault sure to please any APC fan.

"Go ahead and play dead, I know that you can hear this, go ahead and play dead, why can't you turn and face me," lambasts the refusal of those in power to face the facts and mourns what good could come from a change in attitude.

The song also reflects the disappointment Keenan has in the U.S. government when he laments that "I catch a brief reflection of what you could and might have been."

It is clear this is a political album, but not one in which cheap, whiney songs were produced. Each song sends its own message and was thoughtfully chosen and arranged.

"eMOTIVe" is different from what users are used to, but if listened to with an open mind can be just as engaging as APC's previous albums.

'Six Feet Under' heading to the cemetery

"Six Feet Under," the quirky HBO series about a Southern California family that runs a funeral parlor, will end its run after its upcoming fifth season.

Alan Ball, creator and executive producer of the drama, says he feels the show has run its course.

"Working on 'Six Feet Under' has been enormously fulfilling creatively, but if the show is about anything, it's about the fact that everything comes to an end," Ball said in a news release.

Burt Reynolds sues ex-girlfriend for extortion

Burt Reynolds sued a former girlfriend, alleging that she was threatening to falsely accuse him of abuse if he didn't pay millions of dollars in extortion.

The lawsuit says that Pamela Seals falsely accused Reynolds of yelling at her and stomping on her toes. Seals, who was Reynolds' girlfriend for 10 years, told the actor she would publicize her allegations if he didn't agree to a hefty settlement that included support for Seals and her mother, half of Reynolds' Jupiter, Fla., home and other compensation.

Caught in Allen's web

Webb should be calling the signals for the Wildcats' last two games

Later today the public should know Coach Bill Snyder's decision on who will be K-State's starting quarterback on Saturday at Colorado.

ANTHONY MENDOZA

The decision should have been made already.

After last Saturday's 21-point comeback, season-saving win over Missouri led by Allen Webb, it should be the Indiana transfer.

Dylan Meier is and should be the long-term starting quarterback for the Wildcats, but multiple injuries this season have left the sophomore ineffective down the stretch for K-State.

With the last two games meaning going bowling or going home for the rest of the year, the healthier and more effective Webb should be calling the signals for the Wildcats in the last two conference games.

Since the Kansas game when Meier told the coaches prior to kick off that he could not play, it was apparent Meier's injuries were more serious than anyone had been led to believe.

After Webb's rough first half in Lawrence when he stepped in for the injured Meier, he has been instrumental in both of the Wildcat's conference wins.

In his second start at quarterback (we won't mention his first start against Fresno State), Webb rushed for 147 yards and four touchdowns and completed 14 out of 23 passes for 124 yards in the Wildcats' win over Nebraska.

Platooning with Meier in last Saturday's game, Coach Snyder rolled the dice in the second half and went with the quarterback with the hot hand,Webb, and his gamble paid off.

Webb completed six passes on eight attempts, two of which were touchdowns.

The first one to Jermaine Moreira to tie the game at 21, and the second a 20-yard pass over the middle on third and 10 to Antoine Polite.

K-State is playing better overall with Webb as the quarterback, and the player who has benefited the most from the play of Webb is running back Darren Sproles.

In Big 12 Conference play, Sproles has reached the 100-yard rushing mark only twice this season. The first time against Nebraska, the second against Missouri – both games in which Webb played a large role.

With Webb at quarterback, opponents can't just key in on Sproles, because they have to respect the mobility of Webb.

The option runs smoother as long as the ball doesn't bounce off the helmet of Ayo Saba and the most important thing is, Webb is confident.

The throw over the middle to Polite against Missouri would not have happened earlier this year. It would either been intercepted, thrown into the ground or in the first row.

Not only has Webb's confidence grown, he has started to make believers of his biggest critics – the K-State fans.

It has gone from losing all hope when Webb steps on the field or wanting the redshirt taken off of freshman Allan Evridge, to fans wanting the quick hook for Webb if Meier is inefficient.

Coach Snyder tried to avoid a quarterback controversy from the beginning of the year. He has one now at the end of the season.

New look Wildcats start fresh

No. 19 Wildcats face Emporia State in exhibition

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's basketball team unveils its new look at 7 tonight, as the No. 19 Wildcats take on Emporia State in an exhibition match in Bramlage Coliseum.

K-State will welcome three freshmen into a lineup featuring four returning starters from last year's Big 12 Co-Championship squad.

Seniors Laurie Koehn, Kendra Wecker, Megan Mahoney, Chelsea Dominico, along with new starter Brie Madden, are expected to start against the Hornets. Fans also will get their first look at the talent the Wildcats brought in during the offseason.

Expected to make a significant effect this season is 6-foot-2 freshman Shana Wheeler. Wheeler will be one of several players who will be called upon to replace departed center Nicole Ohlde.

Wecker said Wheeler is making progress towards becoming an impact player in the Big 12.

"Shana Wheeler has made some great strides since she first came here this summer with her toughness and being able to play with her back to the basket," Wecker said. "She can jump like no other. Once she figures out how tough and physical the play is going to be, she's going to be a huge asset to our team, and I think she'll see some significant minutes."

The Cats also return nine players from last season, which creates a mix of old and new this season.

Coach Deb Patterson said the Wildcats are looking to establish a team identity against Emporia State.

"I'm anxious to see what our personality is on the floor against our first opponent, as we have to make game-time decisions and as we attempt to answer some of the questions that we have about our front line and our front-line production and our combinations," Patterson said.

Leading the Wildcat charge is Wecker, preseason Big 12 Player of the Year and top returning scorer in the Big 12, having averaged 16.8 points per game last season.

Sophomore Casey Henningsen leads Emporia State, ranked No. 6 in Division-II. She led the MIAA conference last year in scoring and rebounding, at 11.7 points and 6.2 rebounds per game.

Koehn said Emporia State presents a challenge, and the Wildcats' focus will be on getting better against actual game competition.

"I think people will still see the offensive strengths of each individual player and have a chance to kind of get a preview of what players do well," Koehn said. "I think we just have to come out and really play hard and really play in good positions and pay attention to all the things we've been trying to work on."

PRESSURE | Volleyball coach defends academic credit policy

"It is my understanding that Kansas State, beginning in the fall of 2005, will no longer be offering graded credit. All the participation credit will be pass or fail."

Phil Hughes
ASSOCIATE ATHLETIC DIRECTOR FOR STUDENT SERVICES

Hughes said. "It's not this rich bonanza of credit towards a degree program. I think the article was ill-conceived and very inaccurate."

"If institutions agree to award credit for participation and have a history of doing that for all students, and they feel learning occurs outside the classroom and has meaningful, viable, tangible and developmental positives, why would you not want to give them one credit for their time?"

K-State volleyball head coach Suzie Fritz said criticizing the practice of giving credit to varsity student-athletes is not right.

"I think being critical of any institution that gives letter grades to student-athletes for the time that they are putting in would be unfair," Fritz said. "If they knew how much time and energy (the athletes) spent representing their university, then I think anybody would understand that one credit hour is not even indicative of how much time and energy they are expending representing Kansas State."

Because of Schlabach's article, Hughes said K-State has had to adjust due to the national pressure the athletic administration faced.

"It is seen as a possible conflict of interest where there is some tension about (giving credit) for such a visible group," Hughes said. "It is my understanding that Kansas State, beginning in the fall of 2005, will no longer be offering graded credit. All the participation credit will be pass or fail. That could be done as a response to the national temperament to this issue."

Whether the pressure comes from the media's critical eye or NCAA legislation, K-State has had to adapt as a result.

This past year, academic progress was the focus of new NCAA legislation, and the result was a historic academic reform package that forced athletic departments across the country to change the way they operate.

Hughes said while the rule changes seem like a good idea, there are flaws in the new legislation.

"I don't necessarily argue (against) higher academic standards," Hughes said. "I think the byproduct – the inability to explore or discover different degree programs – is anti-educational. We have constructed anti-educational requirements for an institution of higher education. That seems to be quite the paradox."

Now, student-athletes' eligibility is evaluated on a semester basis instead of a yearly basis, athletes are required to complete a greater percentage of their degree requirements each year and harsh punishments can result from a lack of academic progress.

Because of the new progress rates, athletes are virtually unable to switch majors more than once. K-State counselors now recommend athletes enter school in an open-option program, and at the beginning of their third semester, change their major to their desired field of study.

Hughes said it will be nearly impossible for student-athletes to meet the new requirements if they change majors more than once.

"When you have to meet those higher thresholds in the degree program, you can't switch because you'll never make it," he said. "You will make yourself ineligible by going from one major to another."

Adding more pressure to the job of athletic administrators and coaches is that now, if an athlete decides to transfer, the school can face punishment.

Dez Willingham, a former guard for Coach Jim Wooldridge's basketball team, transferred from K-State this past summer. While he left in good academic standing, his transfer now counts against K-State's academic progress rates.

Wooldridge said a situation like the one involving Willingham should not be the school's responsibility.

"(Willingham) left the program on his own and he was a good student," Wooldridge said. "But he will count against us, and we will be docked because of his departure. I still don't believe that is a fair way to evaluate academic success. When a kid leaves your program and you are docked for that, I don't know that it is a fair analysis of whether or not you're succeeding."

Consequently, K-State has made some adjustments in order to avoid punishments that could result from another transfer like Willingham's.

Hughes said K-State and other institutions are implementing measures to discourage student-athletes from transferring.

"Now, the fact that NCAA legislation will work against athletes that want to transfer, I believe every institution in the country will now have a non-release policy regarding transfer status," Hughes said. "Institutions are not going to facilitate or encourage the loss of retention points by athletes that want to leave."

With the academic reforms set to take effect by the 2005-06 school year, Hughes said K-State faces a tough task in preparing for the changes.

"It costs more in tutoring dollars, it adds pressure to my counseling staff, it adds pressure to the kids, and it adds a lot of pressure to the academic advisers on campus," Hughes said. "How we operate now has to be modified."

"There is an added pressure on intercollegiate athletics as a whole."

The senior running back's third quarter dash to the end zone was one of four finalists selected for the "Pontiac Game Changing Performance" of the week competition on ESPN.

Sproles' run was chosen, as it kick-started K-State's comeback effort in the second half that led to a 35-24 Wildcat win.

Fans can vote for the performance by visiting www.espn.com/pontiac. The winning play will be announced during the Pontiac High Performance Halftime Report on ESPN Thursday night.

MCBB | KU preseason No. 1; ACC dominates Top 25

Kansas stood atop the Associated Press' Top 25 on Monday, the 13th straight season the Jayhawks have been ranked 11th or higher in the first poll.

The Jayhawks received 25 first-place votes and 1,697 points from the national media panel, edging Wake Forest, which had 22 first-place votes and 1,680 points.

The Demon Deacons were the first of three straight Atlantic Coast Conference teams in the poll, and six teams from the league were in the Top 25.

The Jayhawks hope they can do even better than the last time they were No. 1 in the preseason: In 1956-57, Chamberlain led them to the national championship game, a triple-overtime loss to North Carolina.

MLB | Royals acquire Long for May, Bukvich

The San Diego Padres traded one of their extra outfielders, Terrence Long, to Kansas City for left-hander Darrell May and right-hander Ryan Bukvich on Monday.

Long

The Royals also obtained right-hander Dennis Tankersley.

The trade relieves the Royals of one of their most divisive players and could help shore up one of their biggest needs: speed and offense at the outfield corner.

May had a 5.61 ERA in 2004 with nine wins and 19 losses, which led the majors and tied a club record. The left-hander infuriated many fans and teammates when, late in the season, he blamed most of his troubles on poor run support and a faulty bullpen.

Long, 27, is a left-handed hitter who batted a career-best .295 with three home runs and 28 RBIs.

RESULTS | Provisional ballots did not hinder process, election officials say

In any election, Simon said, there is really no way to plan for the provisional ballots.

Simon and Newsome agreed the provisional ballot system is a fair one.

"There can be problems with anything," Simon said. "Certainly the provisional ballot system is supposed to be a way under the HAVA (Help America Vote Act) to help catch any errors," Simon said. "There is nothing wrong with that."

Newsome said he thought the system was fair and effective.

"I think it's a fair way," he said. "I'm pleased, and I think we've got a good system. I can only speak about Kansas, but I think we've got a good system, and I think it works."

In the 67th District Kansas House of Representatives race, Democrat Tom Hawk and Republican Joe McGraw were vying to fill the seat vacated by Republican Roger Reitz, who chose not to run in order to run for the 22nd District Kansas Senate. Reitz defeated Democrat Julie Govert Walker.

Preliminary results indicated Hawk had received 93 more votes than Republican Joe McGraw. The final total margin of victory for Hawk was 89 votes.

Fishing team finishes 2nd at nationals

Student team members earn scholarships at competition

By Karthik Reddy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State fishing team returned from the national championships in Wheeler Lake, Ala, with a second-place finish.

Brad Taylor, junior in electrical engineering said the annual national tournament saw collegiate teams all over the U.S participate in a 3-day fishing event.

This year K-State came in second overall, but a few students won individual scholarships as high as $5,000, he said. He also said he won a scholarship of $1,000 and a new tackle box.

Taylor said the tournament was one of many sponsored by the American Bass Anglers (ABA) who recently had announced a special program for college bass fishing clubs, called CAST or Collegiate Angler Scholarship Tour.

He also said fishing clubs affiliated with American Bass Anglers now could fish in ABA sponsored tournaments with no entry fee and college team members would not be fishing for cash but for points and year-end scholarship awards.

According to him, members of college fishing teams would be competing against other college students and not the entry fee-paying members of the ABA.

Chris Hunter, sophomore in agricultural technology management, said he had received a scholarship of $5,000 and a trophy for being the collegiate angler of the year.

The prizes were given to the top points holder after the national championship.

The students who placed between second and fifth would each receive a $1,000 scholarship, he said.

Hunter said the students at the competition were the top five anglers from the top 10 teams in the program sponsored by the ABA.

The Top School award was presented based on the total points of the five anglers from each school combined, after the national championship.

Hunter said the K-State fishing club has about 25 members between the ages of 16 and 25, and others interested in joining the club are welcome to contact them.

FOOD SALES | Task force vows to work against substance abuse

"When people come out, they are coming out to either eat or drink," she said. "Late at night you can still eat at Burger King or Pita Pit."

J. Lester Hooper, president of the Little Apple Task Force, said he remembered when Lawrence dropped their food sales restrictions in 1991.

"There was so much alcohol and drug abuse that they reinstated a 50 percent food requirement for new establishments," he said.

Hooper said the drop of required food sales will lead to an over-consumption of alcohol.

"The group that advocated for the drop is called Group for Prosperity," he said. "I wonder, who is going to prosper now?"

The Little Apple Task Force is dedicated to reducing substance abuse in Manhattan, Hooper said, and they are going to continue their efforts.

"The money that is generated from alcohol tax will be used for drug abuse education," he said.

"We are going to keep putting out information on drug abuse."

IRAQ | 42 insurgents, 2 Marines die as main Fallujah assault begins

he said was called "al-Fajr," Arabic for "dawn." He told reporters in Washington on Monday that up to 15,000 U.S. troops along with Iraqi forces were encircling the city.

Two Marines were killed when their bulldozer flipped over into the Euphrates near Fallujah earlier Monday. A military spokesman estimated that 42 insurgents were killed across Fallujah in bombardment and skirmishes before the main assault began.

A doctor at a clinic in Fallujah, Mohammed Amer, reported 12 people were killed. Seventeen others, including a 5-year-old girl and a 10-year-old boy, were wounded he said.

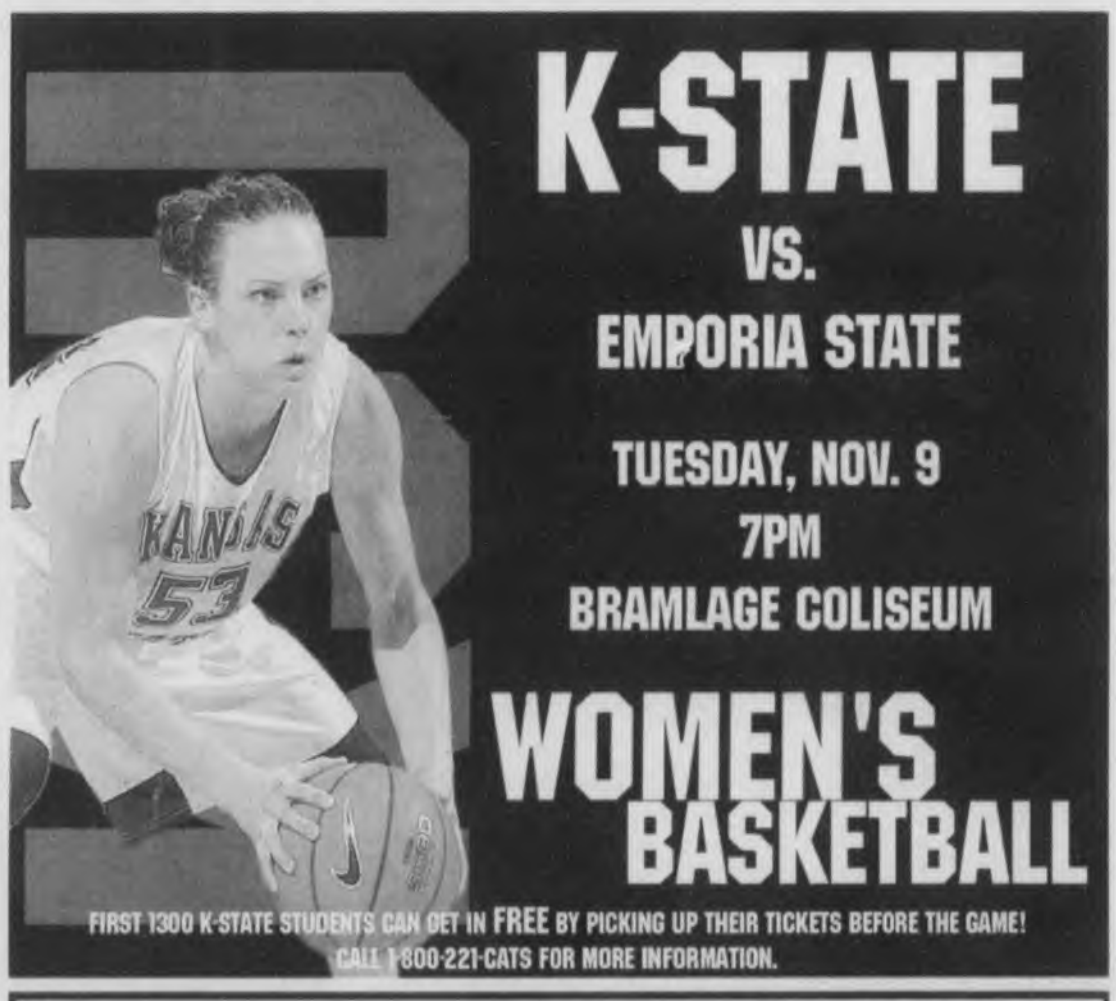
Iraqi Prime Minister Iyad Allawi said he gave the green light for troops to launch the long-awaited offensive against Fallujah, aimed at re-establishing government control before elections set for January. He also announced a round-the-clock curfew in Fallujah and another nearby insurgent stronghold, Ramadi, flexing emergency powers he was granted the day before.

"The people of Fallujah have been taken hostage ... and you need to free them from their grip," he told Iraqi soldiers who swarmed around him during a visit to the main U.S. base outside Fallujah just before the attack began.

"May they go to hell!" the soldiers shouted, and Allawi replied: "To hell they will go."

Earlier Monday, U.S. and Iraqi forces seized two bridges over the Euphrates River and a hospital on Fallujah's western edge that they said was under insurgents' control. A team of Marines entered northwestern Fallujah and seized an apartment building.

In Washington, Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld said insurgents would likely put up a tough fight. "Listen these folks are determined. These are killers. They chop people's heads off. They're getting money from around the world. They're getting recruits," he told reporters.



U.S. commanders have avoided any public estimate on how long it may take to capture Fallujah, where insurgents fought the Marines to a standstill last April in a three-week siege.

Commanders have estimated around 3,000 insurgents are barricaded in the city. Casey said that some insurgents managed to slip away, but others "have moved in." U.S. military officials believe that 20 percent of Fallujah's fighters are foreigners, while the rest are Iraqi residents.

– Associated Press correspondents Tini Tran, Mariam Fam, Katarina Kratovac and Maggie Michael in Baghdad contributed to this report.

Police make arrest in Kemp murder case

Kemp

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An arrest has been made in the murder of former K-State student Ali Kemp.

Benjamin Appleby, 29, was arrested Monday in Bantam, Conn., and was charged Tuesday morning with first-degree murder. Officials said Kemp was strangled on June 18, 2002.

Appleby later confessed to the crimes, according to an affidavit filed by Connecticut State Police.

Kemp was found by her father at a Leawood, Kan., pool pump room where she worked. She was suffering from a severe head injury and was pronounced dead at the hospital.

The investigation has included billboards, ads in USA Today and an appearance on "America's Most Wanted," catching the attention of the nation.

Appleby lived and worked in the Kansas City area but was living under an alias in Connecticut. He had family in the area and a small pool-cleaning business when Kemp was killed.

He originally was arrested Monday for endangering a child, public indecency and disorderly conduct.

While in custody, Appleby was questioned about Kemp's death.

"He did provide information and evidence that caused Kansas detectives to conclude that this accused was to be charged," Connecticut State Police said in a statement.

He waived extradition and will arrive in Johnson County later this week. He is being held on a $1 million bond.

Leawood police asked authorities in Connecticut to get a DNA sample from Appleby to possibly match it with blood found at the crime scene, including on Kemp's shirt and bra, according to the application for an arrest warrant.

Police have that sample, Connecticut authorities said, but testing was incomplete.

Johnson County District Attorney Paul Morrison said he is considering whether to pursue the death penalty.

Kansas City Crime Commission President Rick Easley said 3,000 tips had come in since Kemp's

Ashcroft, Evans resign

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – Attorney General John Ashcroft, a favorite of conservatives, and Commerce Secretary Don Evans, one of President Bush's closest friends, resigned Tuesday, the first members of the Cabinet to leave as Bush heads from reelection into his second term.

Ashcroft
FORMER ATTORNEY GENERAL

Both Ashcroft and Evans have served in Bush's Cabinet from the start of the administration.

Ashcroft, in a five-page, handwritten letter to Bush, said, "The objective of securing the safety of Americans from crime and terror has been achieved."

"Yet I believe that the Department of Justice would be well served by new leadership and fresh inspiration," said Ashcroft, whose health problems earlier this year resulted in removal of his gall bladder.

Parking council moves forward with garage proposals

By Josh Heck
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's parking is a common discussion topic, and the quest for a solution is rampant.

Darwin Abbott, director of Parking Services, said K-State issues 14,000 permits annually for only 10,000 available stalls. He said Parking Services issues so many permits because not every person with a permit is on campus at the same time.

In eight years, Abbott has seen a substantial decrease in parking on the interior of campus, a phenomenon he said is due to new buildings and renovations of existing buildings.

Abbott said visitors to various conferences and lectures affect the number of spots as well, because people attending these events do not have specific lots designated to them.

K-State has plans to help alleviate some of the parking problems, he said. Parking Services is working with the Council on Parking Operations to come up with proposals for parking garages. Final proposals, Abbot said, could be done this school year.

"We want to build enough to solve the problem immediately, to give some breathing space," Abbott said.

He said it was important to emphasize the final decision belongs to the university and not Parking Services.

"We all have to figure out how to pay for it," he said.

Jason Heaser, junior in political science and student member of the Parking Council, said the university has moved forward with the parking garage proposals. Last year, Heaser said the council voted for traffic studies to determine the best locations for the garages.

They came up with four ideal locations, he said, West Stadium, the K-State Student Union, behind Justin Hall and in front of Durland-Fiedler Hall.

Heaser said these locations were chosen in conjunction with the campus and city master plans.

A K-State custodian was killed in a car accident in Pottawatomie County Sunday afternoon.

Karl Gabrielson, 69, and his wife, Tamara, 43, were killed when the car she was driving south on K-99 went off the road into the ditch and hit an embankment. The car rolled several times and then rested on the driver's side.

The couple's 17-year-old son, James, was taken to Stormont-Vail Hospital in Topeka and is listed in serious condition.

16 Americans perish in Iraq; Fallujah invasion continues

By Jim Krane
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEAR FALLUJAH, Iraq – U.S. Army and Marine units pushed into the center of Fallujah on Tuesday, fighting with bands of guerrillas in the streets and searching house to house in a powerful advance on the second day of a major offensive to retake the insurgent stronghold.

A total of 16 Americans have been killed in the past two days across Iraq – including three killed in Fallujah combat on Tuesday, two killed by mortars near the northern city of Mosul and 11 others who died Monday, most of them as guerrillas launched a wave of attacks in Baghdad and southwest of Fallujah.

The 11 deaths were the highest one-day U.S. toll in more than six months.

As fighting raged in Fallujah, Prime Minister Iyad Allawi declared a nighttime curfew in Baghdad and its surroundings – the first curfew in the capital for a year – a day after a string of insurgent attacks in the city killed nine Iraqis and wounded more than 80.

Several heavy explosions hit central Baghdad Tuesday after nightfall, followed by the rattle of small arms fire.

Anger over the assault on the mainly Sunni Muslim city of Fallujah grew among Iraq's Sunni minority, and voices abroad – including the United Nations' refugee agency and the Red Cross – expressed fears over civilians' safety.

An influential group of Iraqi Sunni clerics called for a boycott of the election. The vote is being held "over the corpses of those killed in Fallujah," said Harith al-Dhari, director of the Association of Muslim Clerics.

Drinking for warmth can be harmful

Illustration by Jeff Yeung | COLLEGIAN

HANOVER, N.H. – Most people would consider the resistance to cold temperatures they feel after drinking an extra benefit of winter alcohol consumption. What they might not know is that drinking in cold weather can be dangerous, as the chances of contracting hypothermia increase after consuming alcohol.

"It's a common myth that alcohol seems to warm one's stomach. But in the end, alcohol can pull out body heat and accelerate the problem of hypothermia," Gregory Roa of the National Institutes of Health told The Dartmouth.

"Drinking in the winter is particularly dangerous because if someone passes out [outside], the consequences can be dire," said Dartmouth College Proctor Harry Kinne.

COED DORMS DEBUT

NEW YORK – Male and female undergraduates at NYU will be able to share dorm suites next fall in a test program that answers three years of student lobbying.

Coed, two-bedroom apartments in residence halls will be open to up to 40 upperclassmen in a deal worked out by administrators and representatives of the student housing government.

While the suites will be coed, meaning that males and females could wind up sharing bathrooms, all bedrooms will remain same-sex.

NYU students were intrigued by the prospect of living with their opposite-sex counterparts.

"I would do it," GSP freshman Jen Malabe said. "It's the same thing as [living with] girls, and I like guys."

FAKING ILL FOR A NICER ROOM

NEW YORK – Some Columbia University students whose only symptom is fear of a stuffy room are resorting to faking disabilities to obtain better housing.

"There's a running joke that people get allergies their sophomore year," said Scott Wright, assistant vice president of Housing and Dining, the office responsible for assigning rooms to students, including those with special needs.

But the real issue, some say, may be that students who legitimately request disability housing are having trouble getting it.

Currently, it is extremely difficult for students faking disabilities to slip through the cracks and into better housing than they deserve. All students requesting disability housing must pass a thorough screening in the Office of Disability Services.

SCHOLARS TO READ ANCIENT SCROLLS

PROVO, Utah – Brigham Young University scholars met Thursday to discuss research on ancient papyrus scrolls found 60 feet beneath the ash of Mount Vesuvius.

In the 18th century, excavators discovered 1,800 carbonized scrolls in a villa in the city of Herculaneum, about 10 miles south of Naples, Italy.

The burned artifacts, buried 2,100 years ago, appeared more like a lump of charcoal than precious manuscripts.

But recent advances in imaging technology have allowed scientists to read pages that were previously illegible.

Thirty different scholars from six states and 18 institutions listened to a panel of experts expound upon the ancient artifacts and new space-age technologies that have improved the readability of the scrolls.

Privilege Fee Committee begins OSAS budget talk

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Monday night the Privilege Fee Committee of Student Senate began considerations for the Office of Student Activities and Services' budget.

Committee chairman Michael Burns said the budget was mostly the same as it has been; however some unavoidable changes forced the office to ask for an increase of approximately $20,000.

"Right now they're asking for about a $20,000 increase," Burns said. "As bad as that sounds, we really don't have a whole lot of control over that."

Of that increase, $11,000 came from an increase in the compensation of Student Senate officers which, unless Senate votes to reject at Thursday's meeting, will be finalized, he said.

OSAS budget

Fiscal Year 2005 (est.)	$358,314
Proposed FY 2006	$378,461
Proposed FY 2007	$388,693
Proposed FY 2008	$399,343

"We could chose not to increase the OSAS fee," Burns said. "But if we do that, you're going to see reduced staffing in that office, and you're not going to have the opportunity to have free lawyers and services like that."

In addition, Assistant Dean of Student Life Gayle Spencer said $9,500 of the increase was due to the City of Manhattan's decision to no longer fund a portion of SafeRide's budget through the City University Fund.

Burns said while these increases in funds are unfortunate, they need to be considered.

"Students continue to use SafeRide so we have to fund it, and we really didn't have any say in that $11,000," he said.

Spencer said she was hopeful the committee would approve the proposed budget.

"I am hopeful that they'll realize this office provides good services for students and, in appreciation for what we do for this campus, they'll give us the services we've asked for," she said.

Burns said he did not foresee any trimmings in the proposed budget.

"OSAS is very efficient, they use their funds efficiently, and they don't come and ask for big increases a lot," he said.

Soil judging team set for nationals

After first place regional finish and winter practice, K-State will join competitors in April

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students on the K-State soil judging team are headed to nationals.

The K-State soil judging team received a ticket to the national soil judging competition in Auburn, Ala., after they won first place in the regional competition.

K-State, along with the next top two teams in the region, will attend the April competition.

Soil judging is a field activity executed by examining the soil from pits that are dug by a back hoe, Coach Mickey Ransom said.

"It's usually on different landscape positions to illustrate different soil types and different parent materials the soil comes from," he said. "The students identify the different soils and describe some of their properties, then they evaluate how it would be useful for both agricultural and urban uses."

Ransom said the contest requires the students to describe a total of five pits. Two of those are part of the individual ranking, which determines individual results.

This year, Ryan Flickner, junior in agronomy, received recognition for high individual at the regional level and will also be going on to nationals.

Flickner said he first became interested in soil when he was a child.

"I was one of those kids that had a sand pile in my backyard, and I was always out there with my Tonka Trucks and my toys," he said.

Soil is an important part of everyday life, Flickner said.

"Everything is built on soil or grown in soil," he said. "It's the basic building block in our civilization."

There are three important things to consider when classifying soil, Flickner said.

"Is it good to build a basement on, is it good to build a road on and how well a septic system can be built in it," he said.

This is especially important when constructing a building, Flickner said.

"The Leaning Tower of Pisa is built on two different types of soil, that's why it leans one way," he said.

Flickner said the experiences he gained from soil judging also will be helpful in finding a career.

"I'm looking into working for the U.S. Department of Agriculture," he said. "Several engineering groups also hire soil examiners before they construct anything."

To prepare for nationals, the soil judging team will have to examine samples in the lab starting in January until the weather gets warmer, Flickner said.

Once spring arrives, the team will be back out in the field, preparing for nationals.

Arafat's condition worsens amid rumors

By Lara Sukhtian
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CLAMART, France – Yasser Arafat's condition deteriorated dramatically overnight as his coma deepened, a hospital spokesman said Tuesday, and a top Palestinian official said he had suffered a brain hemorrhage.

The 75-year-old Palestinian leader started bleeding Monday evening and was in critical condition at the Percy Military Training Hospital in southwest Paris, top aide Tayeb Abdel Rahim told a news conference in Ramallah in the West Bank.

Meanwhile, top Islamic cleric Taissir Dayut Tamimi said he was rushing from the West Bank to Arafat's bedside at the request of Palestinian officials.

Tamimi, the head of the Islamic court in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, said he was going to Paris "to be near President Arafat at this crucial time." He did not elaborate, but his opinion might be sought in any decision to remove Arafat from life support.

A senior Palestinian official said earlier that Arafat has only hours to live. The official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, was in Ramallah and had been briefed by Palestinian officials in Paris.

Edward Abington, the former U.S. consul-general in Jerusalem, said Arafat was near death.

"It's only a matter of hours," Abington told The Associated Press in a telephone interview from Ramallah.

Abdel Rahim said Palestinian leaders would meet through the night at Arafat's headquarters, also known as the Muqata, "to follow everything and to agree on the details of the required arrangements."

"If the fate of God comes, all the arrangements will be made here in the Muqata, which is considered a symbol of Palestinian steadfastness," he said.

Palestinian Cabinet minister Saeb Erekat told the AP that Palestinian Prime Minister Ahmed Qureia saw Arafat during a visit of more than two hours at the hospital.

Palestinian Foreign Minister Nabil Shaath did not say what the diagnosis was, but he told CNN that Arafat's brain, heart and lungs were still functioning.

"The man is not suffering," Shaath said, adding that Arafat "has typical life support given to people in a coma."

Arafat's wife, Suha, has used French privacy laws to bar access to the Palestinian leader and there have been frequently conflicting reports about his health.

Two Palestinian officials denied media reports that Arafat had died, including Nasser al-Kidwa, his nephew and the Palestinian Authority's ambassador to the United Nations, who said he had spoken to Arafat's doctors.

"The situation is very difficult, but he is still alive," al-Kidwa told the AP.

Earlier, Gen. Christian Estripeau, spokesman for the hospital, said Arafat was in a coma and has been for the past week. It was the first time the French medical team treating Arafat publicly acknowledged that he was in a coma.

"President Yasser Arafat's health worsened in the night," Estripeau said. "His coma, which led to his admission to the intensive care unit, became deeper this morning." Arafat was put in intensive care on Nov. 3, five days after he was rushed to France.

Estripeau said doctors were withholding a prognosis but that his deterioration marked "a significant stage."

Shaath said Arafat was in a "very difficult and serious" situation. He spoke after he, Qureia and former Prime Minister Mahmoud Abbas met with doctors. Shaath did not say what the diagnosis was, or whether the delegation had seen Arafat.

TO THE POINT

Attorney general position needs fresh leadership

Attorney General John Ashcroft's tenure has been marked with many interesting moments. Some were utterly hilarious, like the thousands of dollars in taxpayer money he spent to cover a statue that made him nervous while it was standing behind him.

Others have been anything but funny, however. 'Depressing' could be the word. For example, Ashcroft might have had the nation's best interests in his heart when he chose to allow the detention of many people without bail or access to an attorney. But try telling that to the loved ones left in waiting, the ones who are prohibited from contacting the outside world and the ones who could be next.

That's each and every one of us.

Ashcroft's legacy is one of fear and mistrust, and his successor would be well advised to take a different approach.

With the war on terror within the borders of the United States being fought everyday, we need a person who can be trusted by the American people to be the highest official of this nation's law enforcement.

We also need someone who doesn't walk all over the civil liberties guaranteed under the Constitution to every single American citizen. We've had almost four years of negativity from the office; now is the time for direct, positive leadership.

Police officers make traffic stops to keep us all safe

I was sitting in class the other day, waiting for the professor to show up, when I overheard a fellow student complaining about a traffic ticket they'd received over the weekend.

SHANNA HAJEK

Apparently, it wasn't deserved, as he was only going 12 miles over the speed limit, and it was unfair because he was caught in a speed trap.

He then supposed the officer was only trying to fill his quota and ended the tirade with a highly generalized and predictable "stupid cops."

First of all, to be caught in a speed trap, you have to be speeding. You know, breaking the law? Secondly, I inquired after the myth of "quotas" and the Riley County Police Department doesn't have those.

So it's more like "stupid you" if you get a ticket.

I'm not saying I never speed, or that I haven't run a few red lights, or never driven home when I probably shouldn't have.

I've been lucky to have never received a ticket, but if I did, I wouldn't blame it on the officer who gave it to me. Or try to cry my way out of it.

I'd take the ticket, say "thank you" and berate myself for the rest of the day.

I've become increasingly aware that no one wants to take responsibility for their actions these days.

We're all adults here (well, age-wise anyway). We know the difference between right and wrong. Blaming a cop for a ticket you got for doing something you weren't supposed to be doing is wrong.

And it's not just about tickets. People bad-mouth police officers all the time for breaking up their parties or giving citations for furnishing alcohol to minors.

But why don't you try to put yourself in their shoes for a second. They go to work everyday with the knowledge that they might get hurt, or that they may never come home.

I know that sounds a little ridiculous to some. We live in Manhattan, Kan. But shootings and homicides happen here – one occurred not even six months ago.

Police officers, here and in general, don't get paid much.

They know this and choose this profession anyway because they want to help people and make a difference in their community.

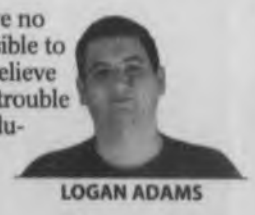
Bad-mouthing a police officer is like bad-mouthing a teacher or a nurse in that respect.

Police officers assist attempted suicide victims in getting medical treatment and psychological help. They resuscitate unresponsive children. They help victims of domestic abuse find counselling and shelter.

And they're who you call when your windshield has been smashed in or your stereo's been stolen or you left the door to your house unlocked and someone took all your stuff.

If they're going to help you, shouldn't you help them by not making their jobs that much more difficult when you break the law?

Because whether you believe it or not, police officers keep you safe.



Part of keeping you safe is keeping the roads safe for everyone. And if you're the bad guy out there, you're going to get busted, and you should, too.

Society needs media to balance perspectives

I can't stand it when I hear Republicans bemoan the grip the "liberal media" holds over the news.

LOGAN ADAMS

I'm not saying they have no real grievances; it's impossible to reasonably and honestly believe otherwise. It's that I have trouble believing what kinds of solutions they come up with to combat such bias, plus, I really don't mind the liberal media.

In fact, I kinda like them. CBS has always been my favorite source for the evening news. When Al Franken speaks, I'm interested.

I've seen nearly all of Michael Moore's movies twice and read two of his books.

Note these characteristics do not a liberal make. I don't accept Moore's mantras or Rather's blather as my own, and that's why I'm cool with the liberal media.

I'm smarter than them – it's that simple. I can stand having my ideas questioned, challenged, even beaten into the dirt. Why can't the right?

There are those who sit at the bottom of the brain-dead barrel: the morons who want the first amendment repealed and the press to be controlled by the government.

I don't even have to explain the flaws in this plan. It's not worth further discussion, so let's move on.

There's far more who continuously demand that the media be less liberal.

They don't say how to do it, and they most certainly don't want to do it themselves. It's just plain lazy.

They just want all the reporters and editors out there to stop being so golly-darned liberal because if they don't, they'll be taunted a second time.

Such is the case with what many on campus are saying to the Collegian.

Sure, they all want a more conservative paper, but how many are willing to step up to the plate and take charge?

I am a conservative-minded person, more so than many Republicans.

I just don't worship at the elephant altar like everyone thinks I should, (read: I'm an independent).

Still, liberal bias, and liberal media in general, do not bother me. First, I'm smart enough to get past them. Second, I kinda like all parts of the liberal media.

And in this presidency, we need a liberal media. Why? Because the media should always be asking questions on our behalf. Why should we change the tax system? Why should we ban gay marriage, stem cell research, abortion, etc.?

The media should always be at odds with the current administration, they should react to anything in the opposite way as those in power.

Granted, the media sure didn't go conservative during the Clinton administration, but you're getting where I'm coming from, aren't you?

I believe pure objectivity should be the goal of every news organization, but let's be realistic here.

Humans are not automatons that can be content with simple facts written down one after another.

There will always be bias as long as there are newspapers, no matter how naive and idealistic we are about it.

Whining, complaining, and bickering that the media should be perfectly centered accomplishes nothing whatsoever.

But if we learn to deal with bias, get along despite it, and maybe even learn to enjoy it, then we're stronger and better off for it.

And if you want a news organization to think more like than you, I'd recommend picking yourself up an application.

Unless you're chicken, that is.

Student price index shows increase in cost of studying at K-State

By Karthik Reddy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Being a K-State student is more expensive than it used to be.

According to a recent study by the Economics Club, students are paying more for basic living items.

Zach Mohr, senior in economics, said the student price index is a measurement of the cost of living increases students face from year to year.

He said data relating to the student price index is collected by students in the Economics Club and compared with data from the previous year to determine the percentage increase in the cost of the goods.

The data shows students are experiencing high increases in the cost of going to school, he said.

Specifically, the students are facing increases of approximately 9.5 percent but the actual increase in the cost of attending school could be much higher for some students, he said.

In his opinion, the largest reason the increase is the large increase in tuition, but there also was a large increase in the prices of commodities that students buy like gas, pizza and beer.

"The numbers for some things, such as housing have actually gone down, but this decline in the cost of off-campus housing is due to the increased supply of off-campus housing. Since there are many more apartment projects about to be completed, this should decrease the cost that students pay on the average," he said.

He also said things like pizza and beer could be showing such high rising costs because of the rise in oil prices.

"All things being held equal though, the most problematic increase for students has been the rise in tuition which accounts for a large share of what students pay throughout the year," he said.

Michael Oldfather, associate professor in economics, said the average prices paid by students are on the rise, as revealed by the data in the student price index.

He said tuition was a major contributing factor to this increase and since tuition formed a greater part of a college student's budget, the cost of living is higher.

"Prices at K-State are rising faster than the national average, and the only thing students can do is walk more to maybe save on gas," he said.

Kelly Stout, senior in economics, said the data is collected by students who visit a number of stores and record prices for a sample basket of goods that students are likely to buy.

Some things have gone up due to a natural price increase but the biggest cause for concern is the rising cost of tuition, he said.

Car bomb kills 2 Kansas Guard soldiers

By John Milburn
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA – The first Kansas Army National Guard soldiers to die in combat since the Vietnam War were killed by a car bomb Monday in Baghdad, the Army said Tuesday.

Killed were Staff Sgt. Clinton Lee Wisdom, 39, of Atchison, Kan., and Spc. Don Clary, 21, of Troy, Kan., the Kansas Army National Guard said. Both soldiers were members of Battery B, 2nd Battalion, 130th Field Artillery.

The two soldiers died after they positioned their vehicle between a convoy they were assigned to protect and a vehicle driven by insurgents that exploded, Kansas National Guard officials said.

Their field artillery unit has been providing security and support in Iraq since it deployed in February.

Approximately 350 soldiers from across Kansas are in the unit.

"We've got two heroes here," said Maj. Gen. Tod Bunting, Kansas' adjutant general. "They were willing to do what they had to do in an area that's as dangerous as it gets."

Bunting said many of the soldiers from the battalion were following generations of family members who served in the same National Guard unit.

"They're close. It's difficult. We hope that between good training and good skills the third good takes care of itself – good luck," he said.

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius asked Kansans to pray for the soldiers' families and to support all troops in Iraq.

U.S. officials said 16 Americans were killed in recent days in Iraq, including three killed Tuesday in fighting near Fallujah. Others died in attacks mounted by guerrillas in and around Baghdad.

The 2nd Battalion, 130th Field Artillery has units from Abilene, Atchison, Concordia, Marysville, Horton, Sabetha, Salina and Troy. It was mobilized for duty in Iraq in November 2003 and trained at Fort Riley before heading overseas.

There are approximately 1,800 Kansas Army National Guard soldiers deployed or mobilized for duty in Iraq, Afghanistan and Kosovo. An additional 4,200 soldiers remain in Kansas.

Jane Boeh, the city clerk in Troy, a small, northeast Kansas town of 1,200, said she knew the families of both soldiers.

"When it hits home in a small community, you're all involved with accepting it," Boeh said.

Clary graduated from Troy High School in 2001 and attended Benedictine College before his father became ill, said Nick Dannevick, a counselor at Troy High School. He said Clary quit school to find work and help his father, who eventually died. Clary's father and grandfather both served in the military.

"You're never ready for anybody to die, even if they are on their death bed for a month," Dannevick said. "For a young person like this, whose life was basically ahead of him, it's awful sad."

Powell says Bush to grant legal status to migrants

By George Gedda
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MEXICO CITY – Secretary of State Colin Powell said Tuesday that President Bush will place a high priority in his second term on granting legal status to millions of migrants who live illegally in the United States.

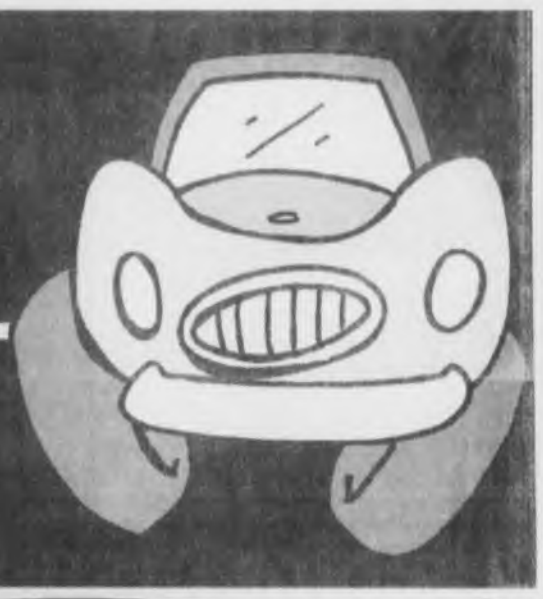
Powell spoke at the inaugural session of the U.S.-Mexican Bi-National Commission, which annually brings together top officials from both sides to discuss a range of cross-border issues. Powell was joined here by five other members of the Cabinet.

"The president is committed to comprehensive immigration reform as a high priority in his second term, and he will work closely with our Congress to achieve this goal," Powell said, with delegations from both sides in attendance.

In separate remarks, Mexican Foreign Secretary Luis Ernesto Derbez made no specific reference to the migration issue but praised the "high level of confidence and understanding between the two countries."

Mexico is the primary source of the 10 million undocumented immigrants living in the United States. Persuading the United States to push ahead with migration reform is a major goal of President Vicente Fox's administration.

Last January, in an apparent bid for the votes of Hispanics and segments of the U.S. business community, Bush unveiled an ambitious immigration reform proposal whose key feature would provide temporary legal status to illegal migrants provided they are employed.



In the 10 months since Bush spelled out the proposal, it has failed to make any headway.

Powell told reporters Monday night that with the end of the election and substantial progress in shoring up security along the border, "there could be a more favorable environment" for immigration reform legislation.

Faculty of the Month

The Greek Community honors Diane Denoon as October's Faculty of the Month. Denoon teaches Block B Social Studies Methods in the Elementary Education Department. This is her first semester at K-State after teaching for many years at Theodore Roosevelt Elementary School. Despite a personal tragedy right before the semester began, she decided to teach anyway. Denoon's students say she is an incredible inspiration by encouraging those who are having doubts about their profession and being honest about her own classroom experiences. Class is always fun yet challenging and Denoon's positive attitude, strength and tenderness encourage all her students to strive to be amazing teachers. Congratulations Ms. Denoon, the Greek Community applauds your extraordinary effort and commitment. Diane Denoon was nominated by Kappa Kappa Gamma and Chi Omega.

Quarterback question lingers before match

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Wildcats travel west for their final road game of the regular season Saturday against the Colorado Buffaloes, with postseason play and the Big 12 North division title hopes on the line once again.

The Wildcats (4-5, 2-4) kept their chances alive for a bowl berth and a shot at the North title by overcoming at 21-point deficit for a 35-24 win over the Missouri Tigers Nov. 6 in Columbia, Mo. Meanwhile, the Buffaloes (5-4, 2-4) snapped a two-game losing skid with a 30-21 victory over Kansas.

The match-up will mark the 59th time the two schools have met, with Colorado leading the all-time series 41-17-1. K-State has won five of its last seven against Colorado, including a 49-20 victory in Manhattan in 2003.

UP IN THE AIR

Though questions arose about who will be K-State's starting quarterback against Colorado, Coach Bill Snyder left those questions unanswered at the Wildcats' weekly press conference on Tuesday.

"We just need to go through the week of practice and make some decisions based on our preparations, in terms of what we want to do and how we want to do it," Snyder said.

Incumbent starter Dylan Meier struggled against Missouri, completing only four of 16 pass attempts for 37 yards before being replaced by sophomore back-up Allen Webb in the second half.

Webb rallied the Wildcats back from a 21-7 deficit to defeat the Tigers 35-24. In the comeback win, the Indiana transfer was 6-of-8 passing for 111 yards, with two touchdowns. Webb also rushed for 57 yards on 12 carries.

Meier, despite being hampered by a series of injuries, said he will prepare as K-State's No. 1 quarterback.

"Throughout life you are going to be handed things, and at times are going to be in the back row of some things, but that is something that I'm

CFB | Rheem selected as finalist for Groza Award

K-State senior place-kicker Joe Rheem continues to follow in his brother's footsteps.

Rheem

Late Monday night, Rheem was named one of 20 finalists for the 2004 Lou Groza Award in an announcement by the Palm Beach County Sports Commission.

Rheem — whose brother Jamie was a Groza Award runner-up in 1999 and 2000 for the Wildcats — is 11-of-13 on field goal attempts and 31-of-31 on PATs this season. The Wichita, Kan. native is 3-of-5 from over 40 yards, with his two misses coming on blocks.

The Lou Groza Award's three finalists will be announced on Nov. 22.

CFB | Clarett accuses Ohio State of wrongdoing

Maurice Clarett accused Ohio State coach Jim Tressel and his staff of arranging for him to get passing grades, cars and money for bogus summer jobs. The school immediately denied the claims Tuesday.

Clarett

Most of Clarett's allegations, in an article in ESPN The Magazine, were covered as part of an NCAA probe that found he lied to investigators.

Ohio State athletic director Andy Geiger was not surprised by the accusations, saying Clarett had vowed to try to hurt the program.

Clarett's claims are his first public comments in months after shunning reporters during workouts to prepare for the spring NFL draft. He lost a lawsuit earlier this year challenging the league's eligibility rule.

According to the magazine article, Clarett said Tressel arranged the loaner cars and Tressel's brother found him landscaping jobs that he was paid for but didn't work.

Clarett also said the football staff arranged an academic adviser who set him up with professors who would pass him even if he skipped class and introduced him to boosters who gave him cash.

Investigations by the NCAA and the university have also cleared the school of the types of wrongdoing Clarett alleged, Geiger said.

MLB | Clemens wins his seventh Cy Young Award

Roger Clemens easily won his record seventh Cy Young Award after putting off retirement and being about as dominant as ever — even at age 42.

Clemens

The Rocket received 23 of 32 first-place votes and 140 points in balloting released Tuesday by the Baseball Writers' Association of America to win the NL Cy Young for the first time after capturing six Cy Youngs in the American League.

He's the oldest Cy Young winner. Gaylord Perry was 40 when he won the NL honor in 1978.

Clemens retired after pitching for the New York Yankees in the 2003 World Series, then changed his mind and signed with his hometown Houston Astros and went 18-4 with a 2.98 ERA and 218 strikeouts.

MCBB | Paul leading All-America vote-getter

Chris Paul is going to hear Tim Duncan's name a lot this season.

The sophomore guard from Wake Forest was the leading vote-getter Tuesday on the Associated Press' preseason All-America team, joining Duncan as the only players from the school to earn that honor.

Paul received 55 votes from a national media panel to make the team along with four seniors: Lawrence Roberts of Mississippi State (50 votes), Wayne Simien of Kansas (50), Julius Hodge of North Carolina State (41), and Hakim Warrick of Syracuse (33).

Paul led the Demon Deacons to the round of 16 in the NCAA tournament last season, the first time they got that far since 1997, Duncan's last year.

Clarett needs to accept blame

MATTHEW GIRARD

"Maurice Clarett – come on down, you're the next contestant on 'The Price was Right at the Time'."

On Tuesday, ESPN released its interview with the former Ohio State running back regarding his suspension from the Buckeye football team.

In the interview, Clarett claimed he covered up illegal actions by himself and the university to win over the hearts of NFL general managers and to put the past behind him.

The story behind Clarett's actions has been well-documented since he was suspended from the team.

His long battles with the courts to allow him to enter the NFL Draft were also closely followed by the media, but nobody had heard from him or about him in six months.

Clarett claims he came out with his allegations about his former coach, Jim Tressel, because he wanted to clear his name and put it back into the public arena.

I'm sorry, but isn't the idea of clearing your name to show people you are innocent, not implicate yourself further?

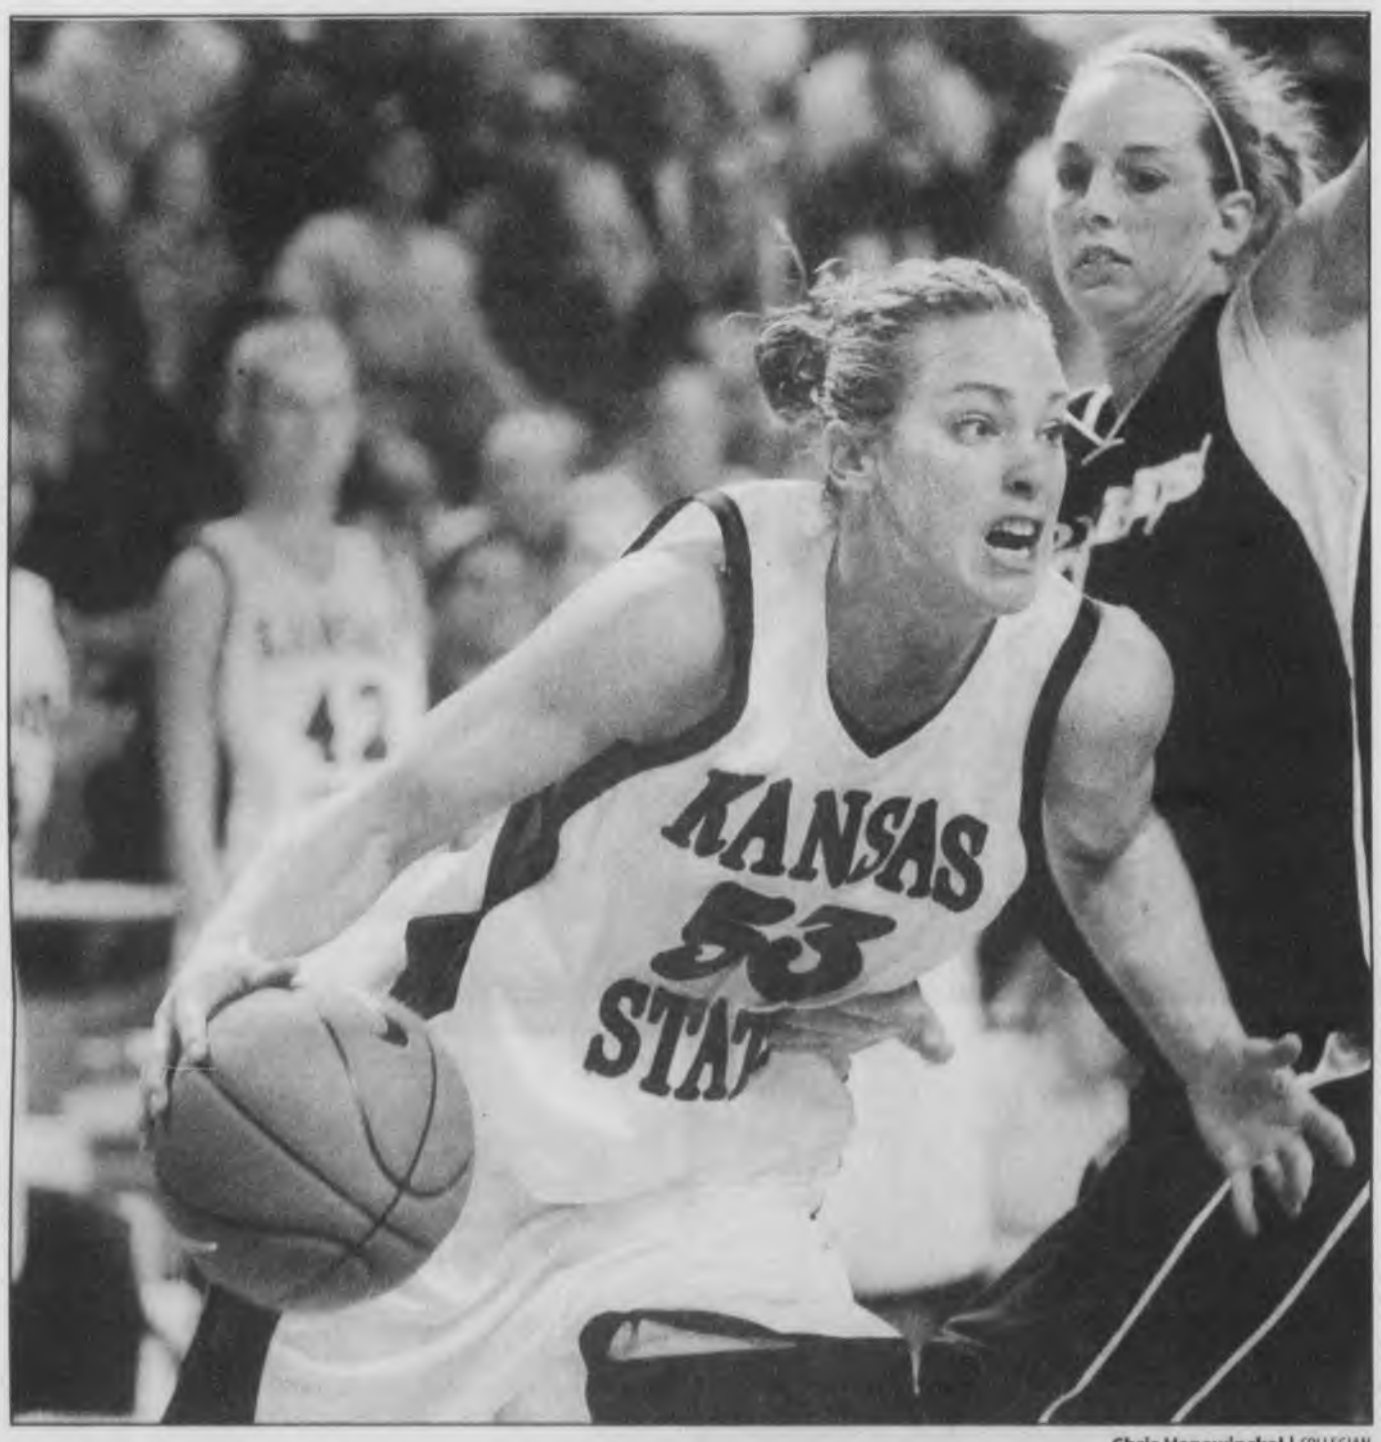
If Clarett was hoping to make a good impression, he royally screwed that up.

I'm pretty sure the NFL learned its lesson with another troubled running back: former Nebraska Cornhusker Lawrence Phillips.

OK, so he didn't steal anything and he wasn't running from the law or beating up girls, but Clarett has proven he is selfish – just look at the timing of his claims.

For the past six months, hardly anyone had even thought about Clarett.

My guess is he probably feared he would become another trivia question. He wants his name in lights again and for everyone to worship him.



Another instance of Clarett's selfishness is at the end of the interview when he said "he didn't want to get Ohio State in hot water," with his claims.

Is Clarett really that dense to think that by coming clean he wouldn't hurt the university with these allegations?

I know there are a few high-powered college football teams that are not squeaky clean, but I guarantee no university in this country is going to get a former football player's mother fired from their job, as Clarett claims in the article.

The bottom line is Clarett needs to realize his actions have consequences, and trying to lay the blame on everybody else is not going to make things right with anybody.

The more things change, the more they stay the same.

For the first time in four years, the K-State women's basketball team lined up without All-America center Nicole Ohlde.

However, in their 85-45 exhibition win over Emporia State Tuesday night, the Wildcats outscored the Hornets 50-22 in the paint, giving No. 19 K-State a healthy inside presence.

K-State gets its third shot at payback against Big 12 Conference foe Colorado at 7 tonight in Ahearn Field House.

The Buffaloes swept the Wildcats 3-0 in the conference opener on Sept. 15, winning 30-23, 30-28 and 30-26 in Boulder, Colo. K-State's only other conference losses have come against Nebraska and Texas, two teams the Wildcats failed to beat both at home and on the road in meetings this season.

No. 20 K-State looks to return to the win column after a loss at Nebraska last Saturday that dropped the Wildcats to 15-8 overall and 9-5 in the Big 12. Colorado comes to Manhattan at 11-11 overall and 6-9 in the conference.

In the Wildcats' loss to Colorado earlier in the season, K-State hit just .138 against a Buffalo defense that had 15 blocks. Colorado outside hitter Allie Griffin had 17 kills to lead an effective attack for the Buffaloes, which hit a strong .297 for the match.

Coach Suzie Fritz said her team was not ready for Colorado that night.

"We were really unprepared the last time we played them," Fritz said. "I don't think we expected them to play as hard as they did. I think we went into the match thinking we could go 80 percent and

The band played, the singers sang and K-State Idol was a hit with the crowd and with the judges.

Last night, 18 singers, jugglers and piano players performed for the crowd at Forum Hall. The second annual event not only brought out several performers, but also brought a large number of people out to watch.

Megan Winter, junior in chemical engineering, said the turnout of the audience, which nearly filled Forum Hall, was not a big shock.

"We expected this large of a crowd to turn out," Winter said. "I think that it went really well and most likely will hold K-State Idol again next year."

There were three categories and three overall winners. The first category was basic entertainment. In basic entertainment, there were different performers such as jugglers and a piano player.

Grant Buell, junior in architectural engineering, won first place in this division by playing the piano. Buell performed last year and would like to perform next year as well.

"I've been playing piano for about 12 years now and I like having a place to perform," Buell said. "Last year was a real good experience and I'm pretty happy I won, I'm planning on trying out next year if they have it again."

Buell wrote the song he played, entitled "Effusion," and said the song didn't just come out in an instant.

"I had some ideas and put a lot of things together," Buell said. "I found some things that sounded good and combined them and over several months I came up with this song."

The second category was vocals. Roderick Agbisit, graduate student in grain science, won first place in the category.

"I've been singing since high school and my friends encouraged me to come out and audition," Agbisit said. "I probably will try out again next year."

In the vocal category, there were performers singing songs by other musicians with background music accompaniment.

Agbisit sang "I'll Be" by Edwin McCain.

The third category was vocals with accompaniment. In this category, performers performed their own, or other artists, songs while playing instruments.

The winner of this category was Austin Meek. Meek also was the overall winner.

K-State Idol winners

Basic entertainment: Grant Buell
Vocals: Roderick Agbisit
Vocals with accompaniment: Austin Meek

In order for there to be a competition, there must be judges. One of them was, Kelly Welch, assistant professor in family studies and human services.

Welch has judged the last two greek idols and this was her first K-State Idol.

"I loved it, there was just so much talent and it made it hard to choose a winner," Welch said. "We (the judges) had about four people we think there could have been at least four overall winners. The music performed really appealed to everyone in the audience."

For winning their categories, the winners were awarded $50. Buell said what he was planning on doing with his money.

"I think I'm going to buy a big bucket of candy," Buell said. "That or about seven steaks, I really want to waste the money and my fame go to my head."

Local group works to bring jazz instructors together from across globe

By Jessica Grant
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Tucked into a brick suite that is hidden behind Taco Hut, the International Association for Jazz Educators has managed to create a world renowned magazine and organization.

Sandy Nelson, publications director for IAJE, said the organization advocates all forms of jazz education.

"We run a magazine and set up an international conference every year," Nelson said. "We advocate all forms of jazz education, not just traditional classroom learning."

It all started at a music symposium in Chicago as the fledgling dream of a few men willing to make sacrifices for the sake of music education.

"It began in 1968 with a group of individuals who attended a music symposium and decided to begin the organization," Nelson said.

Taking cues from jazz education pioneers such as Leonard Feather and Robert Goffin, Manhattan local Matt Betton began the project in 1969, said Greg Carroll, director of education for IAJE.

Musician to visit K-State

Greg Carroll, director of education for International Association for Jazz Educators, said the organization was preparing for the arrival of saxophonist and K-State alumna Tia Fuller.

"Tia will be offering a clinic and performance at the Hemisphere Room of Hale Library that is open to the public," Carroll said. "She will also be helping us to select all-star talent for Sisters in Jazz program and she will be doing clinics for the jazz band on Friday morning."

The program is scheduled for 5:30 p.m. Thursday.

For more information on the IAJE, visit www.iaje.org or call 776-8744.

"One important aspect of the founding of the organization is the Tanglewood, Mich., music symposium," Carroll said. "Music educators decided that they needed an umbrella organization that would pull many different types of music together. They wanted to change the face of music and the face of music education."

Later that year, Matt Betton put his beloved 1916 Buick touring car up for collateral for a $3,000 bank loan that would ultimately serve as the monetary foundation for the National Association for Jazz Educators.

History of the International Association for Jazz Educators

- 1968 The National Association for Jazz Educators is founded in response to a Music Educators conference in Chicago.
- 1970 First issue of the NAJE (the original journal) is published.
- 1973 First National NAJE Convention is held in Chicago.
- 1982 NAJE participates in White House lawn party honoring Lionel Hampton.
- 1986 Matt and Betty Betton (two of the original founders) retire after 18 years of service.
- 1989 "National" becomes "International" to better reflect the scope of the organization.
- 1991 IAJE hosts the National Endowment of the Arts American Jazz Masters Awards.
- 1993 IAJE launches a Silver Anniversary capital campaign with a goal of $100,000.

Nelson said that because Betton lived and owned a record store in Manhattan – and had ties to K-State – it was only natural that he remained in the community.

"We had a founder who knew what had to be done in the world of music education, and he really had a passion for this American art form," Nelson said.

The magazine currently has an international following that encompasses 9,000 members and 40 countries, Bill McFarlin, IAJE executive director, said.

"We changed our name to the International Association for Jazz Educators after we developed an international following," McFarlin said.

"We are a non-profit organization and our magazine is printed at the Ag Press here in Manhattan. We get most of the financial backing for the magazine through ad sales and membership dues," McFarlin said.

Currently, the association is preparing for their annual jazz conference. This year the conference is planned for January at Long Beach, Calif.

"Every year, we host the largest conference in the field of jazz," McFarlin said. "It's unique because members of the music industry, educators, and artists all come together under one tent. It's an explosion of music."

"It's like a giant family reunion and an incubator of future projects," McFarlin said.

Song 'Copacabana' has a new showgirl

Songwriters Barry Manilow and Bruce Sussman agreed to rewrite the 1978 Grammy award-winning song to reflect the winner of an auction aimed at raising money for the Ovarian Cancer Research Fund.

The winning bid of $150,000 was donated anonymously in the name of Sting's wife, Trudie Tyler. The song's lyric will now say "Her name was Trudie, she was a showgirl..." Manilow is planning to re-record the song, but no date has been set.

"When Barry and myself wrote this song we thought it would be a novelty cut on an album, it's amazing to think of the life this song has had," Sussman said. "We are happy to do whatever we can to raise money and awareness for a great cause like OCRF."

Styler was the recipient of the fund's humanitarian award this year. The song was among other silent auction items and performances at the Legends Gala benefiting the fund, which raised more than $4.3 million for ovarian cancer research.

Hotel heiress, Meister end brief marriage

Hotel heiress Nicky Hilton and New York businessman Todd Andrew Meister have officially ended their brief marriage.

A Las Vegas judge on Tuesday granted the newlyweds an annulment, according to a joint statement issued by the couple's representatives.

"Both parties have ended the marriage amicably, and they remain good friends," the statement said.

Hilton, 21, married Meister, 33, at the Las Vegas Wedding Chapel on Aug. 15.

prepared for," Meier said. "Right now I'm going in as I'm the starter, but if Allen goes, I have total confidence in him."

Snyder said regardless of who the starter is, both will see time under center.

"I'm pretty sure we will play them both, but that will not be by design," he said.

NOT BUSINESS AS USUAL

Throughout the 2004 season, Snyder's weekly press conferences usually do not stray far from the topic of football, but at Tuesday's press conference Snyder was questioned about his use of the university's private jet.

With just a few minutes left in Snyder's weekly 30-minute meeting with the media, a reporter questioned Snyder's usage of the jet.

"This is probably not the right venue to address that, but I'm kind of glad you asked that question, because it gives me a chance to say thank you to all the great K-Staters who have provided private funding for the university airplane to allow so many people in our program to travel and save a great deal of time," Snyder said. "I can assure you that every single one of them was for university business as is directed by my contract."

When the reporter further extended his line of questioning, Snyder said he just wanted to get back to the topic of football.

things would go our way. They played very, very well and gave an outstanding effort."

Griffin leads Colorado with 4.32 kills per game and 2.5 digs. Outside hitter Maragda Santillana averages 4.17 kills per game, and setter Ashley Nu'u averages 12.17 assists per game.

Fritz said a player like Griffin is hard to stop, but the Cats cannot forget about the rest of the Buffaloes.

"It's been our philosophy that there are players like Allie that are going to get their kills," Fritz sad. "She's going to get her kills; you just have to slow her down and not let anybody else get out of control on you."

The match begins a final stretch of conference games for the Wildcats before the NCAA Tournament.

Fritz said the team's mindset will be to take the matches one at a time and continue to improve for the important contests down the road.

"We're still focused on trying to take care of this last stretch of matches," she said. "We have an opportunity to play four of our last six matches at home. We can put ourselves in position to finish high in the conference and go into the NCAA tournament."

cat guards to slash to the basket more often.

"I think (slashing guards) is something you can expect when you see that kind of pressure defense," Koehn said. "That is something you have to do to get things to open up when people are really out in your face and pressuring you like that. Tonight, that was something that we needed to be doing and something that worked for us."

While the Emporia State defense allowed the K-State inside game to open up, an aggressive Wildcat defense kept Emporia State in check for most of the night, as K-State forced 28 turnovers, including 16 steals.

Head Coach Deb Patterson said the overall play of the defense was encouraging.

"I like our defense all in all," Patterson said. "I thought it was adequate. Certainly, I think it can get and will get and can continue to get better and more diverse. For our first outing, I think our steal numbers were good, and I think it put some pressure on their offense."

Emporia State, ranked No. 6 in Division-II, was led by Esmary Vargas-Sanchez and Tywanda Harris, as each scored 11 points on the night. As a team, the Hornets shot 35 percent from the field, including just 3-of-11 from three-point range.

Patterson said she was particularly proud of the defensive play of post players McFarland and Brie Madden

"Obviously, Vargas-Sanchez is a real talent, and I thought Jessica did a very nice job, as did Brie, in working to mix their looks against her." Patterson said. "(Vargas-Sanchez) reminds me of some of the Big 12 post players we'll see."

All three of K-State's freshmen contributed to the Wildcats' win, as Kimberly Dietz, Shana Wheeler, and Carolyn McCullough chipped in four, six and four points respectively.

At times during the game, all three freshmen were on the court at the same time, giving the new players a valuable learning experience in an actual game.

Patterson said while there was some drop-off in production, she was happy with the way the three freshmen played.

"Going with that youth dimension, it always leads to a little trepidation, because they are just so inexperienced," Patterson said. "We were fortunate enough tonight to have the opportunity, because of the kind of lead that we had established, to be able to play them. Good experience for them, but still something we would see only in very exceptional situations."

The Wildcats' next action will be Nov. 14, when they take on Athletes in Action to close out the preseason schedule.

Koehn said the Wildcats have work to do before the games start counting.

"I think, obviously, this early in the season, we have a whole lot more to learn, a whole lot more to put into our system," Koehn said. "I think we did well with what we had at this point in the season."

"We have a long way to go though."

of the festival are the Jazz Masters Award and the guest of honor.

"Every year a Jazz Masters Award is given to six people through the National Endowment for the Arts. We are also looking forward to our guest of honor, which will be Herbie Hancock this year," McFarlin said.

Hancock is an acclaimed acoustic, electronic jazz and R&B artist who has won an Academy Award and eight Grammy Awards, according to www.herbiehancock.com.

One of the primary focuses of the organization is the importance of music education.

"There is no question that music is an important part of developing a young person's mind," McFarlin said.

"Playing music stimulates creativity and cognitive skills. When you play jazz music you learn how to be part of an ensemble – a team. You learn how to improvise within a certain structure."

McFarlin also stressed the importance of the cultural heritage of jazz.

"Jazz is an indigenous American art form, and it is part of our history. Beyond that, the National Association for Music Educators established standards that include jazz and improvisational music," McFarlin said.

Carroll said he is a firm believer in the importance of music as a part of human existence.

"Humans can connect to each other through music," Carroll said. "Music really widens the palate."

PARKING | Change equates to 20 percent increase spread over 4 years

Heaser said once the traffic studies and proposals are finalized, the administration will determine the best location for a parking garage. The council will then move toward a bond from the state to help pay for the garage. Abbott said an average parking garage would cost $10,000 per stall and parking services is looking at several options to cover the cost.

Abbott said Parking Services would have to increase its total revenue by $1 million per year and because it receives no tax money or student fees, the task may be more difficult.

"We need to spread the cost over as many users as possible," Abbott said.

Heaser said the idea of charging for parking 24/7 is not a strong possibility, so student and faculty permit prices may have to increase to cover the cost, thus the price of parking violations would increase accordingly.

"We are looking at a 20 percent increase over four years to cover the cost," Heaser said. "With progress there are certain costs."

Heaser emphasized the increase would be gradual, so students and faculty would not be turned off to buying parking permits.

A standard parking garage, he said, could nearly triple the amount of parking, but because of cost, the university could only put in one garage at a time.

Once the digging for the garage begins, Heaser said the east Bramlage lot would be open for people to park in. Parking Services would offer shuttle buses to and from campus. Heaser said this is an option that is currently in place but few students have taken advantage.

Heaser and Abbot acknowledge the problems K-State has with parking, but both said there are alternatives and temporary solutions.

"Carpool is the biggest thing," Heaser said. "People need to talk to other individuals in your house or apartment."

Abbott said parking is available in some of the outlying lots if people don't mind walking a little further to class.

Heaser said K-State is on its way to at least lessening the parking problem with the proposed garage.

"It would be the best-lit, most secure place on campus," Heaser said.

"Students will see the benefits of their money when the garage is built."

Parking

- K-State issues 14,000 permits annually.
- There are only 10,000 available stall.
- A parking garage with 500 stalls would cost more than 1,000 stalls.
- Forty-thousand parking citations are issued annually.
- 25 percent of the citations are returned as visitor violations.
- All money made from citations goes to general parking maintenance.
- Parking meters are the No. 1 problem because people underestimate how long they are going to be gone.
- No permits is a big problem.
- Parking Services has four full-time lot attendants and seven student workers.
- Last year 40 permits were reported stolen, but most were recovered.

ASHCROFT | Rumors circulate concerning possible successors talents should be directed toward other challenging horizons," he said. Ashcroft's letter was dated Nov. 2, Election Day.

Evans, a longtime friend from Texas, wrote Bush, "While the promise of your second term shines bright, I have concluded with deep regret that it is time for me to return home."

Bush issued statements of praise for both men – and for the policies they advanced.

"John Ashcroft has worked tirelessly to help make our country safer," the president said. "John has served our nation with honor, distinction, and integrity."

Bush's farewell to Evans was more effusive and more personal, fitting to their more than three decades of friendship dating to the oil business in Midland, Texas, where they would attend church together and meet every day for a three-mile jog.

"Don Evans is one of my most trusted friends and advisers," Bush said. "Don has worked to advance economic security and prosperity for all Americans. He has worked steadfastly to make sure America continues to be the best place in the world to do business."

Ashcroft, 62, has been well liked by many conservatives. At the same time, he has been a lightning rod for criticism of his handling of the U.S. end of the war against terror, especially the detention of terror suspects.

Evans, 58, was instrumental in Bush's 2000 campaign and came with him to Washington. Evans has told aides he was ready for a change. He was mentioned as a possible White House chief of staff in Bush's second term, but the president decided to keep Andy Card in that job.

One name being mentioned for Evans' job at Commerce is Mercer Reynolds, national finance chairman for the Bush campaign, who raised more than $260 million to get him re-elected.

Speculation about a successor to Ashcroft has centered on his former deputy, Larry Thompson, who recently took a job as general counsel at PepsiCo. If appointed, Thompson would be the nation's first black attorney general. Others prominently mentioned include Bush's 2004 campaign chairman, former Montana Gov. Marc Racicot, and White House general counsel Alberto Gonzales.

Meanwhile, three high-ranking Bush administration officials said they would like to remain on the job. Agriculture Secretary Ann Veneman, Interior Secretary Gale Norton and Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Michael Leavitt all said they want to continue.

Washington continued to buzz with speculation about the futures of Secretary of State Colin Powell and Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld.

Powell, en route to Mexico City, said late Monday he has an ambitious travel schedule in Europe in the weeks ahead in hopes of patching deep divisions stemming from the Iraq war. He gave no hint about his own plans beyond the early December meetings, although he is widely expected to leave his job at the end of Bush's term or early in the second term.

Powell has fenced with reporters who have asked if he will stay on the job, saying only that he serves at the pleasure of the president.

murder. Two tips gave specific information relating to the suspect.

Appleby has been arrested several times in Missouri and was convicted on felonies including second-degree robbery and second-degree sexual misconduct, according to the Missouri State Highway Patrol.

Kemp's family and friends said they were relieved to learn of a possible resolution to the case.

"On this one, there was just something about it. The lines connected to the dots. And you started thinking, 'Well, maybe this is it.' But I didn't want to get (my hopes) too high. But it turned out this was it," Kemp's father, Roger Kemp, said.

Kemp had just finished her freshman year at K-State and was a member of Pi Beta Phi sorority.

"Ali and her family are in our prayers," Amanda Lewis, president, said.

Greek Affairs Adviser Scott Jones said the Pi Phi women have been working to help with the investigation and raise money for a memorial fund.

Leawood police officers were on campus April 28 looking for tips about the case.

"I know that the women of the Pi Beta Phi house have been diligent in their efforts to keep the positive memories of Ali alive," Jones said, "and that they have worked tirelessly to raise money to contribute to the memorial fund that I believe has a part in funding ongoing investigation efforts."

Jones said hopefully the arrest would bring closure.

"I'm thankful that it appears that there will be a opportunity to finally bring the tragedy closer to resolution," he said.

scale, it could wreck the legitimacy of the election, seen as vital in Iraq's move to democracy.

About 6,000 U.S. troops and 2,000 allied Iraqi soldiers invaded the city from the north Monday night in a start to an offensive aimed at re-establishing government control before elections.

On Tuesday, heavy street clashes raged in Fallujah's northern neighborhoods. By midday, U.S. armored units had made their way to the highway running east-west through the city's center and crossed over into southern Fallujah, a major milestone.

The military reported lighter-than-expected resistance in Jolan, a warren of alleyways in northwestern Fallujah where guerillas were believed to be at their strongest. That could be a sign that insurgents left the city before the operation started or that the troops have not yet reached the center location to which the resistance has fallen back, Pentagon officials said in Washington.

U.S. officers said few civilians were trying to flee the city Tuesday. The bulk of the population of 200,000-300,000 left before the fighting. The rest were hunkered down because of a 24-hour curfew. U.S. troops were preventing most people from leaving, except in emergency cases.

John Woods, director of custodial services, said Gabrielson was a generous employee who would give up his sick leave to his coworkers who needed it more.

"He got along with everybody," Woods said. "He was a very good, dependable, dedicated employee."

Woods said a fellow crew member has started a collection to be donated to Gabrielson's son's education fund. Funeral services for Tamara and Karl Gabrielson are being planned by the Stewart Funeral home in Wamego.

Woods said Gabrielson will be missed.

Sebelius unveils cigarette tax boost

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Smokers could see the price of cigarettes jump by 50 cents next year.

Part of Gov. Kathleen Sebelius' health plan announced Tuesday will mean 50 more cents tax on packs of cigarettes. The initiative is part of a $50 million health care reform plan that aims to reduce the number of uninsured Kansans.

The increased revenue from cigarettes, which would carry a tax of $1.29 per pack, would fund the programs along with an increase from 10 to 15 percent tax on other tobacco products.

Did you know?
Smoking stats

- Number of smokers: Kansas: 438,544. Nationwide: 48 million.
- Cigarette pack sales in FY 2002: Kansas: $208.8 million. Nationwide: $20.4 billion.
- Cigarette tax revenue in FY 2002: Kansas: $133.8 million. Nationwide: $8.4 billion.

Kansans now pay more than $700 million each year in medical costs related to smoking. The Center for Disease Control reported that the state health care cost per pack is $6.98.

"There is no more costly choice that Kansans and others make in terms of driving health care costs than choosing to smoke," Sebelius said.

The tax increases have to pass both the Kansas House and Senate, which reconvenes Jan. 10, 2005.

"Raising taxes is difficult," she said. "I think Kansans need to know how we're going to pay for it. You get nothing for free."

Chris Darrah, owner of Dara's Fast Lane convenience stores, said as cigarette taxes go up, his revenues go down and the risk of theft increases. Tobacco products make up 25 percent of inside sales.

"I think our government is taking the cheap route," Darrah said. "If you are going to do anything, outlaw the damn things. If you are worried about health risks – I don't see how this is going to stop it. It won't change anything."

This would be the second increase in cigarette tax in recent years. In 2002, Gov. Bill Graves increased the tax from 24 cents to 79 cents. In fiscal year 2002, the state of Kansas generated $133.8 million in cigarette tax and $120 million in FY 2003.

The revenue would pay for adding 40,000 children to state health insurance plans, adding 30,000 adults to insurance plans, creating a prescription drug information center online that would provide low-cost generic drugs as well as attacking inefficiencies within the current health care

Palestinian leader Arafat dies at 75 in Paris

By Ravi Nessman
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RAMALLAH, West Bank – Yasser Arafat, who triumphantly forced his people's plight into the world spotlight but failed to achieve his lifelong quest for Palestinian statehood, died Thursday at age 75.

The French military hospital where he had been treated since Oct. 29 said he died at 3:30 a.m. The Palestinian leader spent his final days there in a coma. Doctors would not disclose what ailment killed Arafat

President Bush issued a statement of condolence to the Palestinian people.

"The death of Yasser Arafat is a significant moment in Palestinian history. We express our condolences to the Palestinian people. For the Palestinian people, we hope that the future will bring peace and the fulfillment of their aspirations for an independent, democratic Palestine that is at peace with its neighbors," the president's statement said.

"During the period of transition that is ahead, we urge all in the region and throughout the world to join in helping make progress toward these goals and toward the ultimate goal of peace," Bush said.

In the first comment from an Israeli official, Justice Minister Yosef Lapid blamed Arafat for global terrorism and the failure to

In honor of Veterans' Day, Manhattan resident recalls service

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

World War II gave Jim Sharp lasting memories, and very few were fond ones.

Staff Sgt. Sharp, a Manhattan resident since 1946, served in the Army from 1944 to 1946.

He joined the armed forces at 19 years old, after his two brothers had gone to the war and two sisters moved to California to help with war efforts.

SHARP'S START IN THE WAR

When Sharp joined the armed forces, he requested to serve in the Navy but was placed in the Army as an infantryman.

He was often on the front lines, which was an eye-opening experience, he said.

"I don't think you are ever prepared for the front line combat," Sharp said. "We thought we were, but we weren't."

One of the first shocking moments Sharp experienced was when he reached Le Harve, France, where he was to be transported to the front lines, he said.

"It was foggy, and when the fog lifted all the buildings in the port area were destroyed," he said. "The Americans bombed the place two days after the Germans had left. Nobody knew the Germans had left."

Sharp and others then took a train, which brought them near the front lines. He served in the front lines in the Battle of the Bulge in the Ardennes Forrest.

HARSH LIVING CONDITIONS

Sharp said being on the front line was dangerous, and the weather didn't help.

"It was the coldest winter in about 40 years," he said. "It was blizzard conditions. It was really tough to survive.

"There was no way to keep warm. The snow was about 18 inches to 2 feet deep."

Front line soldiers lived in foxholes, which were holes they dug into the ground, he said. The foxholes were usually 3 feet square and 3 feet deep and held two soldiers. One soldier would try to sleep while the other was on guard duty.

Those serving on the front line were supposed to serve for two weeks, and then get time off to have hot baths and warm food, but that didn't always happen. The most Sharp served for was five weeks.

Besides being on the front line, Sharp was chosen about 10 times to go on patrol duty, where about 10 soldiers were sent out ahead of the front line to perform specific tasks, he said.

"Every one of them (patrol duties)was too many. It was the most dangerous duty on the front lines," he said. "You went into enemy territory. It's no man's land."

TIMES OF HAPPINESS

One of the most exciting times was when the mail came.

"Mail call was always a big, happy time on the front line," he said. "Sometimes we'd get a whole packet of it at a time. We didn't get mail everyday."

Besides letters, some soldiers would get packages, he said.

"Some of us would receive cookies and candies, and of course, you'd usually share with your buddies," he said.

Most of his mail would

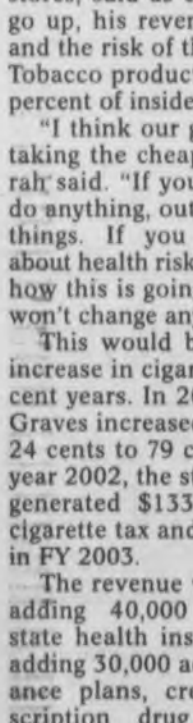
Family of missing Holton man believe he is somewhere in Riley County

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A Holton, Kan., man, who was reported missing by his family, is believed to be in the Riley County area.

Michael L. Harris, 41, was last seen in the area of De Dee's service station, 5321 Tuttle Creek Boulevard, according to a Riley County Police Department press release.



Harris' black 1989 GMC pickup truck has been located, but his location is still unknown. He had been driving the truck the last time he was seen.

Harris is described as a white male, 5'10" and weighing 170 lbs.

Representatives from the Jackson County Sheriff's office were unavailable for comment.

Anyone who has seen Harris or has knowledge of his whereabouts is asked to call Riley County Police Detective Patrick Tiede at 537 2112 Ext. 3087 or the Holton Police Department, Chief Dave Lanning at (785) 364-2174.

Harris is asked to call his family as soon as possible.

Ashcroft's successor named

By Scott Lindlaw
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – President Bush has chosen White House counsel Alberto Gonzales, a Texas confidant and the most prominent Hispanic in the administration, to succeed Attorney General John Ashcroft, sources close to the White House said Wednesday.

Ashcroft announced his resignation on Tuesday, along with Commerce Secretary Don Evans, a Texas friend of the president's.

Gonzales, 49, has long been rumored as a leading candidate for a Supreme Court vacancy if one develops. Speculation increased after Chief Justice William Rehnquist announced he has thyroid cancer.

Gonzales' career has been linked with Bush for at least a decade, serving as general counsel when Bush was governor of Texas, and then as secretary of state and as a justice on the Texas Supreme Court.

Gonzales has been at the center of developing Bush's positions on balancing civil liberties with waging the war on terrorism – opening the White House counsel to the same line of criticism that has dogged Ashcroft.

For instance, Gonzales publicly defended the administration's policy – essentially repudiated by the Supreme Court and now being fought out in the lower courts – of detaining certain terrorism suspects for extended periods without access to lawyers or courts.

He also wrote a controversial February 2002 memo in which Bush claimed the right to waive anti-torture law and international treaties providing protections to prisoners of war.

That position drew fire from human rights groups, which said it helped led to the type of abuses uncovered in the Abu Ghraib prison scandal.

Some conservatives also have quietly questioned Gonzales' credentials on core social issues. And he once was a partner in a Houston law firm which represented the scandal-ridden energy giant Enron.

Gonzales would be the first Hispanic attorney general.

Ashcroft announced his resignation on Tuesday, along with Commerce Secretary Don Evans, a Texas friend of the president's.

Teams compete at paintball

By Karthik Reddy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State has an organization that meets so members can shoot at each other with guns.

The K-State Paintball Club is composed of two types of members, the recreational members and the ones who play in tournaments, said Rob Nixon, club adviser.

The National Collegiate Paintball Association promotes paintball tournaments in which several college teams compete, and college players get exposed to the game, he said.

He also said paintball is like playing a game of tag with five team members using paintball markers and a variety of playing fields.

"The paintball club is a lot of fun and introduces paintball to the public," he said. "It's like a Sunday get-together where you get to meet a lot of people and make new friends."

He said there are local fields in and around Manhattan where people can play. The equipment can be rented or bought, and all students showing their ID cards are eligible for a discount.

Club President Darran McEuen said the club received funding from K-State this year. It was a revival of sorts for the club after a year of inactivity.

The club currently has around 25 recreational members and 10 tournament players. There's no restriction on who can sign up.

"It is a lot of fun and good sportsmanship," he said. "People get to walk away with a bunch of stories, which they can usually brag to other people."

Josh Gann, junior in computer engineering, said the paintball club is a very interesting source of entertainment, where a bunch of guys met on Sundays and had great fun practicing.

300 doses of flu vaccination available

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State students eligible for flu shots will have a chance to receive them today and over the upcoming week.

Jay Reppert, Lafene Health Center medical director, said the center has received 300 doses of the flu vaccination and will be administering them at a clinic today from 8:30 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. and from 1:30 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. Vaccines will cost $12.

Students who cannot attend this clinic are encouraged to call Lafene and schedule an appointment for sometime during the next week, or there will be an abbreviated clinic Nov. 17.

"We want to encourage students to come in now," Reppert said.

"We have vaccines, and no one else in town does. We want to share what we don't use with the rest of the community."

He said the center had about 300 vaccines in stock, and he expected them to use about 200 of them and then give the remaining vaccines to the Riley County Health Department.

Reppert said because of the shortage, Lafene is required to limit those who can receive vaccinations to people who the Centers for Disease Control defines as high-risk.

"Healthy people don't qualify; there just isn't enough vaccine to go around," he said.

Fast facts

Those eligible

- Anyone who has a chronic medical condition (asthma, diabetes, heart disease, taking steroids).
- Any females who will be pregnant during the flu season.
- Health care workers giving direct patient care.
- Out of home caregivers and household contacts of children under the age of 6 months.

City, residents debate water plant, security fence idea

By Addie Laue
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The security of Manhattan's water plant has sparked discussion between local residents and city officials.

The City of Manhattan has proposed a security fence to surround the water plant in response to a mandatory vulnerability assessment test of the water plant, which was conducted in June.

"The vulnerability test is required by the Environmental Protection Agency," said Jerry McIntyre, public works director for the City of Manhattan. "It was determined during the test that the perimeter of the water plant needed improved security."

The city then applied for a grant from the Department of Homeland Security through the Kansas Highway Patrol. The grant is for $100,000, which would pay for part of the currently undetermined total cost of the project.

But not everyone sees the need for the fence.

"There is a political game that I think is being played here," Charles Perkins, Manhattan resident said. "I see the security fence as a way to keep the community afraid of terrorism, so they will support the United States in its actions against other countries."

McIntyre said he has a different perspective on the security fence.

"I think it could potentially make a difference in the safety of the plant," McIntyre said. "There are potentially unforeseen situations that could come up. The world is changing after 9/11."

Perkins said he understands the threat of terrorism, but disagrees that the security fence would be an effective way to combat it.

"I see it as a complete waste of time and money," Perkins said. "There are other options that would be more effective."

Other residents' concerns about the security fence are less political than Perkins'.

Dave Manning, 401 Thurston St., said he is more concerned with the area the fence will enclose.

The area the proposed fence will enclose includes land that has an undetermined status, but which area residents say is used as part of Goodnow Park.

"As I look out my window right now, I see some guys playing football out there. Lots of people use the area as park space," Manning said.

Manning also pointed out that during the plant's last expansion in 1988, the plan included the statement "... master plan that will retain the park as close as possible to its current size after future expansion."

Residents' concerns are not going unheard, though.

City officials notified the residents who live near the plant of the proposal and held a meeting to get neighborhood input.

"We have taken note of the residents' comments and concerns," McIntyre said. "We are looking into them."

Manning appreciated the city's efforts in hearing the concerns.

"I recognize their efforts in planning the meeting," he said. "We need to find a compromise."

The city requested that this item be tabled at the Nov. 10 Board of Zoning Appeals meeting until the Dec. 10 meeting.

OPINION

TO THE POINT

Health care plan irresponsibly uses Kansas tax

If you make the right choices, you shouldn't have to pay for other people's bad ones.

Kansas smokers cost tax payers $700 million in health care costs because they choose to light up.

They are given the freedom to choose a potentially fatal habit, but those of us who have made the healthy choice shouldn't have to bear the burden.

Increasing the tax on cigarettes and other tobacco products, a plan proposed by Gov. Kathleen Sebelius, would generate money for Kansas health care reform. Sebelius' initiative would add 50 cents to the cigarette tax, bringing it to $1.29 per pack.

People who make healthy choices can't afford health insurance, but instead of providing coverage, the state money is going to fund medical care for lung cancer and emphysema.

Sebelius' new plan will provide coverage to 40,000 children who have been living without it. Generic drugs will be offered to low-income Kansans. Private business insurance will be subsidized to protect low-wage employees.

This is a responsible use of tax dollars.

In a perfect world, people would heed the many Surgeon General warnings placed on packages of tobacco products concerning the potential for medical ailments resulting from smoking.

While it is unlikely people will make the healthiest decisions for themselves, the government can make healthy decisions when it comes to use of taxpayer money and coherent policy to match.

Now, if Kansans would just make responsible health choices, tax dollars could be stretched, and sin taxes wouldn't even be needed.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Malpractice

Sin taxes ultimately ineffective

JAMES HURLA

I'm proud to be a Kansan – in general, at least.

I am not, however, a big fan of benefiting from others' pain as our governor apparently is.

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius proposed a plan that will raise taxes on the sin of smoking.

The idea behind Sebelius' plan is noble. About 70,000 more Kansans would have medical services, and small businesses could have private health insurance plans covered.

But a higher tax on cigarettes is not the way to achieve this goal.

The poor puffers get winded just by thinking about climbing stairs, and many can't get through an entire sentence without coughing up part of a lung. They will die several years earlier than expected. They will be much, much uglier than if they hadn't started smoking.

Worst of all, it's not their fault.

In a landmark, lucrative decision, the U.S. judicial system decided big tobacco companies, not actual smokers, were at fault for continued smoking.

The smokers were innocent bystanders. They just wanted to be slim and sexy, so they bought a pack of cigarettes.

After all, the cartoon camel looks cool – why shouldn't they?

But the evil tobacco companies tricked them. The cartoon camel was, as it turns out, just a cartoon, and the beautiful women he hung out with also were cartoons.

Smokers were the victims of a horrible trick. Inhaling smoke – a practice avoided at camp fires and other situations because of the extreme discomfort it causes – can damage your lungs. Worst of all, it's addictive.

Let's put this in perspective with role playing.

A kindly sheriff will play the role of government, Christopher Walken will play the tobacco companies, and Ben Affleck will play the role of the innocent smoker.

After Walken tricks Affleck into smoking, the sheriff saunters into town and puts and end to Walken's games and levies a hefty fine.

Government is the hero.

Then, the sheriff walks up to Affleck, punches him square in the nose and takes his wallet. That's what he gets for standing there.

But if the government is going to profit by claiming smokers were unknowingly lured into an addictive behavior, it is unfair for government to then turn around and profit from the tobacco industry's underhanded dealings.

Sin taxes – additional duties tacked on to tobacco, alcohol, etc. – are becoming too much of a cop out for government.

Some sin taxes are fine. The products being taxed are luxury items, and if you are too poor to pay the tax, you'd find a way to avoid the vice.

But if government wants to levy additional sin taxes, it should be taxing fast food and marijuana.

Instead of looking hard at waste or taking the political hit of raising taxes, politicians have taken to abusing citizens with unhealthy vices.

I know health insurance is important, but the fact remains that additional financial burdens on those who use tobacco products only serve to drive them into the lower income brackets, where we will be forced to care for them.

TO THE EDITOR

K-State response to visiting fan's vandalized vehicle was unacceptable

Editor,

I would like to say "thank you" to all of the wonderful fans, students and alumni of Kansas State. I was at your fine university for the Texas Tech game two weeks ago. For the most part, I was met with friendly smiles and wishes of good luck on the game. I had a very nice tailgate party in lot seven, right close to the southeast gate of your staduim. We had about 50 Raider fans at our party,and tons of K-State well-wishers walking by.

I was very impressed with your gameday atmosphere. Your fans are very passionate about your team. They know the conference and are very respectful towards other teams in the league. I can honestly say that I haven't had an inexperience like this in any other Big 12 stadium.

The thing that impressed me the most was how your fans trashed my truck during the first half of the game. I returned to my vehicle at halftime only to find that my flagpoles had not only been torn down, but someone actually broke them in half. Additionally, my truck had key marks all over it, and the back glass now has a very deep scratch.

I would like to extend thanks to your University Police for smiling and grinning the whole time they were taking a report. One group of fans felt so bad about the incident that the whole time your police officer was taking notes, they sat on their tailgate yelling very nice four-letter words and laughing.

Again, I would like to thank the fine people of Kansas State for the wonderful time had by all of my friends from Texas on Saturday night. You truly represent your university and the State of Kansas with class.

Good luck with the rest of your season. Go Tech!

Students need to realize the severity of violations of university Honor Code

Editor,

A K-State student was recently found by an Honor Council Hearing Panel to be responsible for an Honor Pledge violation and, as a result of that experience, was motivated to write the following editorial:

"I know as I write this article that the people who really need to read it probably won't. I wouldn't have read this article either; anything related to the Honor System didn't apply to me and was just a waste of time . . . I was wrong.

"I know now that the Honor System is nothing to mess around with. I know how serious and devastating it can be – because I've had to go through it. As a senior preparing for graduation, all I could think about was finally getting out of school and getting on with the rest of my life. I was sick of studying for tests and having no money to spend. Throughout high school and college I took pride in the hard work that I put into school and the grades I received for it. I was always a good student, receiving scholarships was a yearly blessing.

"However, I recently made a bad decision that has been more upsetting to me than most could imagine. I had been considering graduate school for some time and even flirted with the idea of pharmacy or medical school. Now I am scared that many doors have been shut on my future. One reason is that an Honor Pledge violation is something that can appear on your record and transcripts after you've graduated.

"The other reason is that the entire process is demoralizing. I feel as though the years of work and effort that I've put into school has lost all meaning and credibility. My advice to anyone debating whether to cut corners for an assignment or procrastinating in their school work and setting themselves up to cheat . . .Don't. It is a devastating experience.

Lessons are learned that will stay with us for the rest of our lives; don't take your education lightly. View your work with pride and treat school as if it were your employer. Because that's why we're here in the end. . . cheating just isn't worth it."

As a clarification, in most cases an Honor Pledge violation will not be noted on a transcript. If a student received an XF, the X is removed when the Academic Integrity course is completed. In this case, the student was not sanctioned with an XF.

As we approach the end of the semester, the temptation for shortcuts will increase in direct proportion to a student's level of procrastination and stress. Receiving an Honor Pledge violation will only increase one's level of stress.

Phil Anderson | Honor System Director

To the professors of KSU: would it honestly kill you to proofread your Powerpoint?

There needs to be a separate college campus just for smokers. That way when I'm walking along campus I can actually breathe, and I wouldn't have to gag from sitting next to one in a lecture hall.

I just paid off about $100 in parking tickets? Does that mean like a free liter of cola as a prize?

To the fellow fans of "Desperate Housewives:" what is in the trunk?

Liberal--the only label considered to "have no meaning" by liberals.

I just saw the parking nazis checking bicycles. Do they honestly have nothing better to do with their time?

I think that my chemistry teacher was one of the Spice Girls.

I called the Fourum because I like to look important, like I'm talking to someone on my phone. Thank you for being there for me.

It's not my fault the liberal Collegian misquoted me.

I don't think guys really understand the benefits of having a fat girlfriend. So come on, guys, and give us chubbies a chance. We'll treat you real nice.

This is for you cigarette-smokers: You're not wanted here, go back to KU.

They keep raising tuition, but now I see three parking nazis standing around on a smoke break. Come on, parking nazis, get out there and work and give us tickets.

Calling the Fourum is like being in front of a podium on the stage, because I keep messing up.

You spelled forum wrong.

The Fourum is to K-State students as confession is to Catholics.

Hey, Scott Seel, it's no wonder the Democratic Party got served if they're all as ignorant as you are. Next time why don't you get your facts right instead of just listening to the crap the media throws out there and spouting off an article that's almost entirely wrong.

Get up, stand up, stand up for your rights. I'm not preaching. I'm just singing a little Bob Marley.

So I heard about this guy who pees on his alarm clock whenever he's drunk. Is that normal?

"Family Guy" is the college cartoon of the century.

Isn't it spelled "forum," not "fourum?"

I don't understand. Karl Gabrilson, killed in an auto accident Sunday, who worked at K-State for 37 years, he was honored for his years of service and all the Collegian can print is a lousy four or five inch column?

Dude, you're not bi. My grandma was bi, so that makes me like, quarter bi.

You're straight like a freeway.

John Mayer spoke to me through the radio.

Ok, let me try this again. When you like a girl, don't call her best friend to get ahold of her. That's not the smoothest approach.

Just wanted to say thanks to the cute girls giving away Pepsi at the Union.

Thanks K-State for watering me while I was walking on the sidewalk. I think it made my penis grow.

Did anybody else happen to see the cheerleader holding the defense sign upside-down at the girls' basketball game last night? Yeah.

Man, does Willie ever look fine in them basketball shorts?

Leftovers make for good fun

MATT GRONEMAN

It's almost time for Thanksgiving, and you all know what that means: leftovers.

Whether bringing back half a turkey from home, or making one for a group of friends that never show up to eat it (losers), you will inevitably end up with a fridge full of more food than you could possibly eat. I hope to give you ideas on what to do with it.

The first thing to do is make soup. Begin by taking the meat off the bones.

After you have boned the turkey, place it in a pot with a large amount of water and some cubes of broth. Add in a bag or two of frozen mixed vegetables.

Add in some of your favorite pasta. Instead of just spaghetti noodles, use something fun like elbow macaroni. For added fun, try to make pictures with the pasta in the soup as you cook it.

Personally, I like cream of turkey noodle soup. To try this variation add some cream.

After bringing your delightful concoction to a boil, you're ready for the fun to begin. The next step is to put your soup on simmer.

Once you've done that call up some of your closest friends and tell them they have to come over, because this is big time. After you hang up, go to the nearest drug store and buy a package of water balloons and a big funnel.

By wrapping the end of the water balloon around the end of the funnel, you can tip the soup pot and fill up the water balloons.

Now I know what you're all thinking, "Matt, that's crazy? Playing with food is for kids."

I say college is a time to relive your youth.

Mom and dad never let you play with your peas and carrots, did they? Well now it's time to rebel.

Load up hundreds of water balloons and get ready for some mad soupings.

Divide up into teams. You can pick captains, or go boys and girls.

Pick a place that you won't be able to smell from your house, because, well, soup just doesn't keep like it should, and unload on each other. Have fun and be silly.

Don't worry about the cold weather. The warm soup will keep you from catching pneumonia.

For those of you who don't want to be wasteful, never fear. I've thought of something to do with the bones – make battle costumes.

One option is to make a rockin' Viking helmet. Take a bowl and tie some string to it so that it will stay on your head. Next, glue the drumsticks to the top in the place of horns.

Use the wishbone to practice your balloon-popping skills. This can be especially useful on defense when you are trying to keep from having green beans in your hair.

Don't let your leftovers go to waste in the back of your refrigerator – use them for fun!

African art on display in Union

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Art can be reflective of heritage.

"Heart & Soul: African Art, Artifacts and Adornments," the current collection on exhibit at the William T. Kemper Foundation Art Gallery in the K-State Student Union, is based entirely on culture and heritage.

Myra Gordon, associate provost and director of diversity and dual career development, said the pieces of art on display are from different tribes in Africa.

"The art has come from various places in Africa, but it's heavily weighed in western Africa, because I'm African American and have connections to that area," Gordon said. "I actually began collecting before I ever began traveling to Africa, and I acquired some very nice pieces."

Gordon said her first trip to Africa was exciting and opened her eyes even more to African art.

"During my first trip, I bought everything I could afford and some that I couldn't," Gordon said. "Now I'm more selective at what I buy. I more or less search for what I want.

"I don't collect what I don't love. And the goal is to install a collection of all of my art. I hope to have a permanent installment somewhere."

Gordon said she has had exhibits of her work before in other institutions, but this is her first in a student union.

"This is the first one I've done in a student union art gallery, the exhibits I've had before were more like the Beach Museum's exhibits," Gordon said. "But I like it for the easy accessibility for the public of the Union gallery. I think the same people who go to the Beach also go through the Union, so it's not just accessible to art aficionados."

Program adviser for the Union Program Council, Ben Hopper, said the student committee selected Gordon's exhibit. He said the exhibit is different due to the context of the pieces.

"The committee is the deciding factor of what will be brought in, including traveling exhibits, faculty and students," Hopper said. "The committee heard what she had as far as African art and selected her.

"I like the exhibit, because it comes from a different context. The pieces all come from different tribes in Africa. They all had purposes in different rituals and ceremonies. The collection is art, but it's actual life."

Kathi Haynes, graduate student in drawing, said she enjoys the form of the art on exhibit.

"It's interesting to have something so different in here," Haynes said.

"I think they are interesting based purely on form. The stories with each one are interesting, but they are interesting in just form."

Truck Stop Love to perform

By Will Klusener
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Former Manhattan Alt/Country rockers, Truck Stop Love, will be performing a reunion concert tonight at Auntie Mae's Parlor in Aggieville.

The band was instrumental to Manhattan's music scene in the early 90s and played in MTV's national band competition, "Dodge's Rockin' Campus Bash."

A reunion has been in the works for quite a while, Rich Yarges, vocalist for TSL, said.

"We were gonna do it last December but couldn't get it together," Yarges said. "We finally got the logistics down this fall."

Yarges said this tour, with two more stops in Lawrence and Kansas City, will likely be the last chance fans will have to see TSL.

"I'm thinking it will probably be a one-time thing at this point, because I live in Minneapolis (Minn.) and they all live down here," Yarges said.

Yarges said TSL has been a revolving door for members. All original members, including Yarges, drummer Eric Melin, guitarist Matt Mozier, bassist Brad Huhmann, and Mozier's replacement, Jim Crego will all be on hand for the tour.

Yarges said the show will most likely be divided into two sets, with a possible third.

"Me, Matt, Eric and Brad will play a set, then play a short set with Jim, and possibly all get together at the end to do a few songs," he said.

Auntie Mae's is the ideal venue to host TSL's last hurrah as well, Jeff Denney, co-owner of Mae's, said.

"I've known most of those guys since I moved here and used to go watch them play at house parties, so then I had them come play here," he said. "We've stayed fairly close, so when I heard that they were having a reunion, I was excited."

Shannon Heavey, junior in geography, said she is ecstatic over the chance to see TSL one more time.

"They're an old-school, local rock band that really just puts on an awesome show," she said.

"They really reach out to their audience in an awesome way."

McGraw's 'Dying' wins song of the year

Tim McGraw's "Live Like You Were Dying" won song of the year and single of the year, and Kenny Chesney took entertainer of the year and album of the year honors at the Country Music Association awards Tuesday night.

Chesney, whose album "When the Sun Goes Down" took top honors, noted that he's "been making records and been on the road 12 years now, and this is my first CMA award. ... I'm very proud of it."

McGraw's song was chosen over Wilson's "Redneck Woman," Josh Turner's "Long Black Train," Alan Jackson's "Remember When" and the Paisley-Alison Krauss duet "Whiskey Lullaby."

Other winners included Keith Urban, Gretchen Wilson, Brad Paisley, Martina McBride and Rascal Flatts.

Playboy Mansion tour, Buffett tickets in auction

A tour of the Playboy Mansion, tickets to a Jimmy Buffett concert and a signed first edition of Hunter S. Thompson's "Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas" — complete with your own personal bullet hole — are among the prizes being auctioned on behave the Paris Review, the celebrated literary magazine.

The charity auction, which began Tuesday and ends Nov. 18, is titled, "The World of the Paris Review: The Greatest International Literary Magazine, Complete with Sports, Stars, Literary Supernovas, and of course the Irrepressible Spirit of Founder and Late Editor George Plimpton."

Plimpton, the famed author-adventurer who ran the magazine for 50 years, diet in 2003.

50 Cent pleads innocent to assault charge

Rapper 50 Cent pleaded innocent to assault charges stemming from an alleged incident at a concert.

Steve Leary, the lawyer for the rapper, whose real name is Curtis Jackson, entered the plea Monday in Springfield District Court, said James Orenstein, first assistant district attorney for Hampden County.

50 Cent, 26, didn't appear in court.

At a concert in Springfield, Mass., in May, Jackson allegedly jumped into the crowd after someone threw or squirted water at him. Three women were injured.

Ex-'SNL' star Meadows headed for divorce

Actor Tim Meadows' wife has filed for a divorce.

Michelle Meadows filed divorce papers in Los Angeles Superior Court Monday.

The couple were married in July 1997 and have two sons, ages 3 and 1, according to court papers. Michelle Meadows has requested the children live with her but that legal custody be shared.

Reporter out of line at press conference

MICHAEL ASHFORD

Did you hear the one about the overzealous TV reporter and the well-respected football coach with nothing to hide?

It's a good one, trust me.

This past Tuesday's football press conference with K-State Coach Bill Snyder was interesting, to say the least.

KCTV-5 news reporter Steve Chamraz attended the press conference, which wouldn't have been such a big deal if Chamraz was a sports reporter.

It turns out, he is Kansas City-based KCTV's lead "investigative reporter," and he was in Manhattan looking to stick his nose in Coach Snyder's business.

Chamraz sat through almost 30 minutes of Snyder's press conference, biding his time, waiting for the right moment to strike.

Towards the end of the questioning, Chamraz began his assault on Snyder.

Chamraz rudely asked Snyder how he justified using the university jet for himself and Mrs. Snyder.

Snyder, being the cool and collected guy he is, calmly began to answer Chamraz's question.

He thanked the university donors who make it possible for the university to operate a jet, but he made it very clear that he had never used the jet for any purpose other than official university business, and every trip he had taken was stipulated in his contract.

This wasn't the answer Chamraz was looking for.

In a very pompous and arrogant tone, Chamraz asked, "Including the $5,400 it cost to fly you to your physical in California?"

"It's within my contract. You're absolutely right," Snyder said in response.

"So, that's just the cost of having you as the head coach of Kansas State football?" Chamraz asked disrespectfully.

Snyder seemed to take offense to this last quip by Chamraz, stating he didn't "appreciate that question," and he declined to answer any more questions regarding the matter.

As you can imagine, this turn of events left the rest of the news media in attendance in a state of semi-shock.

What exactly was Chamraz trying to prove?

Coach Snyder's life is dedicated to his faith, family and football. He is not the kind of guy to fraudulently and carelessly waste thousands of dollars of the university's money, and if Chamraz had done any "investigating," he would have picked up on that.

The fact is Chamraz was simply trying to dig up dirt where nothing but a slab of bedrock exists.

Snyder has nothing to hide, except occasionally the injury status of one of his players.

Chamraz came off as an egotistical and arrogant reporter searching for any shred of wrongdoing, and his childish display was nothing short of an embarrassment to journalists everywhere.

So Chamraz, if you want to be truly investigative, you need to worry about something other than the travel habits of a legendary football coach.

Senior middle blocker Lisa Martin goes up to make a kill during the first game of the Cats' game against Colorado. The Cats won in four games.

K-State 3, Colorado 1

Wildcat revenge

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

All in all it was a successful night for K-State. The Wildcats avenged an earlier loss, knocked off a conference rival at home and got great performances from several players, including one fresh face.

No. 20 K-State topped Colorado 3-1 Wednesday night at Ahearn Field House, taking the match 30-21, 30-11, 27-30 and 30-19. The win moves the Wildcats to 16-8 overall and 10-5 in the Big 12 Conference. The Buffaloes fell to 11-12 and 6-10 in the Big 12.

After losing to Colorado on the road earlier this season, Coach Suzie Fritz said her team took advantage of the rematch.

"We see it as an opportunity to compete against certainly a quality opponent," Fritz said. "And I thought for two-and-a-half of the four games, we played as well as we have all year from all aspects."

As a team, K-State hit a strong .326 on the night, and defensively they out-blocked Colorado 30-6.

"We did a better job as the match wore on on picking up on the opponent's tendencies and taking away the things they liked to do most often," Fritz said.

Senior outside hitter Vali Hejjas had a huge night for K-State, notching a double-double with 17 kills on .412 hitting and 10 digs. Senior middle blocker Lisa Martin had 12 kills and led the Cats with nine blocks, and freshman middle blocker Rita Liliom, in her first game at Ahearn Field House, had six kills on .545 hitting. She also had seven blocks and three service aces.

"She's a little spark for us," Martin said of Liliom. "She's nice and quick and makes a good move over the net, a good blocking move, and she reads correctly."

Liliom saw her first action Saturday against Nebraska after being cleared by the NCAA.

Fritz said Liliom has had an immediate effect on the team.

"She played very well, and she's only been practicing with us for about a month," Fritz said.

"She's a nice complete middle blocker."

Cats wrap up exhibition play tonight

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When the K-State Wildcats take on the Pittsburg State Gorillas at 7 tonight in the team's exhibition finale, grabbing a win will not be the only thing on their mind.

With an 18-game home schedule, including 10 of the first 11 games, the Wildcats will look to establish an environment of success at Bramlage Coliseum.

"We're obviously trying to build on confidence and trying to build an atmosphere here at Bramlage that makes it tough for opponents to come in and win," Coach Jim Wooldridge said.

K-State comes into tonight's match-up with a 4-1 record in exhibition play. After going 3-1 during an October exhibition tour in Canada, the Wildcats defeated the EA Sports All-Stars 71-59 at Bramlage Coliseum on Nov. 3.

Sophomore guard Lance Harris, starting in place of injured sophomore newcomer Fred Peete, dropped in 26 points on 10-of-15 shooting against EA Sports.

Following the game, Wooldridge said he was pleased with many aspects of the Wildcats' play, but the team had plenty of room for improvement.

"We've got to be a better execution team. We're really trying to focus on playing better together," Wooldridge said. "That's going to be our ticket, and that's how we're going to try to develop our team."

Pittsburg State opens its 2004-05 season against the Wildcats. The Division-II school from Southeast Kansas is coached by 24-year head coaching veteran Gene Iba. Iba is the nephew of college basketball coaching legend Henry Iba and is in his ninth year with Pittsburg State.

Wooldridge said the Gorillas should challenge the Wildcats.

"I think playing Pittsburg State and Coach Iba's team, with the way he coaches, and I've known him for a long time, we're really going to get a college game here," Wooldridge said. "They're well-coached, and they're going to be excited about playing, I would think."

Fast facts

WILDCAT FAST BREAK

- Sophomore transfer guard Fred Peete is expected to play tonight after sitting out last week's game against the EA Sports All-Stars with a back injury.
- Junior forward Marques Hayden should also be back tonight after sitting out against EA Sports for disciplinary reasons. Senior forward Dramane Diarra, who sat out against EA Sports with a foot injury, is doubtful.

Wildcat rowers set for Sunflower Showdown

By Stacy Ryan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Intensity is picking up as the Wildcat women's rowing team prepares for the Sunflower Showdown against Kansas on Friday.

The past two years the rivals have split victories, with K-State taking the fall race and KU winning in the spring.

In addition to being a 2K race, which is half as long as the other races K-State has competed this fall, the Showdown highlights another aspect of the sprint race. In the race this weekend, the Wildcats will be side-by-side with their opponents, as opposed to a staggered, 'waterfall' start.

Coach Patrick Sweeney said he is ready to see how the women handle the pressure of the different style of racing.

"It is a learning process where they can use the other team and feed off of them, but they can only affect themselves, so they can't worry about the other team," Sweeney said.

Sophomore Danielle Scott said racing right next to the other team definitely has an effect on competition.

"When they're right there, you know with every stroke you can either push them away or gain on them. It really takes the competition to the next level and helps you do better," Scott said.

Sweeney said in the two weeks the team has had to prepare for the Showdown, they have been working on shorter distances, faster starts and more sprinting at a higher pace.

Earlier this season in the Iowa Head, KU beat K-State in everything except the varsity boat. Sweeney said this can be attributed to KU's depth and experience as a team. He said if the Wildcats put everything together, that won't be the case this weekend, and K-State will be able to compete.

The normal level of competition is taken to a higher level in this race because of the fierce rivalry between the two Kansas schools.

Senior Linzi Hauldren said the rivalry is a big deal to the team. She said from past races against KU the thing she remembers most about competing with them is when K-State swept KU her sophomore year.

Scott said it is important to represent K-State well in the rivalry.

"It's the Sunflower Showdown, and we really want the cup and to continue the tradition. It will be a close race," Scott said. "We really duke it out, so you have to be ready for anything."

WCBB | Wecker named preseason All-America

The preseason accolades keep coming for Kendra Wecker.

Wecker

The K-State senior forward was named to The Associated Press All-America team on Tuesday.

Joining Wecker on the All-America team are LSU's Seimone Augustus, Minnesota's Janel McCarville, Tennessee's Shyra Ely and Notre Dame's Jacqueline Batteast.

Wecker and senior guard Laurie Koehn, were also among the 50 players selected as preseason candidates for the Naismith Award on Tuesday.

The Naismith Award is presented annually to the top men's and women's basketball players in the country. The Naismith list will be narrowed to 30 in Jan. 2005.

Olympics | Sprinter banned for life after positive test

Sprinter Jerome Young, a central figure in a doping case that could cost the U.S. relay team its gold medal from Sydney, was banned for life by the U.S. Anti-Doping Agency on Wednesday following his second positive test for a banned drug.

Young tested positive for EPO at a Paris meet in July, USADA said. He is believed to be the first sprinter to test positive for EPO, which is popular with endurance runners and cyclists.

Tests for EPO were introduced at the 2000 Sydney Games. Sprinter Kelli White admitted she used EPO and other performance-enhancing drugs earlier this year when she accepted a two-year ban for doping.

Young, 28, tested positive for the steroid nandrolone in 1999, but was exonerated by a U.S. appeals panel in Jul. 2000, avoiding a two-year ban. He ran in the opening and semifinal rounds of the 2000 Games, but not in the 1,600-meter final anchored by Michael Johnson.

All six members of the relay squad received gold medals, but Young's was stripped.

MLB | Cox, Showalter named top managers

Bobby Cox and Buck Showalter were given little chance of success after payroll purges pushed out key players. Proving the predictions wrong, their teams won, anyway, and so did the managers.

Cox

Cox was voted NL Manager of the Year on Wednesday for leading the Atlanta Braves to an unexpected 13th straight division title, and Showalter won the AL honor for turning the last-place Rangers into a contender after Texas traded MVP Alex Rodriguez to the New York Yankees.

Cox received 22 first-place votes and 10 seconds for 140 points in balloting by the Baseball Writers' Association of America. Tony La Russa of St. Louis, who has won four manager of the year awards, was second with 62 points after leading the Cardinals to a major league-best 105-57 record. Jim Tracy of Los Angeles was third with 52.

Showalter received 14 first-place votes, nine seconds and four thirds for 101 points, finishing ahead of Minnesota's Ron Gardenhire, who got 11 firsts, 11 seconds and three thirds for 91 points.

NASCAR | Liquor to make sponsorship return

NASCAR returned to its roots Wednesday by lifting a ban on liquor ads on cars, opening the door for teams to be sponsored next season by distilled spirits.

NASCAR already allowed beer and malt liquor sponsorships. Budweiser sponsors Dale Earnhardt Jr.'s car, for example, and Busch sponsors a lower-tier racing series.

Diageo, a British liquor company that was already an associate sponsor for Matt Kenseth with its Smirnoff ICE malt beverage, immediately announced Wednesday that its Crown Royal distilled whiskey will be the sponsor on another Roush Racing car next season.

VETRAN | Wartime service brings new perspectives

come from his parents, brothers and sisters, aunts and uncles and the woman who would become his wife, Marilyn, or Mickey, as Sharp calls her.

Sharp said he was able to write letters at least once a week.

Mickey said she wrote Sharp often.

"Sometimes I'd write everyday," she said. "I got a lot of letters from him, too, for him being out in the war. I got quite few."

She kept busy teaching school while Sharp was away, which helped her bear his absence, she said.

AFTER THE WAR

Sharp served as a guard for the Palace of Justice in Nuremberg, Germany, after the war was over, he said. German leaders were held and went to court there.

He received several medals for his service, including a Bronze Star for going on a rescue mission, and a Purple Heart for wounds he received on his left leg in the capture of Uslar, Germany.

"Fortunately it wasn't a major wound," he said.

RETURN HOME

When he returned to Kansas, he attended K-State in 1946 and earned his degree in business administration in 1950. He also married Mickey and got a job at the Kansas Farm Bureau, where he worked for 35 years.

He has been a Manhattan resident and a K-State football season ticket holder since he went to school here.

"It's a friendly, thriving, progressive community with a lot of activities," Sharp said. "It's not too large and not too small, about right."

RETIREMENT

During Sharp's retirement from Kansas Farm Bureau, Mickey and he traveled back to Europe to retrace his steps.

"It was surprising. You went back to these villages where dozens of people were killed or injured, and buildings were destroyed," Sharp said. "You can't even tell the war happened. The only thing that stayed the same was the Palace of Justice."

Then in 2000, Sharp wrote a book called, "Diary of a Combat Infantryman – WWII." Most of the material came from a diary he kept while in the war.

He said he wrote it to explain on paper what was difficult to do in person.

"A lot of people were asking some pretty pointed questions about my duty as a combat man, especially my children," Sharp said.

Sharp's youngest child, Brian Sharp, of Ottawa, Kan., said after reading the book he was surprised his father survived.

"I counted six or eight times he shouldn't have left Germany standing up," he said. "He should've probably been killed.

"I had some new admiration for what he had done."

LIFE LESSONS

Sharp said that after serving in the war, he had a new perspective on life.

"It made you appreciate life a lot more. It made you hate war, because I think war is really a failure of mankind to resolve problems," he said. "The Army taught me discipline, which at 19 I needed. It also taught me how to better manage my time."

system.

Darrah, who does not smoke, said often the tax just forces smokers to feed their addiction by finding cigarettes somewhere else.

"There are a handful of people that switch to a cheaper cigarette," he said. "What some of the markets have created is a black market. You get taxed so high that basically there are people buying in the underworld or through the Internet. Does it affect consumption? Probably not. Does it affect sales here? Definitely."

Generating revenue by increasing taxes is common nationwide. In fact, Kansas only ranked 21st in state cigarette tax. New Jersey ranked first with $2.05 tax per pack and last was Virginia with $0.025 tax per pack.

The motivation behind the tax is smokers are typically in the lower-income bracket, which means taxpayers end up paying for smoking-related health care problems.

Darrah said it's wrong to focus on smoking addictions when there are much bigger problems within the state government.

"That's an unfair world," he said. "I don't think this is going to be the answer to anything. It's just another way to rip off the poor people who smoke cigarettes."

achieve Middle East peace, but expressed hope of improved relations under new leadership.

The Palestinian parliament speaker will be sworn in as Palestinian Authority president in the coming hours.

Under Palestinian law, Parliament Speaker Rauhi Fattouh, a virtual unknown, is to become caretaker president until elections are held in 60 days.

Arafat's failure to groom a successor complicated his passing, raising the danger of factional conflict among Palestinians.

Arafat kept the Palestinians' cause at the center of the Arab-Israeli conflict, but he fell short of creating a Palestinian state. He saw his influence weakened by the rise of radical Islam.

Followers mourn passing

Day after Arafat's death, Palestinians speculate in grief

By Ravi Nessman
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RAMALLAH, West Bank – Palestinians at home and abroad wept, waved flags and burned tires Thursday in an eruption of grief at the death of Yasser Arafat, the man they consider the father of their nation. The quick appointment of successors did little to dispel the huge question marks now hanging over Mideast peace efforts.

Arafat
FORMER PALESTINIAN LEADER

Although Arafat's death at 75 led some world leaders to talk about the possibility of a new era, the outlook also was shadowed by fears of a chaotic transition and a strengthening of Islamic militants.

The burial arrangements in themselves showed how disrupted the region is. The international funeral was to take place in Egypt, because few Arab leaders would travel to Israeli-controlled Palestinian land; Arafat was to be buried in the West Bank town of Ramallah because Israel refused to approve interment in Jerusalem; and most mourners from the Gaza Strip would be barred from traveling across Israeli territory to Ramallah, a security official said.

Workers in Cairo scrambled to lay new carpet and mow the lawn at a small mosque near the airport where dozens of foreign dignitaries will honor the Palestinian leader in a modest ceremony Friday morning, before Arafat's body is flown to Ramallah for a burial service.

In France, where Arafat died before dawn Thursday after 13 nights in a Paris military hospital, eight pallbearers carried his flag-draped coffin past an honor guard Thursday evening as a military band played the French and Palestinian national anthems and a Chopin funeral march.

Arafat's widow, Suha, stifled sobs as the coffin was transferred from a French military helicopter to the official French airplane heading to Egypt.

Though it had been expected for several days as he fell into a coma, Arafat's death stunned Palestinians and left them wondering who could possibly replace their leader of the last four decades.

Arafat had not anointed a successor, but within hours the Palestine Liberation Organization elected former Prime Minister Mahmoud Abbas to replace him as its new chief, virtually ensuring he takes over as Palestinian leader, at least for now.

The Palestinian legislature also swore in Speaker Rauhi Fattouh as caretaker president of the Palestinian Authority, the self-ruling power in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, though that position likely will have far less power than when Arafat

On a rainy, cold day in 2002, first grader Jack Dayton had to say goodbye to the only school he had ever known, Eugene Field Elementary School.

Eugene Field and Bluemont Elementary schools were closed in 2002 after the school district faced a $2 million budget deficit. Jack, now a fourth-grader, might have to face another school closure.

Last week, Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 school board members voted 4 to 3 in favor of closing Dayton's current school – Theodore Roosevelt Elementary – at the end of the 2005-06 school year.

School board members originally planned on voting to close

Budget deficit threatens teachers

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 will have to undergo some budget cuts to compensate for its $1.7 million budget deficit.

Teachers' jobs might be at risk to help compensate for the budget, School Board President Walt Pesaresi said. About 85 percent of the district's budget is salary-related, he said.

"I'm sure there are going to be some staff layoffs, and I think there are going to be some anyway, as we are right-sizing with the classrooms," he said.

Pesaresi said if teachers are laid off, the first teachers at risk are newer teachers.

"In the State of Kansas, without three years of experience in a district, you're not tenured," he said. "Most school districts are using that right at this point in time in Kansas as the first line of layoffs."

In the past the school district has laid off newer teachers; however, Pesaresi said that might not be the case this year.

"The thing to keep in mind also is if we have people that

Parents urged to ask legislators for solution

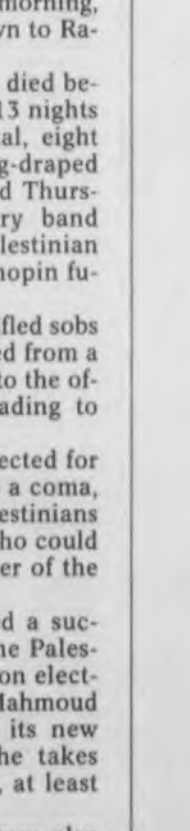
School board members for Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 are struggling with budget shortfalls, and parents lobbying their legislators might be the district's best hope.

"Until the state increases funding for the district, Manhattan-Ogden will continue to struggle, and we will continue to encourage parents to talk to legislators," Roger Brannan, school board member, said.

The district is undergoing several changes that influence the school budget. Randy Martin, school board member, said the reduction in enrollment, maintenance of schools and school enhancements are keeping the budget tight.

"We are trying to improve the standards of our district by promoting special projects and increasing the number of paraprofessionals in the classroom," Martin said. "But with the budget decreases, it is not as easy anymore."

David Colburn, vice president of the board, said the differences are unfair.



Schools within USD 383 are fairly large, Colburn said. Manhattan High School is classified as a 6A school, the largest classification in the State of Kansas.

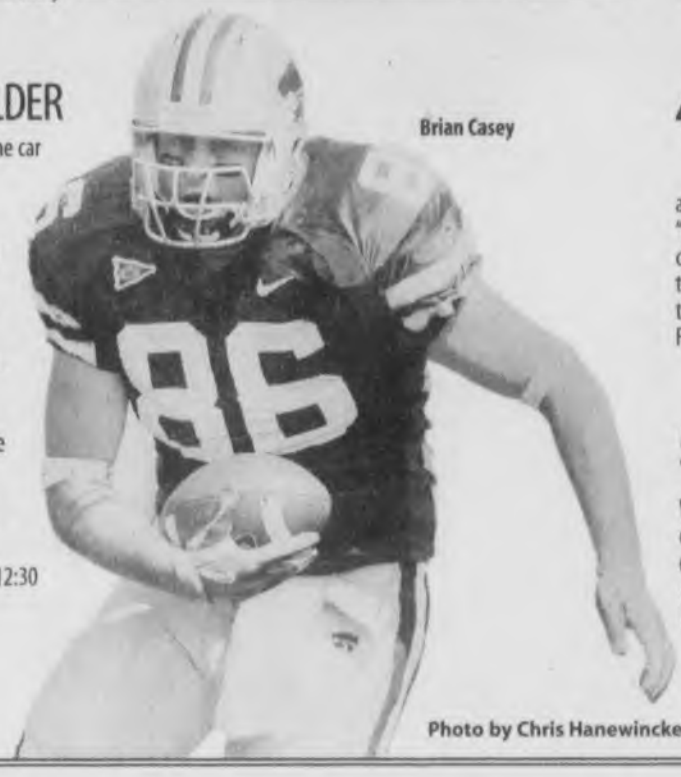
Your guide to this weekend's entertainment

1 | RIDE THE TRAIN



Courtesy art

While Thanksgiving is less than two weeks away, that isn't stopping the locomotive that is Hollywood from starting to release its holiday lineup of films.

The first major effort is "The Polar Express," an animated film based on live performances captured by computer, similar to the work on the character Gollum in "The Lord of the Rings" films.

Directed by Robert Zemeckis ("Cast Away," "Forrest Gump") and starring Tom Hanks, the film is an adaptation of the popular children's book of the same name. A young boy climbs aboard the mystical train with the hope of visiting Santa at the North Pole. Rated G, the film opens today in theaters nationwide.

Pack some warm clothing, fill the car with a tank of gas and hop on over into Mountain Time for Saturday's football game between the Wildcats (4-5, 2-4 in Big 12) and University of Colorado Buffaloes (5-4, 2-4 in Big 12).

The match at Folsom Field will be critical to K-State's chances of being eligible for a bowl game. There will be no live telecast of the game, so venturing up into the Rockies and buying a ticket is the best way to make sure you see the action. Kickoff is scheduled for 12:30 p.m. MST.

3 | INDOOR ACTIVITIES

Courtesy art

While it might not be the best place for a first date, Union Program Council's After Hours continues tonight with a series of activities and a free screening of the Adam Sandler and Drew Barrymore comedy, "50 First Dates."

The events begin at 9 p.m. in the K-State Student Union Courtyard. Mini-golf, karaoke and EA Sports games will be on hand until midnight. In between, a free breakfast bar will be open starting at 10 p.m.

Cap off the night with the midnight screening of "50 First Dates" in Forum Hall. A Collegian review earlier this year described the film as "sweet and sometimes deserving of a chuckle."

4 | WALK LIKE AN EGYPTIAN

If sports and movies aren't your cup of tea, check out one of the many arts and theater events happening across Manhattan this weekend. The "Nature Morte: Alive and Well" still-life exhibit at the Strecker-Nelson Gallery continues its run, and the Wrap It Up Art Exhibit and Sale will be open Friday through Sunday at the Manhattan Arts Center. Also at the MAC is a community theater production of "Moon Over Buffalo," with shows starting at 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday, and 2 p.m. Sunday. Tickets range in cost from $5 to $12.

5 | ZOOBALY ZOO

When's the last time you went to the zoo? This weekend may be your last chance before it gets too cold to brave the elements. Sunset Zoological Park is offering free admission Saturday in honor of the nation's veterans and military service members. Flint Hills Breadbasket also will collect nonperishable food items.

Zoo to honor veterans

By Annie M. Lewis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Sunset Zoological Park will be saluting veterans Saturday by allowing free admission to the park and giving a free musical concert.

"We do it close to Veterans Day every year," said Dianne Paukstelis, development officer at the zoo. "It's just a free day at the zoo."

Sunset Zoo has been sponsoring Military Appreciation Day for more than three years and will honor veterans, past and present, she said.

"We had soldiers in Iraq this year," she said. "It's just something we do to show our gratefulness."

An addition to this year's celebration is a musical performance.

"Usually we just collect canned food items and let people in free," Paukstelis said. "This is the first year we've had a musical performer."

When: 9:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday
Where: Sunset Zoological Park
How much: Free

Robert Hildreth will be performing from 1 to 1:30 p.m. at the zoo's amphitheater, she said.

He will be performing songs from an album he put together as part of a non-profit organization, Project Comfort.

Project Comfort collects stuffed animals to send to children in Iraq who are war victims.

Hildreth started recording songs that he gives to soldiers for no cost.

He said he wrote songs about issues he hopes soldiers can relate to and find solace in.

Hildreth said he is looking forward to performing at Sunset Zoo.

"My wife told me they were doing a Military Appreciation Day," he said. "I thought that was right in line with my project, so I offered to do a free concert."

Flint Hills Breadbasket will be accepting food donations throughout the day.

Selina Bell, director and founder of Project Comfort, said she is glad that Hildreth will be at the celebration.

"For every one CD someone purchases at Hildreth's concert, we will send three overseas to the military," she said.

Bell said Hildreth's music project is one of the best ways to comfort and encourage soldiers who need it most.

"Music is one of the most emotionally provoking mediums," she said, "and we want them to feel good about what they did."

Student Senate introduces bill to change club members' voting rights

By Kristi Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Senators are considering a bill that will allow only students to be voting members in student organizations on campus.

A bill to change the student organization requirement from 80 to 100 percent was proposed at Thursday's senate meeting.

The bill was referred back to its committee and will be revisited next week.

Tyson Moore, Student Senate vice chair and one of the authors of the bill, said the senate has had problems in the past of non-students in organizations getting funding from student reserves.

"I don't think it should be in our rules to allow non-students to receive student funding," Moore said.

Gayle Spencer, coordinator for the Office of Student Activities and Services, said only 10 to 15 percent of student organizations on campus would be affected if the bill is passed.

"Students should only have to pay for other students, but with the current standards, any group with 80 percent student voting members can receive student funding," Spencer said.

The amendment to the statutes, if passed, will not restrict student organizations from receiving money from the senate, Moore said.

"It would, however, require that the only people voting on whatever activity is described receiving funding is students. It is students' funding, and they should be the ones to vote on it," Moore said.

The bill outlines a clause not limiting the amount of input or support a faculty, administration, community or staff member gives to the organization.

Spencer said most other schools require 100 percent student voting members in organizations.

"I've been asking since I started this in 1997 why we aren't 100 percent students," Spencer said.

Senators allocated funding to the Sexual Health Awareness Peer Educators, the American Humanics Student Association, Campus Crusade for Christ and the Kansas State College Bowl team before discussing the amendment to the statutes.

U.S. soldiers observe artillery explosions from the roof of a local house they occupied Wednesday while fighting in Fallujah, Iraq. U.S. and Iraqi forces invaded Fallujah in an attempt to overrun insurgents who control the city. Fighting continues in the city for a second day.

Military estimates 600 insurgents among dead in Fallujah attack

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FALLUJAH, Iraq – U.S. forces backed by an air and artillery barrage launched a major attack Thursday into the southern half of Fallujah, trying to choke Sunni fighters in a shrinking cordon. The military estimated 600 insurgents have been killed in the offensive but said success in the city won't break Iraq's insurgency.

The military said 18 Americans have been killed and 69 wounded in the Fallujah campaign, now in its fourth day, along with five allied Iraqi soldiers killed and 34 wounded. With the Fallujah battle and increased attacks elsewhere, around 100 wounded Americans – more than twice the usual daily number – were flown to Landstuhl, Germany, the main U.S. military hospital in Europe.

In northern Iraq, violence escalated dramatically in Mosul, the country's third biggest city, amid a campaign of stepped-up attacks by guerrillas aimed at diverting U.S.-Iraqi forces from Fallujah.

Gunmen in Mosul attacked and overwhelmed several police stations and battled U.S. and Iraqi troops around bridges across the Tigris River, the military said. A Kurdish official said some Mosul police were cooperating with the militants. A U.S. military spokeswoman Capt. Angela Bowman said it could take "some time until we fully secure the city," where a curfew was imposed a day earlier.

In Baghdad, a car bomb ripped through a crowded commercial street, killing 17 people, police said – the second deadly car bomb in the capital in as many days. People pulled bodies and bloodied survivors from the rubble a dozen mangled vehicles burned after the blast went off on Saadoun Street, moments after a U.S. patrol passed.

Since Monday, U.S. and Iraqi troops have been fighting their way through the northern half of Fallujah, reaching the east-west highway that bisects the city and battling pockets of fighters trapped in the north while other insurgents fell back into the south.

After sunset Thursday, U.S. soldiers and Marines launched their main assault across the central highway into Fallujah's southern half after air and artillery barrages pummeled the sector throughout the day, the military said.

Sunni fighters in the sector appear to be trying desperately to break open an escape route through the U.S.-Iraqi cordon closing off Fallujah's southern edge, commanders said. Insurgent mortar fire and attacks have focused on bridges and roads out of the city more than on U.S. troops descending from the north, they said.

Commanders say that since the offensive began, their seal around the city is tight and that fighters still inside have little chance of escape.

Some 15,000 U.S. and Iraqi troops are involved in the cordon and the assault inside the city.

Military officials cautioned that the figure of 600 insurgents killed in the city was only a rough estimate. The chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Gen. Richard Myers, said Thursday that "hundreds and hundreds of insurgents" have been killed and captured.

Commanders said before the offensive that 1,200 to 3,000 fighters were believed holed up in the city.

Businesses raffle off makeover

By Sara Sandock
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Mayor's Holiday Parade may yield more than just a good time this year.

This year, Zotcis Attire and Shear Dynamics Salon and Day Spa are teaming up to give one winner a makeover, while donating the profits to the annual Mayor's Holiday Parade in Triangle Park, Sara Strothman, owner of Zotcis Attire, said.

Anyone interested can visit the two venues and submit a ticket to be entered into the drawing.

It is suggested that people who enter donate $1 for one ticket and $5 for six tickets, Strothman said.

"The drawing ends Nov. 20, the day of the Iowa State game, because more students and their parents will be in that weekend and will have a chance to enter," said Belinda McMillian-Snyder, owner of Shear Dynamics Salon and Day Spa.

The winner will receive a pair of jeans, a shirt and a pair of shoes from Zotcis and will receive a haircut, coloring, eyebrow shaping and makeup application from Shear Dynamics.

"We had to give a list of prizes in order to advertise some sort of prize, but we can actually customize a makeover for the winner," McMillian-Snyder said. "For example, if someone doesn't color their hair they can get a facial instead or a body wave."

Haley Morehead, senior in elementary education, said she is a customer of Zotcis.

"This makeover is a really good deal because their (Zotcis) stuff is usually higher in price. It's definitely worth $1, and it's all for a good cause," Morehead said.

Both owners said they thought it would be fun for their companies to do a take-off of the popular TV makeovers, while raising money for a good cause.

McMillian-Snyder said this is an attempt to try a different marketing technique and is a good way to strengthen relations with other Aggieville businesses.

"I thought it would be something fun to do. We are helping out both the needy and the winner. It would be fun to get a makeover right before Christmastime," Strothman said.

The winner will be announced Nov. 20. He or she be contacted by phone, and the name will be posted at both participating stores.

OPINION

TO THE POINT

Board should not compromise education

It's not worth keeping open a school to preserve tradition and community if the overall quality of education suffers.

The decision by the Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 School Board to keep Theodore Roosevelt Elementary School open for another year means elementary Spanish, band, orchestra and other quality programs are on the chopping block.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Christopher Harrop
Patrice R. Holderbach
Kristi Hurla
Katie Lane

Loni Woolery

Closing a school is an emotional, risky action that upsets parents, teachers and students.

But because of the board's reluctance to hurt a few feelings and endanger their political careers, as many as 30 teachers could lose their jobs.

USD 383 should always put its students' and teachers' futures first.

It's not worth preserving one school if the entire district suffers as a result. That one school is not worth degrading the quality of education for all students.

Children adapt. They can learn at any school.

But if they don't have the opportunity to learn music or discover another culture, they will suffer in the future.

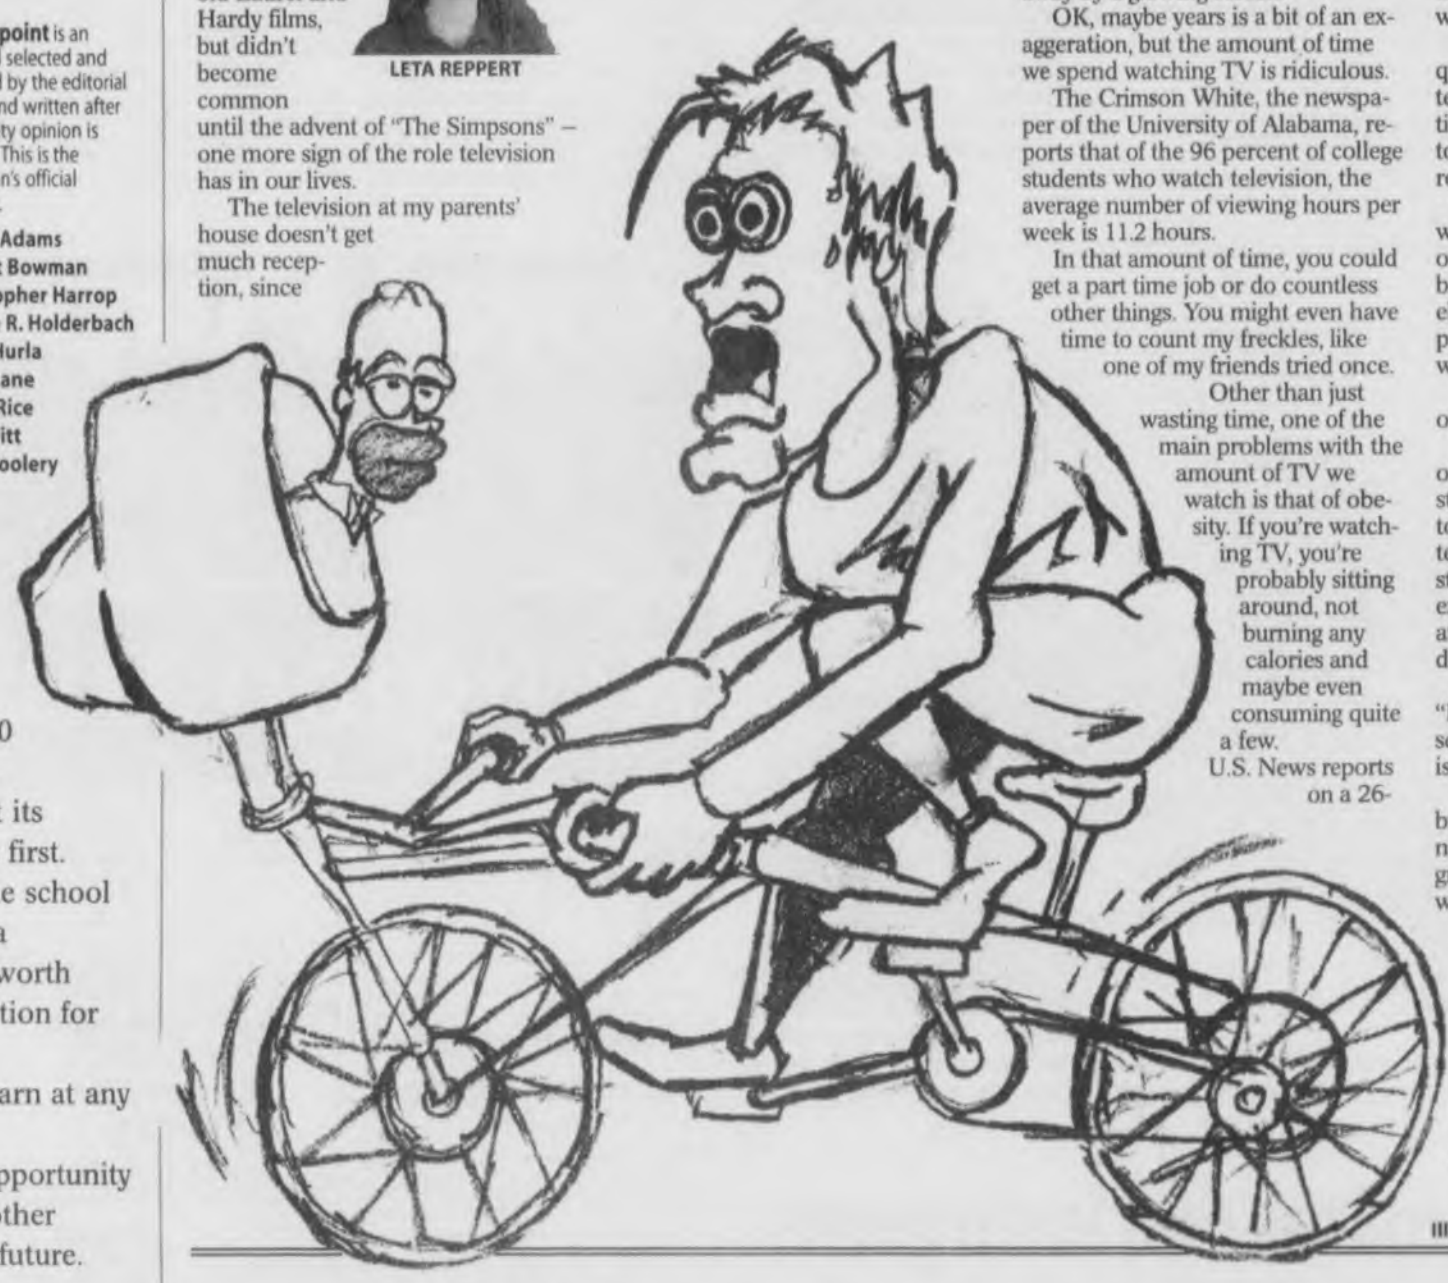
Must (not) see TV

Excessive television viewing can lead to health problems

LETA REPPERT



"D'oh" is now officially a word, recently having been included in the Oxford English Dictionary.

Alternately spelled "Doh" and "Dooh," the word apparently originated on old Laurel and Hardy films, but didn't become common until the advent of "The Simpsons" – one more sign of the role television has in our lives.

The television at my parents' house doesn't get much reception, since the house is behind a big hill, cable doesn't reach out to where we live, and we don't have a satellite dish.

Thus, it wasn't until this summer, when I studied in Spain, that I began to watch "Los Simpsons."

I don't think I missed much.

"The Simpsons" is pretty good as TV shows go, but all in all I'm glad I've never wasted much time on it, or on other TV shows, for that matter.

One of the good things about growing up without TV was that I didn't have years of my life sucked away by a glowing screen.

OK, maybe years is a bit of an exaggeration, but the amount of time we spend watching TV is ridiculous.

The Crimson White, the newspaper of the University of Alabama, reports that of the 96 percent of college students who watch television, the average number of viewing hours per week is 11.2 hours.

In that amount of time, you could get a part time job or do countless other things. You might even have time to count my freckles, like one of my friends tried once.

Other than just wasting time, one of the main problems with the amount of TV we watch is that of obesity. If you're watching TV, you're probably sitting around, not burning any calories and maybe even consuming quite a few.

U.S. News reports on a 26-year study in New Zealand in which it was found that 26-year-olds who had watched a lot of TV as children were more likely to be overweight, smoke, and have high cholesterol.

Just think how much better shape we would all be in if we devoted a fraction of the time most of us spend watching TV to working out instead.

In fact, ABS-CBNnews.com quotes Dr. William Dietz of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention as saying, "TV reduction appears to be the most effective measure in reducing weight gain."

When my family lived in Nigeria when I was two, my dad hooked up our small generator to a stationary bicycle to turn human power into electric power. Stories vary at this point, but it seems that the generator was then hooked up to our TV.

We would all be a lot healthier if our TVs were bicycle-powered.

Additionally, the May 27 edition of "Pediatric Notes" reports that a study at the University of Washington has linked TV watching to "attentional problems" in children; the study wasn't conclusive but indicates excess TV watching can help lead to attention deficit hyperactivity disorder.

Benjamin Franklin once said, "Dost thou love life? Then do not squander time, for that's the stuff life is made of."

Obviously, we all "squander time," but it seems to me that watching TV news – excluding educational programs – is an extraordinary useless way of doing it.

I'll leave the "Simpsons" watching to others; I'm off to count my freckles.

Teachers deserve larger salaries for tough, thankless work

ABBY HILES

If you want to know how well teachers get paid, just ask their children.

My entire life I have been the daughter of two public school teachers, and I can tell you, we weren't rolling in the dough. Not that we were destitute or anything, but it's not like my parents were driving a Lexus around town or wintering in the Bahamas.

No, public school teachers get paid very little, compared to what is expected of them.

They are expected to be highly educated, to teach our disenfranchised youth day in and day out, and then at the end of the month take home a miniscule salary that is roughly on par with that of an entry level assistant in a major corporation.

With all of that to look forward to, is it really that big of a stretch to hear that the United States. is suffering from a teacher shortage?

In urban and rural schools alike, teachers are needed to fill the high-need subject areas such as special education, math and science, and there are too few teachers of color. More than 1 million veteran teachers are nearing retirement, and the shortage has no end in sight.

Even though the number of teacher-certified college graduates is low, that isn't the real problem of the national shortage. According to the National Education Association (NEA), "some 20 percent of all new hires leave the classroom within three years."

Three years. That's it. Freshly out of student teaching, working through their block classes, and at least four years of undergraduate work, new teachers are unable to handle the stress and strain that come with teaching in a public school.

There is nothing to keep these new teachers from leaving. Teachers' unions do little for salary hikes, there is rarely compensation for further education, and with the drop in state money going to each school, hiring freezes are occurring all over the nation.

It's a catch-22 of sorts. Teachers are needed across the country, but districts can't afford to pay for them. And even if they can afford it, a teacher's salary can never reach that of one in the business world.

The salary schedule at most districts is based on years of experience and education. So while a teacher's salary might jump up every passing year, unless they continue to take classes and receive post-graduate degrees, their salary has little chance of ever rising past a certain plateau.

You don't see these kinds of salary stipulations placed on the salaries in the entertainment industry, professional sports, or office conglomerates. Whether J. Lo has a college degree matters little when she gets $5 million for her next movie deal. And Tiger Woods never needed his master's degree to sign his $40 million dollar contract with Nike.

And yet a high school special education teacher, making roughly $38,000 a year, has to continually take summer classes so that he can get a raise in the next year and try to put some money away for his kids' college.

It isn't right.

We need to take teaching back to being a profession of prestige and honor. Teachers should be the ones making six figures a year and building the big houses on Country Club Drive. They are the ones in the classroom helping millions find their true potential and helping them grow.

Teaching should be a sought-after position that is highly respected and well paid.

And I'm not just saying that because I'm a teacher's kid, although it would be pretty cool to see my dad roll up to the golf course in a new Mercedes.

I love you, Taco Bell guy.

It's raining so hard that everything in my backpack is ruined, including my collection of guinea pig fallopian tubes.

To the guy that just totally splashed that girl with your car: right when you stopped, I just keyed your car.

I think I speak for my entire Fundamentals of Ecology class when I say, "For the love of God, please bring our old teacher back."

To lame guys who go around purposely splashing people with water: Grow up, it's not high school anymore.

Whoever chooses what quotes go in the Fourum must be a freshman, and they must be getting the freshman 15 because they haven't published my quote yet.

So I'd like to join the paintball club, but the Collegian forgot to tell me how I could contact anybody in the club.

Some lady from the judicial system told my junior seminar class that she gets topless a lot. Way to represent.

I believe in a thing called leather pants. Go K-State Idol.

What am I supposed to think when my teacher talks about cleaning sand out of her vagina?

Ten-thousand spaces. Fourteen-thousand permits. Where does that math add up?

For the love of God, please put a left turn light at Claflin and Denison.

You know what? I always thought dogs laid eggs, and I learned something.

To the big idiot who tattle-tailed on us yesterday in the Willie Walk line for cutting: Thanks for taking it back to second grade.

Hey, frat boy: Either pull down the shirt, or pull up the jeans. Just do something to cover up your boxers.

Hey, U2: I just wanted to apologize for making your album available online before the release date, but you guys play stupid Irish pop crap, and uh, actually I'm not sorry.

I'd like to thank Rusty's for encouraging their patrons not to breathe with their condom awareness thing.

I have an exam at 12:30, haven't started studying, and I am thinking about my neighbor's wife. Is that normal?

My roommate is the Fourum queen, and all she really wants to be is a Classy Cat.

Hey, what happened to all that toilet paper in the library bathroom? Good thing there's a lot of newspapers on the floor.

The horrible duet singing in Aggieville seems to have forgotten that we're in Manhattan and not Lawrence.

Nothing like seeing '16 Americans Dead In Iraq' on the front page of the Collegian. Huh, that's weird, and we re-elected who?

Hey, you guys remember when they told us that my $20 supported terrorism? Well, I think my $20 helped feed some Mexican family for the day. Thanks a lot.

I don't care what any of you say, I've seen the Pi Phis, and they really are gorgeous.

I just took a drag of my cigarette, and damn, it tasted good.

I would like to thank the university for allowing Kedzie Hall to purchase new lights. We can now see the sagging floors and the water-damaged ceilings much better. Thank you.

Parking nazis anal-retentive? Nah, they just gave me an $18 ticket for being parked on the line.

Swinging adds spice to sex life

This past Sunday, I was up late doing homework and flipping through the TV channels for something to watch. I stopped on VH1, figuring they would have some late night videos.

LACEY STORER

What I got was way more interesting.

It was a documentary entitled "VH1 News Presents: The Secret Life of Swingers." And no, these weren't swing dancers they were talking about.

According to the documentary, the swinging lifestyle of partner swapping, popular in the '60s and '70s, has made a comeback. After dying out in the '80s due to the threat of AIDS and other STDs, swinging is back in, ahem, full swing.

The show followed three couples and their forays into the world of swinging. There were the seasoned pros, who regularly attended swinger parties and clubs. There was the small town couple who met people on the Internet to swing with. And there was the novice couple, who had never tried swinging and was attending their first swinger party.

As I watched these people hook up with total strangers with their partner doing the same right next to them, all I could think was "Why?"

Isn't one of the perks of having a serious significant other is that you don't have to worry about them having sex with other people? And that you don't have to worry about where you're going to get your next fix of action?

Apparently, being able to have sex with anyone they wanted to is one of the perks in these relationships. They talked about how much their relationships have grown since they tried swinging, because there wasn't the frustration of having to sleep with only one person. I guess it's kind of like having their cake and eating it, too.

Swinging is somewhat of a bonding experience for them, bringing them closer together over the fact that they're comfortable enough with their partners to tell them, "Hey, I want to do that hot person over there."

Again, the question that ran through my head was, "Why?" If you want to bond with your partner, couldn't you just take up a new hobby together, or go on a vacation? Is there really the need for introducing another naked couple into the mix?

But again, that's just me. For some couples, this is just what they need to enhance their relationship. I guess they're on a more enlightened level of sexual freedom than most. But hey, whatever floats your boat. If getting it on with another couple is what keeps your relationship hot, then have at it.

One thing I could relate to in the documentary was the jealousy factor, which came into play with the new couple. The woman was really into going to the swinging party and flirting with new people. Before they had even left the apartment, the guy admitted he was worried about losing her, and was clearly not having fun watching his girlfriend hit on other guys. After they left the party, without doing any

Paul, played by Richard Redding, and Roz, played by Dianne Paukstelis, work through a scene during the final dress rehearsal for Moon Over Buffalo during Thursday evening at the Manhattan Arts Center.

A comedic, full 'Moon'

By Paul Suter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"Moon Over Buffalo" isn't a play about buffaloes, nor the moon.

But the Manhattan Arts Center production of the play won't disappoint fans, Producer Mary Tolar said.

"Moon Over Buffalo," a play created by Ken Ludwig that first starred Carol Burnett, is about an aging stage husband and wife acting team trying to make it big in the movie business. The couple performs on consecutive nights in Buffalo, N.Y., at two different plays, but problems arise when a big-time Hollywood director is in town to see them perform.

"The play is a very fast-paced physical comedy," Tolar said. "The humor is well balanced between the acting and the script."

While featuring an eclectic array of staging action, such as a sword fight and a case of mistaken identity, "Moon Over Buffalo" gives the audience a chance to see the inside scoop of an acting stage, but in the form of comedy.

"It's more of a flat-out, laugh-out-loud type of comedy where the whole community of Manhattan can enjoy," Tolar said.

It is the MAC's second show of the theater season. The play can be seen at 8 tonight, Saturday and Sunday, and at 8 p.m. Nov. 18-21, along with a 2 p.m. matinee Sundays.

Dwight Tolar, an instructor in the Department of Speech Communication, Theater and Dance, is directing his first play.

"Being such a fast-paced play, blocking is rather demanding and challenging to get things to make sense," Dwight said. "There is a big chase scene where people are going in and out of doors to attempt to find the lead male role."

Graduate student's novel to be released next month

By Matt Groneman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One won't have to wait until August to read the latest novel written by a K-State student.

"Until August," the first novel by Adam Catlin, graduate student in English, will be released by Publish America next month.

Catlin said the novel is a coming-of-age story.

He said Frank Archer, the novel's protagonist, finds direction in his life after entering into a relationship with a girl named Annie Foster.

The novel begins with Archer working for the Kansas State Historical Society, Catlin said. While researching a historical location, he flashes back to five years earlier when he was in college with an undecided major.

Once he gets into a relationship with Foster, his life changes.

Despite the relationship, Catlin insists the book is not a romance novel.

"I prefer to classify it as a romantic drama with overtones of 'A Beautiful Mind,'" Catlin said. "While some find it difficult to get published, the whole thing was very easy. I got extremely lucky."

Catlin described the novel as "the easiest writing experience I've ever had."

Catlin said screenplays are his strongest suit.

"One of my screenplays won best original screenplay from Southwestern College in 2000," he said.

Bodyguard says Minnelli made him have sex

Liza Minnelli's bodyguard claims the Oscar-winning actress made him have sex with her in order to keep his job, according to recently unsealed court documents.

The allegations are detailed in M'Hammed Soumayah's $100 million lawsuit against the entertainer. In a court document, one of her lawyers said Soumayah had "commenced this action in a quick sand of untruths and mistreatments" and accused him of a "shakedown" of her client.

In the lawsuit, Soumayah, 56, accused Minnelli of assault and battery, breach of contract, withholding payment for services rendered and sexual harassment.

Also Tuesday, Minnelli, 58, sued Soumayah for $250,000, alleging breach of contract and breach of fiduciary duty. The two-page filing contained no details.

Moore set to shoot 'Fahrenheit' sequel

Michael Moore plans a follow-up to "Fahrenheit 9/11," his hit documentary that assails President Bush over the handling of the Sept. 11 attacks and the war on terrorism.

Moore told Daily Variety that he and Harvey Weinstein, the Miramax boss who produced the film, hope to have "Fahrenheit 9/11 1/2" ready in two to three years.

"Fifty-one percent of the American people lacked information (in this election) and we want to educate and enlighten them," Moore was quoted in Thursday's edition of Variety. "They weren't told the truth. We're communicators and it's up to us to start doing it now."

After last week's come-from-behind-win over Missouri, look for Allen Webb to get a lot of time at the quarterback spot, possibly start over Dylan Meier. Webb completed six passes for 111 yards and two touchdowns and rushed for 52 yards in the win over the Tigers.

A split decision at quarterback spot

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Last Saturday, in K-State's come-from-behind win over Missouri, the Wildcats used an unintentional two-quarterback system for the seventh time this season. Now, questions linger about who will start against Colorado, and the unintentional could become the norm for the rest of the season.

In the last three games, the sophomore duo of Dylan Meier and Allen Webb have combined to complete 57 percent of their passes with only one interception, averaging 99.3 yards per game on the ground with five touchdowns.

Although the numbers might show the two are a solid tandem, it has been a different story on the field.

In the last three games, Meier has struggled with injuries and lost his only complete game – against Texas Tech – in that stretch. Meanwhile, Webb has excelled, leading K-State to its first Big 12 Conference win over Nebraska on Oct. 23. He also erased a 21-7 deficit against Missouri to pull out the win and keep the Wildcats alive in the North Division race.

No matter who the starter is against the Buffaloes, Coach Bill Snyder said the Wildcat offense will not be affected, and both will prepare as if they are the starter.

"I don't really see it as changing the dynamics for what we do," Snyder said. "I think that maybe it changes the dynamics for them (opposing defenses), but for us it is business as usual."

On the season, Meier has thrown for 1,348 yards and eight touchdowns, completing 117 passes on 202 attempts. However, Meier said the season has not gone as planned.

"I'm just frustrated right now," Meier said. "I just want to get back physically, but the time isn't there for me to be physically able."

Junior tackle Jeromey Clary said when Meier is in the ball game, the offensive line has a responsibility to keep him healthy.

"I think there is more responsibility in that he's hurt, and he is not going to be able to take one more shot," Clary said. "But Dylan is tough, and he is going to get right back up."

In eight games, Webb has completed 31 passes on 60 attempts for 339 yards and three touchdowns.

Clary said Webb is gaining more confidence with each game, despite his early season struggles.

"I think he is a lot more comfortable," Clary said. "I knew he was a good athlete, but he was thinking too much. In this game, you can't think too much – you just have to play."

With two games left in the regular season and the Wildcats' Big 12 North Division title hopes and bowl aspirations on the line, Snyder's decisions regarding the quarterbacks could dictate how K-State ends the 2004 season.

Snyder said he and the team have confidence in both Webb and Meier.

"They (the players) see these young guys practice every day, they know exactly what they are capable of and what they are not capable of, and it would be my guess that they feel really good about both of them," Snyder said.

GAMETIME

Edge		Edge
	OFFENSE
	The Buffaloes lack a strong run game and feature a quarterback who has twice as many interceptions as touchdown passes. Running back Bobby Purify leads the Buffs with 80.6 yards on the ground per game. Quarterback Joel Klatt completes 60.1 percent of his passes, but he's had 12 completions caught by the other team.	✓ We don't know who the starting quarterback will be on Saturday. What we do know is that the offense can be productive with either option. Dylan Meier is slated to start, but Allen Webb will be ready to go as well. Webb has been solid in his last two outings against Nebraska and Missouri in the place of Meier.
	DEFENSE
	The Buffaloes have 25 sacks as a team, led by defensive tackle Matt McChesney's five. Linebacker Brian Iwuh is the leading tackler, with 68 tackles, and cornerback Lorenzo Sims anchors the secondary with three interceptions and nine passes broken up. Colorado does yield 177.9 yards rushing per game and 252.8 yards in the air.	✓ Though the defense yielded plenty of yards to Missouri last week, it also generated several turnovers and a touchdown. Linebacker Brandon Archer, whose interception return for a touchdown clinched Saturday's game, leads the Wildcats in tackles. The defense has 13 sacks on the season, and is now even in turnover margin on the year.
	SPECIAL TEAMS
✓	Punter John Torp averages 42.2 yards per attempt, and kicker Mason Crosby is 13-17 on field goals and 21-23 on extra-point attempts. Returner Stephone Robinson averages nine yards per punt return and had a 48-yard touchdown return last week in the Buffs' win over Kansas.	Lou Groza Award semi-finalist senior kicker Joe Rheem is still perfect on extra-point attempts and 11-13 on field goals. The punting was solid against Missouri, as freshman Tim Reyer and junior Jesse Martinez combined to average 44.8 yards per attempt on eight kicks.

Postseason hopes still alive

A loss will eliminate K-State from a bowl game

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's another weekend and another must-win for the K-State Wildcats.

K-State (4-5, 2-4) battles Colorado (5-4, 2-4) at 1:30 p.m. Saturday in Boulder, Colo., in a game critical for both teams' Big 12 North Division title aspirations.

Win, and the Wildcats are still alive for a bowl game and the division title. Lose, and it will be the first time since 1992 that K-State fails to play in the postseason.

The Wildcats hope to build off last Saturday's 35-24 win in Missouri, which saw the team rally from a 21-7 halftime deficit.

Senior cornerback David Rose said the Wildcats' second-half performance against the Tigers showed what the team can do when everything falls into place.

"We've been through it all this season, nothing new is going to happen to us. We just need to go out and execute," Rose said. "You saw in the second half what we can do when we play together as a team, with special teams, defense and offense."

The Wildcats might not be able to afford the slow start they had against Missouri if they want to leave Boulder with a win. Last Saturday was the first time this season in which K-State failed to score on its opening offensive drive but was still able to come away victorious.

"I worry about how we start and how we play for 60 minutes every single week. This past week was no exception to that," Coach Bill Snyder said.

Offensively, an air of uncertainty surrounds the Wildcats, as Snyder has not made clear which sophomore quarterback – Allen Webb or Dylan Meier – will start Saturday.

Whoever gets the start will be facing a Colorado defense that has struggled for most of the season. The Buffaloes are last in the conference and No. 99 in the country in total defense, giving up 430.7 yards per game.

On the flip side, the K-State offense has been gaining steam as of late. The Wildcats have averaged more than 400 yards of total offense in their last three games, while senior running back Darren Sproles has led a rushing attack that has gone for an average of 229 yards in those games.

Statistically, the Colorado offense has not been much better than the defense. Despite completing 60 percent of his passes, Colorado quarterback Joel Klatt has thrown 12 interceptions to just six touchdowns.

"We've been through it all this season; nothing new is going to happen to us. We just need to go out and execute."

David Rose
DEFENSIVE BACK

However, Snyder said Klatt still presents a viable threat to the K-State defense.

"They've said that they've had some concerns about the touchdown/interception ratio," Snyder said. "You go back and look at some of those tipped passes, and you probably say that it's not the quarterback that caused the problem. He's knowledgeable, understands the offense, and is a pretty accurate thrower."

If they defeat the Buffaloes on Saturday, not only would the Cats be one step closer to a return trip to the Big 12 Championship Game, but the team will have won two games in a row for the first time this season.

"Right now, all our focus is about winning at Colorado. Nothing else matters other than that," senior wide receiver Antoine Polite said.

Special teams play improves

By Anthony Mendoza
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Many things have not gone the way they were supposed to for K-State this season, and the play of the special teams unit has not been an exception.

While the unit struggled all season, it broke out in last Saturday's win at Missouri with its best overall performance.

Punters Tim Reyer and Jesse Martinez combined to average a season-best 44.8 yards on eight punts, and sophomore wide receiver Yamon Figurs' 54-yard punt return set up the game-tying touchdown in the fourth quarter.

The Wildcats outgained the Tigers in total special teams yards, 137-40.

"We've come a long way," senior defensive back David Rose said. "We've just been practicing it so much. Coach Snyder has been putting extra emphasis on it in practice everyday. It's still not where it needs to be, but we've been working at it, and we've been getting progressively better."

K-State had only averaged 31.6 yards per punt prior to the Missouri game and were ranked 105th in the nation. They now are ranked 86th.

Coach Bill Snyder said the special teams have improved, but they are not where they should be at this point of the season.

"I think we made some headway, and I'm pleased about that," Snyder said. "I don't think it was perfect by any stretch of the imagination, but I was really pleased with our outside guys on our punt coverage unit."

K-State special teams will have a welcomed challenge to deal with Saturday in Colorado – the altitude.

The thin air has worked for the Buffaloes this year, with both their kicker and punter statistically ranking No.1 overall in the Big 12 Conference.

Punter John Torp is first in the conference and second overall in the nation, averaging 47.1 yards per punt. Place-kicker Mason Crosby leads the conference and is 15th in the nation in field goals made per game, averaging 1.44.

Snyder said the Colorado special teams will pose a problem for K-State, and Wildcat punters will have to make sure they do not out-kick their coverage.

"You have to have major concerns," Snyder said. "One is that their guy can kick it so far down there that it changes the field position. So you have to say if you are returning it, can he outkick his coverage and give you a chance to get some decent returns? As it relates to us, it will be interesting to see how that plays out."

Senior defensive lineman Jermaine Berry said the play of the special teams was the difference in the win at Missouri.

"I think we knew special teams would play a big role in the game, and every game it does – it makes a difference," Berry said. "I think we were just trying to come together and create some big plays on special teams and some of them we did, and it changed the momentum of the game and gave us a chance to come back."

Cross country men, women head to Regionals

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Senior Matthew Chesang runs in the middle of the pack during the Big 12 Championships on Oct. 30. Chesang hopes to qualify for the NCAA Championships after his performance this weekend at the Midwest Regional Championships in Peoria, Ill.

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The season is coming to a close, but the K-State men's and women's cross country teams still have work to do as they head to Peoria, Ill., Saturday for the Midwest Regional Championships.

The top two teams from the regional advance to the NCAA Championships on Nov. 22, in Terre Haute, Ind.

The Wildcats are long-shots to qualify for the national meet as a team, but Coach Michael Smith said he wants his teams to be competitive.

"What we are trying to do is run better than we did a year ago or in years past, both with the men and the women," Smith said. "I think we can do that. I would like for both teams to shoot for top six or seven in the region."

Junior Joe Moore said finishing the year strong could give him a boost into next season.

"In the past, I've had trouble finishing the cross country season out well," Moore said. "If I could end on a good note, that would definitely help out for next season."

Two Wildcat runners have a solid chance at qualifying for the NCAA meet as individuals.

Seniors Mathew Chesang and Trisha Culbertson advanced to the NCAA meet last year, and both have a shot at doing the same this year.

Chesang is coming off a third-place finish at the Big 12 Championships, the highest finish by a Wildcat at the conference meet since Larry Beesley finished second in 1976.

Chesang will again face off against his brother, Benson Chesang of Kansas. Benson finished first at the league meet, five seconds ahead of Mathew.

Smith said if Mathew runs as expected, he should challenge his brother and qualify for the NCAA Championships fairly easily.

"He is getting close," Smith said. "His brother is advancing at the same time Mathew is advancing, so that makes it pretty

Wildcats dominate second half in final exhibition game win

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State almost underestimated its opponent Thursday, as the Wildcats closed out their exhibition season against the Pittsburg State Gorillas at Bramlage Coliseum.

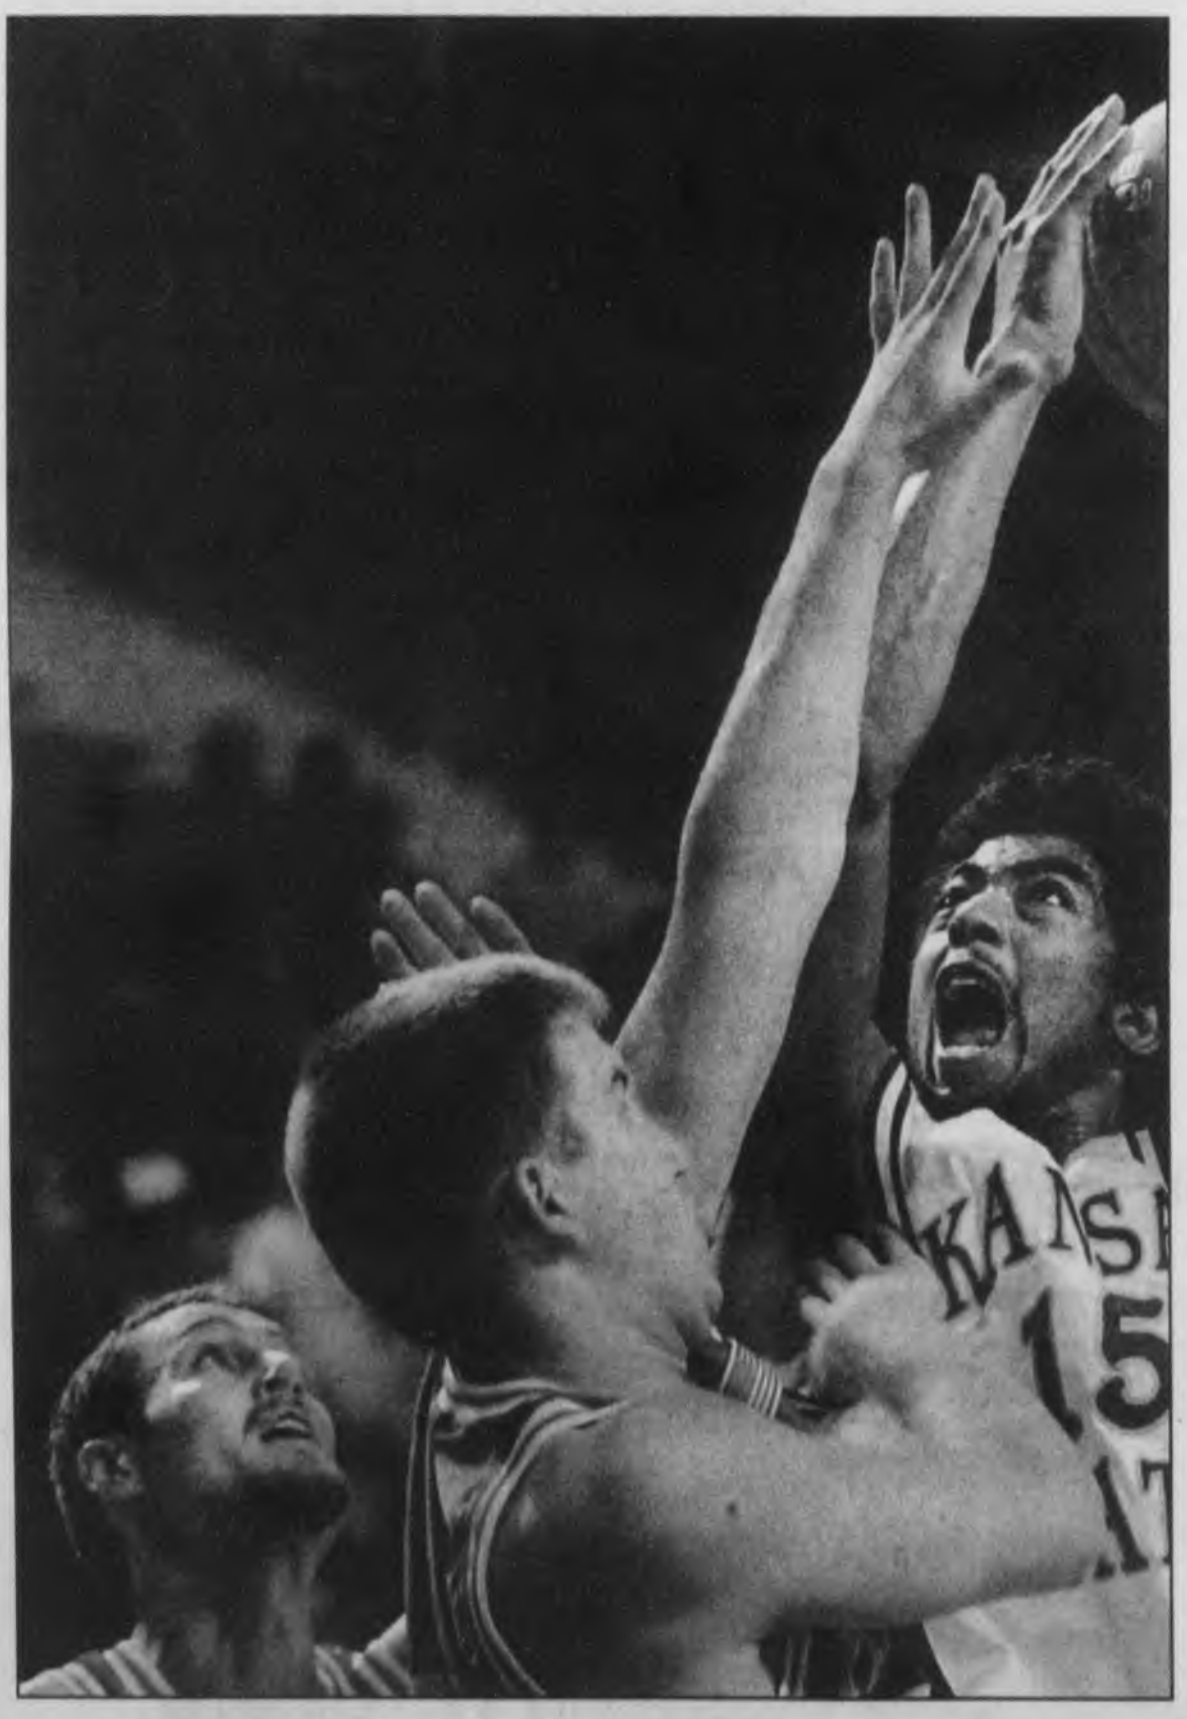
Although the final score was 88-69 in favor of K-State, the Gorillas' stingy defense and perimeter shooting in the first half took the Wildcats by surprise and resulted in only a six-point halftime lead.

"We didn't play hard enough, and we didn't play like we had been working and practicing," Coach Jim Wooldridge said. "They played more aggressively in the first half, and consequently, we had some problems."

The first half started out slowly for both teams, as neither the Wildcats nor Gorillas were able to get into any rhythm on offense. The teams were whistled for a combined six fouls in the first four minutes of the game.

Despite the early troubles, the Gorillas shot eight of 16 from beyond the three-point line in the first half, with junior guard Eddie Jackson leading the way with 16 points.

"I think in the first half we had a little trouble, particularly on the perimeter," junior forward Marques Hayden said. "Their guards were a little quicker in some areas and got the ball up fast."



Senior forward Jeremiah Massey and sophomore transfer guard Fred Peete, who made his first appearance at home in a Wildcat uniform, kept the Wildcats alive by scoring 15 points each in the first half.

Wooldridge said Peete gave the team's offense a lift.

"Had he not got the ball in the basket for us, we would have been behind at halftime," Wooldridge said.

In the second half, the Wildcats came out of the locker room and turned up the defense. K-State held the Gorillas scoreless for the first five minutes and went on an 11-0 run, building a

Wildcats seek continued improvement

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's basketball team will conclude its preseason schedule this 1 p.m. Sunday as they take on Athletes in Action in an exhibition matchup at Bramlage Coliseum.

For the Wildcats, it will be their last opportunity to work on their game-play and strategies before the games start counting.

Coach Deb Patterson said she had not yet implemented the full range of offensive and defensive systems.

"We are probably about one-10th into the depth of our offensive system right now, and maybe two-tenths along defensively," Patterson said.

Preseason All-American Kendra Wecker scored 19 points in the Wildcats' first exhibition game against Emporia State, which K-State won 85-45.

Wecker, along with junior Jessica McFarland and senior Brie Madden, was part of an inside game that scored 50 points inside the paint against the Hornets. Much of the attention this season will be on how the Wildcats can overcome the loss of former All-American Nicole Ohlde, and the inside game again will be a focal point against Athletes in Action.

McFarland, who had six points against Emporia State, said the low post players are making strides.

"I think we're getting comfortable," McFarland said. "It was just the first game, but me and Brie are real comfortable, and Shana (Wheeler) is coming along great."

Twelve of the 13 Wildcats scored in the win over the Hornets, as each Wildcat recorded at least eight minutes.

Patterson said she was happy all her players saw time on the court against Emporia State.

"I thought, by and large, it was a good thing for us to have the opportunity to get everyone on the floor," she said. "It is really special

Volleyball team to face Bears on Saturday in Texas

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The women's volleyball team heads to Waco, Texas, to tangle with the Baylor Bears at 7 p.m. Saturday

No. 20 K-State is coming off a win against Colorado on Wednesday that improved the Wildcats' record to 16-8 overall and 10-5 in the Big 12 Conference. Baylor comes into Saturday at 12-15 overall and 4-12 in the conference after being swept Wednesday at Kansas.

In the teams' previous meeting, the Wildcats tamed the Bears with great team serving, sweeping the match in three games at Ahearn Field House. K-State had 11 service aces as a team, led by freshman libero Angie Lastra's career high of six.

Baylor is led by outside hitter Stella Odion, who averages 3.09 kills per game, middle blocker Nicole LeBlanc, who

Volleyball | Guerre earns academic honors

K-State senior setter Gabby Guerre was honored for her work in the classroom on Thursday, as she was named to the 2004 CoSIDA Academic All-District VII Women's Volleyball Second Team.

Guerre

The Houston, Texas, native carries a 3.567 grade point average in mechanical engineering and is a two-time Academic All-Big 12 selection.

Coach Suzie Fritz said the team was proud of Guerre.

"She works very, very hard at both volleyball and school," Fritz said. "It's not surprising she's so successful, and it's nice to see her be rewarded for her efforts."

A total of 10 Wildcats in the school's history have now earned academic all-district honors.

WCBB | Patterson lands 4 top recruits

Once again, K-State women's basketball coach Deb Patterson has scored home-grown talent on the recruiting trail.

Patterson

Patterson announced the signing of four recruits — three from Kansas — on Thursday.

Marlies Gipson, JoAnn Hamlin and Shalee Lehning were the Kansans who signed their national letters of intent, while Danielle Zanotti of Yukon, Okla., also signed to play for K-State.

A 6-foot forward from McPherson, Gipson is a two-time Street & Smith's High School All-America honorable mention and is No. 31 on the Blue Star Top 100 Seniors Index.

Hamlin is the younger sister of Joy Hamlin of the Wildcat volleyball team. JoAnn, a 6-foot-3 center from Douglass, has twice been selected all-conference and all-state while playing at Winfield High School.

Rounding out the trio of Kansas recruits is Lehning. The 5-foot-9 guard from Sublette heads into her senior year of high school already holding school records in career scoring, rebounding and assists.

Zanotti, a 6-foot-2 forward, is a two-time, first team all-conference selection and conference co-MVP.

MLB | Santana wins AL Cy Young unanimously

As joyous fans celebrated by honking car horns in Caracas, Johan Santana sounded overwhelmed. He became the first Venezuelan to win a Cy Young Award, and not only that, he was a unanimous choice.

Santana

"This is like a dream come true," he said after earning the American League honor Thursday. "I'm a little surprised that I ended up the season where I ended up the season."

The Minnesota Twins' left-hander received all 28 first-place votes in balloting by the Baseball Writers' Association of America.

Santana, who went 20-6 and led the AL with a 2.61 ERA and 265 strikeouts, became the first unanimous Cy Young winner since Arizona's Randy Johnson two years ago and the first in the AL since Boston's Pedro Martinez in 2000. He is the 18th unanimous winner overall, the seventh in the AL.

Curt Schilling, 21-6 with a 3.26 ERA in his first season with the Red Sox, received 27 second-place votes and one third for 82 points. Mariano Rivera of the New York Yankees, who led the major leagues with a career-high 53 saves, received the other second-place vote and 24 thirds for 27 points.

English team to host show

By Kelly Olson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The English equestrian team is back at its home stables this weekend, hosting the K-State Hunt Show on Saturday and Sunday.

Coming off a win at the Northern Illinois Hunt Show on Oct. 23-24, Coach Teresa Slough said she is confident in the team.

"As a team, our hunt seat riders are very competitive within our region," Slough said. "As long as we stay focused and control the things we can control, I see no reason why this should not be a very successful weekend for us."

Senior Captain Christi Conforti said this weekend's show should be especially exciting because of the home-team advantage.

"We did great last show with a lot of strong riders. Our flat work was our strong point last show," Conforti said. "Coach has been preparing us since last show to prepare us for everything."

Equestrian is the newest sport on campus, and is in its fifth year of existence as a varsity sport.

As the baby of athletics on campus, those who did not grow up in an atmosphere around horses probably do not know a great deal about the sport.

Slough said equestrian is very different from other sports within the athletic department at K-State.

"When you think about it, it is amazing that a 120-pound person can convince a 1,200 pound horse that it needs to go jump six fences that are three feet tall," she said.

"The horse is an athlete itself. To watch a human and equine athletes form partnerships to achieve a goal is really amazing."

averages 3.01 kills per game and setter Emily Huston, who has 11.06 assists per game.

Coach Suzie Fritz said although K-State handled Baylor the first time around, the Bears can present some challenges – especially on the road.

"Nicole LeBlanc can cause a lot of problems," Fritz said. "They're a pretty good volleyball team. Last year we went down there and took a loss to them early. Hopefully, there are enough people on our team from a year ago that remember that loss and that we can't overlook a team like Baylor that is very physical and will play well in their own environment."

Fritz said the Cats are continuing to make changes and are developing as a team – something she said was evident Wednesday against Colorado.

"We've made some personnel changes, and we're finding the right mix of people and putting them in position to do what they do best," she said. "I like the lineup we had the other night and think they have the potential to do some special things."

CROSS COUNTRY | Tough road for Culbertson

tough. I would expect he would be close to his brother. We should see (Mathew) at the NCAA meet, and then we will talk about him being an All-American and those kinds of things."

Meanwhile, the path to the NCAA meet could be a little tougher for Culbertson.

She finished 16th at the league meet for the second year in a row and has been the Wildcats' top finisher in all five meets this season.

However, the regional meet is deeper than it was last year when Culbertson was selected as an at-large qualifier for the NCAA Championships, Smith said.

Smith said for Culbertson to earn a trip to Terre Haute, she would have to run better than she has all year.

"Trisha will be on the bubble," Smith said.

"She will have to run the race of her life to have a chance to do it. She will have to be really close to the top 10 in order to make it, and that will be tough."

15-point lead.

Hayden said the game plan was the same coming out of halftime, but it was just a matter of executing.

"It wasn't necessarily adjustments, it was turning up the tempo on defense," Hayden said.

"We were just being lackadaisical and playing off the ball instead of getting into them."

The K-State defense held the Gorillas to just 38.5 percent shooting in the second half and held Pittsburg State in check from beyond the arc.

In his debut, Peete led all scorers with 20 points, shooting eight of 14 from the floor.

Peete said he was happy to play again after missing the Wildcats' last exhibition game.

"It feels good because I couldn't get out there and play with my team and contribute," Peete said.

Three other Wildcats scored in double figures, with Massey finishing with 17 points, Hayden with 12 and freshman guard Clent Stewart ending up with 11 points. Hayden also grabbed 12 rebounds against the Gorillas.

K-State opens its regular season 7 p.m. Nov. 19 against the North Dakota State Bison in Manhattan.

Peete said he and his teammates are ready to begin the regular season after playing six exhibition games.

"I feel like the team is more cohesive, so we feel very excited to get the season started," he said.

when you can do that with your basketball team."

The three Wildcat freshmen all chipped in against Emporia State. Wheeler had six points, and Kimberly Dietz and Carolyn McCollough each had four. All three also saw extended periods of play against the Hornets, with the same expected on Sunday in order to get the freshmen as much game experience as possible.

McCollough said she enjoyed her first game as a Wildcat, but she hopes to keep improving.

"It was so much fun," McCollough said. "To hear the crowd cheer, that is something you dream about when you are a little kid. There is always things to improve on, but I can watch the upperclassmen and really learn a lot from them so that when I get out there, I hopefully will not make the same mistakes."

USD 383 earns high marks in reports

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Recent state education reports noted Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 achieved high marks in academics for the 2003-04 school term.

The school district has been working hard on reaching these higher ratings, Roger Brannan, school board member, said.

With new education projects, classrooms are becoming more unified, and overall, the districts standards are increasing, Brannan said.

"This is my sixth year working on the board, and I had been long involved with the district as a teacher," he said. "We are focusing more on solid communication across the board."

Projects such as Job Alike is an educational approach for communication between teachers throughout the district.

"In the past, we've had schools work on individual projects and working on their own priorities," he said. "But with the No Child Left Behind Act, we made sure all of our teachers are covering the same things."

Randy Martin, school board member, said he also believes communication is key when handling new obstacles and laws.

"The concept of No Child Left Behind and standardized testing is still being figured out, so part of our communication is sharing and being aware with what to do or not to do with tests."

This past year, the school district has made efforts to prepare students for the tests they use to determine classroom achievement.

"Our schools advertised the examinations, encouraging students to study hard, get a good night's sleep, and have a hearty breakfast in the morning," Martin said. "They even fed students snacks throughout the day, making sure their hunger wouldn't distract them from the exams."

Students who fell below the academic standard included minority and economically disadvantaged students.

Minority students make up 21.8 percent of the district, and economically disadvantaged students make up 30.04 percent of the district.

"While we have good results, we have incentive to help the kids who have fallen between the cracks," Brannan said.

The district is trying to increase paraprofessionals in the classrooms, study groups for those who are behind and after-school programs that focus on giving extra educational attention to students who need it.

As the school district focuses on those students who are falling behind, they also are focusing on other important issues at hand.

"We may have high scores now, but the financial situation has affected us, and it could change things by next year," Brannan said. "Money really matters to the school."

Martin said school enrollment also is a problem.

"The funding decline is caused by fewer students, and we are reimbursed per student," Martin said.

The list of challenges goes on.

"With students moving toward home-schooling and other alternative education, our district gets cut," Brannan said. "It should be interesting to see what happens to the district in the future."

Drew Rose | COLLEGIAN

Jack Dayton, 9, waits with his mother, Angela Hubler, as traffic goes by at the corner of Poyntz Avenue and 15th Street. Jack has to walk further to school, now that he has to go to a different one.

SCHOOL CLOSING | Younger students forced to change schools after closures by Manhattan-Ogden board

the school at the end of the 2004-05 school year. However their plans changed when they heard of the estimated 3,400 soldiers who are expected to start arriving in Fort Riley in January. The members discussed a possibility of rescinding the vote to close Theodore Roosevelt if enrollment numbers increased.

Angela Hubler, Jack's mother, said changing from Eugene Field to Theodore Roosevelt was a hard move. Both of her sons had to make that transition. However, her older son, Neil Dayton, is now in middle school, so he won't have to face the same changes as Jack.

"We all cried the last day of school," she said.

Jack said he hated changing schools before, and he doesn't want to do it again.

"The first time we changed schools I felt like I don't want to do this because I don't know people, and I would have to meet new teachers and learn where things are," he said.

Hubler said changing schools can be really hard on children.

"A lot of kids are going to be disrupted by this," she said.

Jack said he acted differently at his new school.

"When I moved to Theodore Roosevelt I felt like I didn't want to stand out," she said.

Now, Jack isn't afraid to be unique. In his school photo this year he proudly showed off his current hairstyle, a mohawk.

"The school board thinks about education in a technical kind of way. They don't think about the community. The idea of closing schools in the older part of the city and discouraging people to live there is not a smart thing for the city."

Tim Dayton
MANHATTAN RESIDENT

Although he doesn't want to go to a new school, Jack said it won't be as bad as the first time he changed schools.

"It wouldn't be as big of a thing because I haven't liked Theodore Roosevelt as much as I liked Eugene Field," he said.

Walt Pesaresi, school board president, said it can be hard on children when they change schools.

"I changed schools in Manhattan elementary schools twice myself as a kid," he said. "I understand it's tough making new friends."

However, Pesaresi said it is important to look at the positive side of things.

"Change is difficult but there are a lot of positives that grow out of meeting new friends," he said.

When Jack changed schools the first time he said that he was lucky, because most of his friends were moved to Theodore Roosevelt with him. However, that might not be the case this time.

"I'm kind of freaked out because I really like Theodore Roosevelt," he said.

After Eugene Field closed, the family moved to a new house that was bigger and closer to the new school, Theodore Roosevelt.

Jack's father, Tim Dayton, associate professor of English, said he and his wife have thought about moving again, this time outside of Manhattan. However, he said it's complicated because they are both faculty members at K-State.

"You can't get a job in the space of a few months or even a year," he said.

The Manhattan community is what attracts people to work at K-State, Tim said.

"The school board thinks about education in a technical kind of way," he said. "They don't think about the community. The idea of closing schools in the older part of the city and discouraging people to live there is not a smart thing to do for the city."

CUTS | Board considers dropping music, art, Spanish

move that are tenured or they retire, we have new teachers that we keep on," he said.

Board Member Randy Martin said he does not foresee teachers being cut.

"We have no intention of changing the pupil-to-teacher ratio, and we are going to have the same amount of students as last year," he said. "It won't be a solution at this point to increase class sizes and cut teachers."

Martin said the only way teachers would be cut from the budget is through attrition.

"So many teachers move or relocate or retire, so you just hire fewer teachers in the following year," he said.

Tim Dayton, who has two children in the school district, said he doesn't think the school board should cut teachers or make pay cuts.

"They can afford to make up the shortfall," he said. "They don't have to have pay cuts."

Dayton said he thinks the board should look at other ways to make up for the deficit.

Some of the options the board has considered include cutting elementary music, art or Spanish. The district's Pay to Play program may also be increased, and there is a possibility of changing middle school sports into intramurals.

Another option involves cooperating with the city of Manhattan for a quarter cent sales tax increase that would go to the district; however, nothing has been proposed.

Dayton said he thinks Pay to Play should be changed.

"I think that many people in this town can afford to pay for activities," he said. "Those that are on free or reduced lunches will still get to participate in the sport for lower or no cost."

The school board has also considered using the district's contingency fund, which is almost $1 million.

Martin said this fund is a reserve that the district has in case of an emergency.

"We already lowered it this year," he said. "Whether we can go further without any risk, we have to look closer at that."

PARENTS | Local districts examine options for budget, tax levies in face of excessive money shortages paid more per pupil than larger districts because the smaller districts are less efficient to operate.

This discrepancy has contributed to the legal battles going on in Kansas courts over public education funding.

This summer, a judge in Topeka ordered all Kansas schools be closed until a fair funding formula is devised. Schools were allowed to open, but the case is still pending.

"If my daughter was sent to Fort Riley, she would be offered nearly twice as much per student for that student," Colburn said.

Colburn said local districts are left to come up with the remaining funds themselves.

"After the state gives us our money, the school board then can levy its own taxes for bonds and interests to pay off buildings," he said.

"We can also levy a local option budget, which allows us to supplement what the state can give us."

Manhattan-Ogden schools are allocated approximately $3,800 per full-time student.

Other Kansas schools are allocated as much $10,100 per full-time student.

"Yet overall, it is unfair for a district our size," he said. "We need buildings, computers and other supplies."

State Representative Sydney Carlin said she thought it was important to hear what the legislature needed to improve for the local community.

"We have a lot of issues that affect students and their education," Carlin said.

Focus and improvement, she said, is more important than closing schools.

"Money is always a complicated issue with education," she said.

"Schools need to be upgraded, not closed down. We need to focus."

NOVEL | Student's fictional tale set in Kansas

"Until August" was adapted from one of Catlin's screenplays.

"It started out as a screenplay, but I'd always heard that most screenplays end up on a stack in somebody's office," Catlin said.

This shouldn't be surprising, as many of Catlin's favorite writers, Larry McMurty ("The Last Picture Show") and Michael Blake ("Dances With Wolves"), have had their novels turned into movies.

"I grew up in small-town Kansas, so they wrote stuff I could relate to," Catlin said. "'Until August' is based in Kansas. All the locations in the book are real. The Winfield Courier is where a lot of it takes places."

Parts of the book take place in Cowley, Butler, Sumner and Chautauqua counties, Catlin said.

Catlin said he enjoyed getting to know the settings for the novel.

One of Catlin's goals is to advertise the novel in all of the locations it took place. He said he hopes to sell it at Waldenbooks and Hastings in Manhattan.

Hannah Glidewell, senior in English literature and creative writing, said she is excited to see the book published.

"He has some really good advice for people who want to get published," she said.

Imad Rahman, assistant professor of English, said it is exciting to be published.

"It's impressive to finish a novel," he said, describing Catlin as "obviously driven, dedicated and committed, which are all qualities that a novelist needs to have."

COLUMN | Appeal of swinging lifestyle mysterious

swinging, the couple broke up.

I somewhat understood what the guy was going through, watching his girlfriend bat her eyelashes and smile seductively at other men. After all, this is behavior most people don't ever want to see their partner exhibiting with another person. And to take things even further, and watch your partner make love to someone the same way they make love to you? I think that would about be the time when I would want to rip someone's genital organs off.

In the end, I guess it depends on how much the couple trusts one another, and how good they are at separating love from sex. As in, "I'm having sex with this person, but I really love you, my partner."

So if your relationship is in a rut, but you don't want to end it, who knows, maybe swinging is just what you need to heat things up again. Just be sure to think about all the consequences before you start. And always, always, always use protection.

ARAFAT | Palestinians mourn loss of former leader held it. Fattouh is to serve for 60 days until elections can take place, though the law may be amended to allow parliament to choose the new president.

Thousands of Palestinians flooded the streets, and even members of the Hamas and Islamic Jihad militant groups, often critical of Arafat, mourned his death.

Safra Hassan gave birth to twin boys in Gaza a few hours after Arafat died and said she was naming them Yasser and Arafat.

"I'm so proud that the name of Yasser Arafat will be in my house every day, just as the name of Yasser Arafat will be in every Palestinian house forever," she said.

Black smoke from burning tires rose across the Gaza Strip and gunmen fired symbolic volleys into the air.

At Arafat's battered Ramallah compound where he will be buried, flags flew at half staff.

U.S. troops occupy entire city of Fallujah

By Jim Krane
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEAR FALLUJAH, Iraq – The U.S. military's ground and air assault of Fallujah has gone quicker than expected, with the entire city occupied after six days of fighting, the Marine commander who planned the offensive said Sunday. The military said 31 Americans have been killed in the siege.

Marine Maj. Gen. Richard Natonski said he and other commanders learned from April's failed three-week Marine assault on Fallujah, which was called off by the Bush administration after a worldwide outcry over civilians deaths.

This time, the military sent in six times as many troops and 20 types of aircraft. Troops also faked attacks before the assault to confuse the enemy.

"Maybe we learned from April," Natonski said. "We learned we can't do it piecemeal. When we go in, we go all the way through. We had the green light this time and we went all the way."

Natonski spoke during a visit to the 1st Cavalry Division's 2nd Brigade, the unit charged with isolating Fallujah under a security cordon.

More than 1,200 insurgents have been killed during the operation, he said.

The offensive has killed at least six Iraqi soldiers, said Lt. Gen. John Sattler, commander of the 1st Marine Expeditionary Force. The number of injured Americans was "up in the high 200s," although some have returned to duty already, Sattler said.

Rebel attacks elsewhere – especially in the northern city of Mosul – have forced the Americans to shift troops away from Fallujah.

Exploiting the redeployment, insurgents stepped up attacks in areas outside Fallujah.

U.S. forces now occupy – but have yet to subdue – the entire city. It still could take several days of fighting to clear the final pockets of resistance, the military said.

Iran agrees to halt uranium program

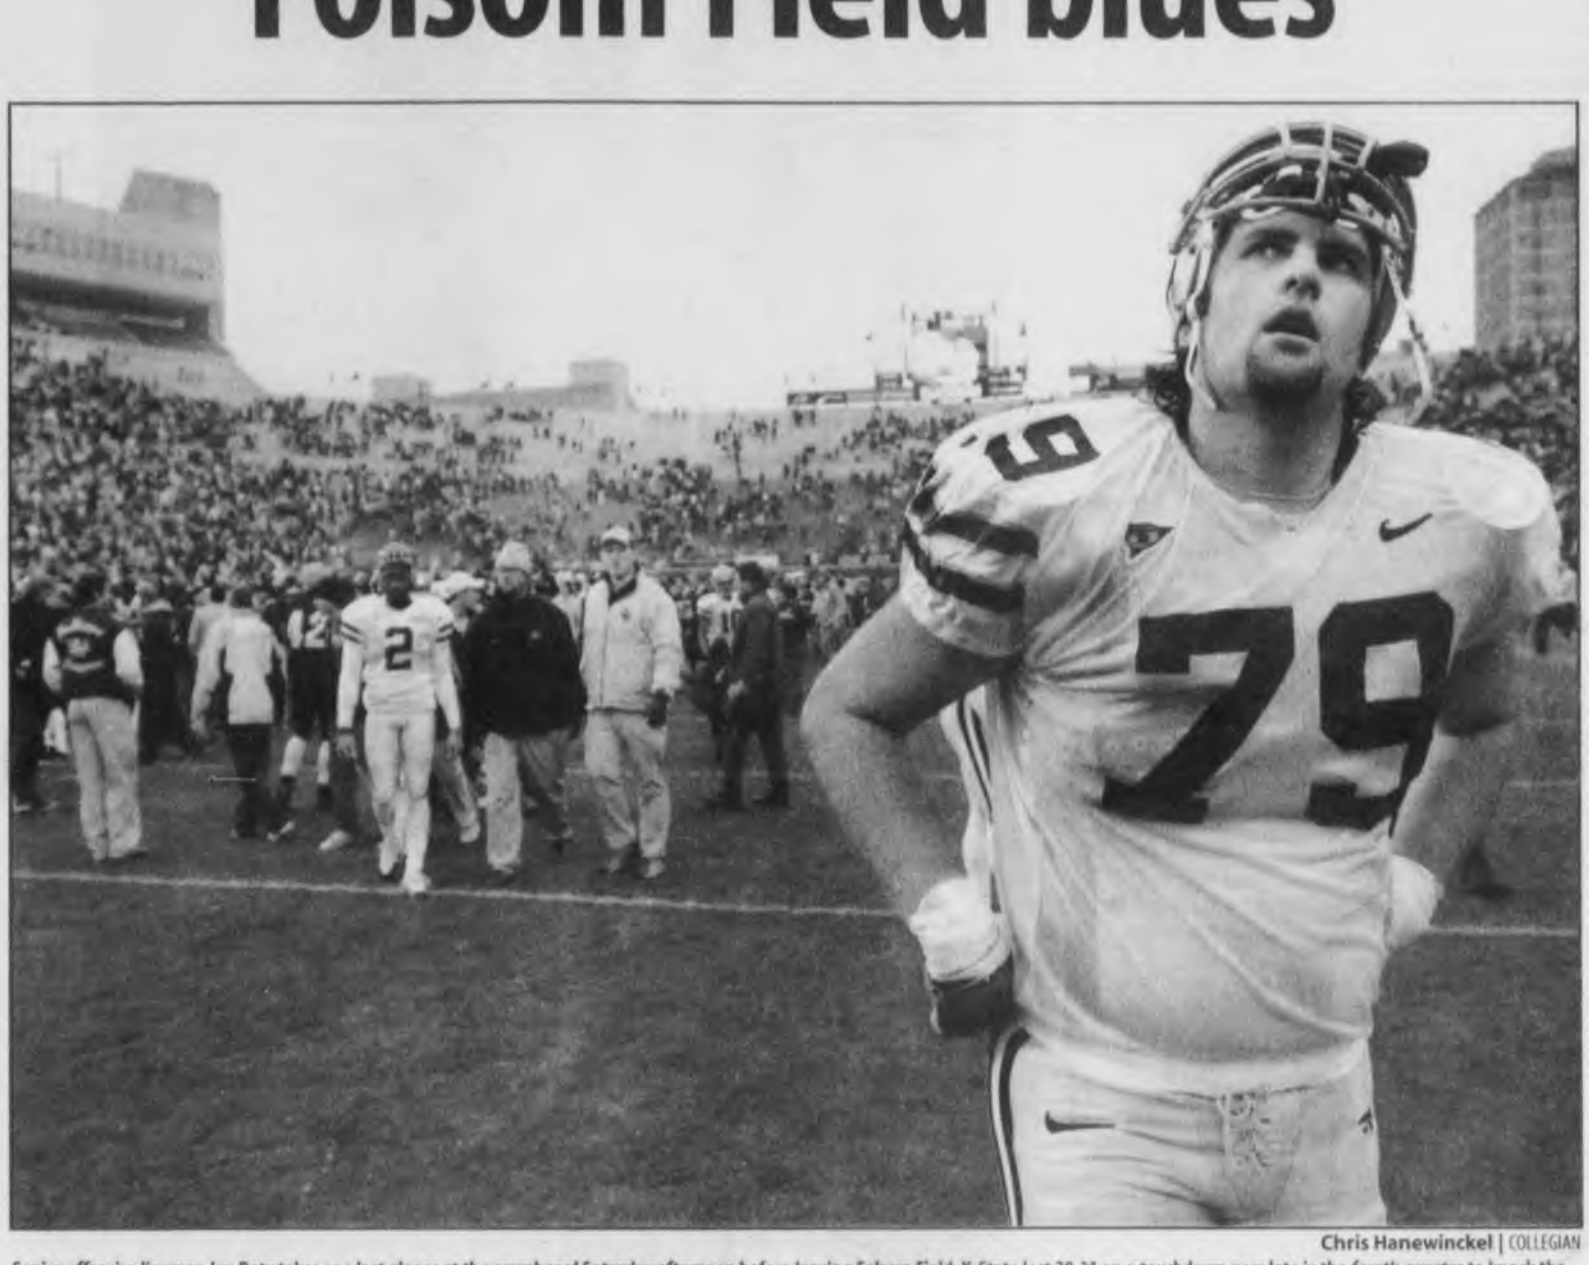
By George Jahn
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

VIENNA, Austria – Iran has agreed to fully suspend uranium enrichment and linked activities that Washington asserts are part of a nuclear weapons program, diplomats said Sunday.

The diplomats told the Associated Press the Iranians apparently dropped earlier demands to modify a tentative deal worked out last weekend with European negotiators and had agreed to the conditions.

"Basically it's a full suspension," one of the diplomats said on condition of anonymity.

However, the diplomat said Iran had not yet fulfilled a key part of the deal – formally informing the U.N. nuclear watchdog agency of its decision and asking for agency inspectors to police adherence to its commitment.



"They have yet to see it in writing," he said, alluding to the International Atomic Energy Agency, which is based in Vienna. "Details are important, so they have to see it."

As negotiators for France, Germany and Britain struggled with their Iranian counterparts to bridge differences over the weekend, the IAEA delayed a report on Iran's nuclear activities scheduled for limited circulation.

A diplomat familiar with the IAEA said the delay was meant to give the two sides a chance to resolve the dispute and allow agency head Mohamed ElBaradei to include an Iranian commitment to full suspension of uranium enrichment and related activities in his report.

That report was now expected to be circulated Monday.

Loss makes K-State ineligible for postseason for first time since 1992

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

BOULDER, Colo. – Words were few but candid, as Wildcat players and coaches walked out of the visitor's locker room at Folsom Field in Boulder, Colo.

The Wildcats' worst fears had come to fruition.

No bowl game. No Big 12 North Division title. These are the realities facing the team after its 38-31 loss to Colorado on Saturday.

Junior tackle Jeromey Clary said he was struggling to process what just happened, but he tried to describe his range of feelings.

"I can't explain how mad I am, how angry I am, how regretful I am, for some of the days I didn't have a good practice," Clary said. "How regretful that I haven't been able to find out what was wrong with the team and been able to turn it around."

K-State (4-6, 2-5) entered the game needing a win to stay alive in the hunt for the division crown and a bowl game berth. Instead, Coach Bill Snyder's football team will not be a part of the postseason for the first time since 1992.

"I'm not sure I can remember what it's all about to not prepare for a bowl game, so that'll certainly be different," Snyder said.

The Wildcats never led on Saturday but came back three times to tie the score – the final tie coming with 36 seconds left on a 17-yard Dylan Meier to Jermaine Moreira touchdown pass.

It looked as if the game would

Lecture on justice honors slain colleague

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan residents discussed bringing about justice for a more peaceful world in memory of Carmin Ross on Sunday morning at the First Congregational Church.

Ross was stabbed to death in Lawrence on Nov. 14, 2003. K-State English professor Thomas Murray, Ross' ex-husband, has been charged with the murder.

The Carmin Ross Memorial Lecture was called "Witnessing Social Justice for a Better World."

There were four speakers at the lecture, and songs about peace were sung at the beginning and the end of the event.

Angela Hayes, who called Ross her best friend, gave opening remarks.

She said Ross, a member of the Manhattan Alliance for Peace and Justice and a member of the church, believed everyone should work to make a better world.

"She would say, 'If you can't see the beauty, create it,'" Hayes said. "I can't see it, but this morning is one step to create it."

Christopher Renner, MAPJ member and the second speaker, said the United States has the power to help other nations and bring justice.

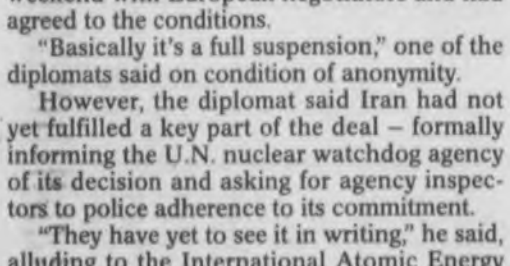
The United States has incredible wealth but doesn't use it help out the world very well, he said.

Renner said justice is a concept pushed among the different religions and that it starts with a small group of people to bring about justice.

"If you look at the gospel and if you look at what Jesus of Nazareth was supposed to have said, at the heart is always the concept of justice," he said.

"I think, in this room, there's a small group of people that can make change happen."

John Exdell, the third speaker, said the war in Iraq is something that needs to stop. One of the reasons being because 1,200 U.S. soldiers and an estimated 100,000 Iraqi civilians have have been killed, he said.



"A strong, American anti-war movement is the answer to bring about social justice," he said.

Exdell said, although he didn't know Ross very well, her loss was dear.

"The rest of us will just have to carry on and make up for her as best

WORLD IN REVIEW: 7 THINGS YOU DIDN'T KNOW 7 DAYS AGO

Fallujah offensive continues

Patrick Baz | AFP/GETTY IMAGES
U.S. marines of the 3/5 Lima company carry out search operations Nov. 13 in the restive city of Fallujah. U.S. troops tightened their grip on Fallujah over the weekend.

Staff and wire reports

U.S.-led forces began an assault on the insurgent stronghold city of Fallujah, Iraq, in an attempt to stabilize the city and reduce the amount of violence there.

Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld said Sunday that the siege was ahead of schedule and U.S. and Iraqi forces were on their way to establishing peace in the city.

CABINET SHUFFLE

Attorney General John Ashcroft and Commerce Secretary Don Evans announced they were resigning from their respective position on President Bush's cabinet.

Ashcroft

Ashcroft was the target of civil libertarians for pushing for stronger powers in the war on terror, which many claim has been an infringement on citizens' rights.

Bush announced White House counsel Alberto Gonzalez as his nominee to replace Ashcroft.

If approved, Gonzalez would be the first Hispanic American attorney general.

PETERSON FOUND GUILTY

A revised version of the original jury in Modesto, Calif., found Scott Peterson guilty of murdering his pregnant wife and their unborn child.

Peterson

Two jurors were dismissed within 24 hours of each other, but the jury spent less than a full day deliberating after those two were replaced.

Peterson will face sentencing next month after the jury decides between jail time or the death penalty.

MAN CONFESSES TO MURDER

A man in Connecticut was arrested and charged for the murder of K-State freshman Ali Kemp.

Kemp was killed in 2002 at a swimming pool in Leawood, Kan.

Benjamin Appleby, 29, confessed to the attempted rape and murder of Kemp after being arrested on charges related to a separate incident.

ARAFAT DIES

Yasser Arafat, leader of the Palestinian Liberation Organization, died at 75.

Arafat

Arafat had slipped into a coma and sent to France for medical treatment. He was buried at his compound in Ramallah.

Mahmoud Abbas, former prime minister, was elected chairman of the PLO hours after Arafat's death.

Rauhi Fattouh was elected president of the Palestinian Authority, a position he will serve in until full elections are held within 60 days.

SINNERS BEWARE

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius announced her Healthy Kansas plan to increase the state's revenue for health care coverage by raising the taxes on cigarettes.

The $50 million plan would raise the tax on a pack of cigarettes from about 70 cents to about $1.40 in order to provide coverage to 70,000 uninsured, low-income Kansans.

PRESIDENT SCHWARZENEGGER?

A California group has launched an advertising campaign to put California Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger in the White House.

Schwarzenegger

Austrian-born Schwarzenegger is not eligible for the presidency because the Constitution requires the president be born in the United States.

The California group is lobbying for a Constitutional amendment to allow a Schwarzenegger presidency.

There are four proposed amendments in Congress.

GAZA CITY, Gaza Strip – Mahmoud Abbas, the temporary successor to Yasser Arafat, escaped unharmed Sunday when militants firing assault rifles burst into a mourning tent for the deceased Palestinian leader, killing two security guards and wounding six other people.

The shooting raised grave concerns about a violent power struggle in the post-Arafat era. Some of the gunmen shouted slogans calling Abbas, a moderate who has spoken out against violence, an agent of the United States.

The bursts of gunfire came just hours after Palestinian officials set Jan. 9 as the date for elections to choose a new leader – the first vote in nine years.

The temporary Palestinian leadership, headed by Abbas, has been trying to send a message of unity since Arafat's death Thursday. Arafat's responsibilities were divided among several leaders, and officials held talks with rival factions in Arafat's Fatah movement and the militant opposition groups Hamas and Islamic Jihad.

However, those rivalries burst into the open minutes after Abbas, the new PLO chief, entered the Gaza City mourning tent, where some 10,000 people – including about 3,000 armed men, most of them police officers – gathered Sunday evening. Abbas, accompanied by Gaza strongman Mohammed Dahlan and surrounded by security guards, shook hands with mourners.

Moments later, a group of at least 20 gunmen barged into the tent shouting, "Abbas and Dahlan are agents for the Americans!"

Gunfire then popped through the tent. It appears most of the shots were fired in the air – the casualty toll likely would have been far higher had the gunmen taken aim at the large crowd.

Abbas' bodyguards hustled him into a corner as frightened mourners scrambled over plastic chairs to flee. Abbas was taken to Palestinian headquarters.

The gunmen reportedly melted into the gigantic crowd and escaped arrest.

Speaking to reporters, Abbas tried to play down the incident.

"While we were receiving condolences, a huge crowd gathered there and then random shooting broke out, but not in my direction," he said.

Abbas said he did not hear any slogans against him and planned to continue talks with rival Palestinian factions. Abbas has tried in the past, as prime minister, to persuade militants to halt attacks on Israel.

However, militants signaled Sunday they were not interested in a cease-fire. In a Gaza City parade, masked militants unveiled a new rocket, which they claimed had an extended range that could reach the southern Israeli city of Ashkelon. The long, green "Al-Yasser 1" rocket, named after Arafat, was shown to a cheering crowd as Palestinian security looked on.

Sunday's shooting raised questions about the ability of the Palestinians to carry out their election peacefully.

Abbas, also known as Abu Mazen, is widely expected to run for Palestinian Authority president.

Cheney leaves hospital after 3 hours of tests

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – Vice President Dick Cheney, back home after a brief hospital visit, has nothing more than a cold and his heart is fine, an adviser said Sunday.

Also doing well is former President Clinton, who had heart surgery in September, a former aide said.

Cheney, who has had four heart attacks, had three hours of tests Saturday after experiencing shortness of breath. They showed no problems with heart – "none whatsoever," said Mary Matalin, a former top White House aide to the 63-year-old vice president.

"He's fine," said Matalin, who acted as his spokeswoman this weekend.

Cheney's most recent heart attack was in November 2000, just before he assumed the vice presidency. He had a pacemaker implanted in his chest in June 2001.

Matalin said Cheney was just following the orders of his "very cautious" doctors who recommended that he have tests at the hospital. Cheney returned Thursday night from a pheasant hunting trip in South Dakota with a cold that left him short of breath.

She said on NBC's "Meet the Press" that Cheney should serve as "an inspiration to people with heart disease that you can lead such a productive and constructive life." She noted the vice president's heavy travel schedule during the presidential campaign, saying Cheney attended more than 280 events.

"It was a remarkable schedule," she said. "The long and the short is, the vice president had a cold like everybody else did on his plane."

President Bush, at services at St. John's Church across the street from the White House, heard the minister offer prayers for Cheney.

As for the 58-year-old Clinton, he has lost some weight since quadruple bypass surgery Sept. 6 and gets tired at night, said Democratic strategist and former top aide James Carville.

But that is to be expected and he pronounced Clinton "ready to go – he's rolling," said Carville, who appeared on NBC with Matalin, his wife.

Clinton sat out most of the presidential race and emerged to campaign for Democrat John Kerry just a week before Election Day.

The former president looked pale and unusually thin.

Clinton's $165 million presidential library is due to open this week. A dedication ceremony, which Bush plans to attend, is planned for Thursday.

RCPD surveys scheduled for delivery

Department to gauge citizens' opinions on effectiveness

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Surveys will be arriving in the mailboxes of K-State students and other area residents over the next week or so.

The source of these surveys is the Riley County Police Department.

RCPD Training officer Lt. Tim Hegarty said the survey is intended to give the department an idea of how effective their service to the community has been.

"We want input on how well we are enforcing laws, how safe people in our neighborhoods feel and any other concerns that they might have," Hegarty said.

"We have an idea on what we're doing, and we think we're doing well, but we want to get the community's feeling."

The research will be done in collaboration with the Department of Sociology, Anthropology and Social Work, Hegarty said, which began with the 2001 survey.

"We knew what we wanted to ask, but how it should be asked to get valid, reliable responses was something we needed to get some extra help on," he said.

Hegarty said volunteers in the department would be conducting a series of follow-up phone calls to ensure the highest possible response, as well as tabulating the results.

He said if the statistics were positive, but perception was the department was performing poorly, than they would know they needed to better inform the public.

"Generally it's pretty positive feedback, but it varies each time we do it," Hegarty said.

"We try to do a little bit better each time out, and we hope this is the best one yet."

He said the addresses the surveys were mailed to were randomly generated, so K-State students will likely be receiving them as well.

"We ask students complete them honestly. This isn't something we have to do; we're choosing to do it," Hegarty said.

"We wouldn't be doing it if we didn't care about the results."

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

International focus on American election inspires

Editor,

I thought leaving the country during the presidential elections was a brilliant move – no yard signs, no campaign calls, no angry conversations with people who will never change their minds.

I chose Granada, Spain, as my refuge, but instead I have found myself discussing politics more than ever and in a language I speak like a 5-year-old.

It all started with an article we had to read in the Sunday magazine that comes with El País, the most widely read newspaper in Spain other than Marca, the sports paper. After interviewing a selection of Americans, the author, John Carlin, wrote "Portrait of a Divided Nation," an article portraying America as a country where Bush supporters are mindless followers, and Kerry supporters are rather aloof, intellectual giants.

Regardless of my personal political opinions, such a simplistic view of American politics was disturbing, especially as the central article of the Sunday special. On the day of the elections, El País ran 17 different articles on the race, including articles almost assuring Kerry's victory and heralding Kerry as "the new JFK."

Such open support for Kerry in a newspaper associated with (but not controlled by) the socialist party was not surprising, but it hardly seemed fair to assume it represented the voice of the people.

After reading the articles in El País and hearing my grammar teacher compare conservative stations like Fox News to Hitler, it was relieving to find that most Spanish people are not quite as extreme. María José Perez, a Spanish teacher at the Center for Modern Languages in Granada, supported Kerry during the election but also quickly pointed out the similarities between the political parties. Conceding that perhaps within the country the differences are more noticeable, Perez said, "Outside, it's more or less the same."

As Juan José Martin Sánchez-Aurioles, a resident of Granada and manager of his family's farm, pointed out in Spanish, "Spanish politicians don't usually present big differences in their campaigns, either."

Sánchez-Aurioles "didn't have a big preference for either" candidate, although both he and Perez did not agree with Bush for his stance on issues like abortion and gay marriage – a controversial topic since gay marriage will be legal in Spain this coming January for the first time and is opposed by the Catholic church here. Most people I talked to leaned toward supporting Kerry, although Bush supporters are rumored to exist.

Finding people willing to discuss American politics was easy. Election year or not, America is a popular topic here – our movies, our music, our clothes, our politics.

When my host family watches the news at lunch, American politics almost always make an appearance. When you meet a Spanish student or a neighbor in the elevator, one of the first questions after your name and hometown is political – did you vote for Bush or Kerry, how do you feel about the war in Iraq, etc.

This awareness of American politics was far more intriguing to me than people's choice for president or their opinions of our political parties. To be honest, I could not have told you when Spain was having their election or who was running, much less what the candidate's views on any issues were.

In the midst of a political atmosphere where a showing of "The O'Reilly Factor" would strike Hitler-like horror in the hearts of viewers, I find myself inspired – inspired to be more aware of American politics, European politics and the wide world outside of the United States.

On Nov. 9, the world celebrated the 15th anniversary of the fall of the Berlin wall. Sadly, the anniversary of a moment that has shaped the history of the world was scarcely noticed.

History, it seems, is irrelevant. Russia and the eastern bloc are, by and large, capitalist democracies, and the few communist holdouts in the world are mostly dirt poor and unimportant. Or, in the case of China, using a new breed of communism that favors NASCAR and "free trade zones."

So history moves on, leaving its lessons in the books to be forgotten.

For instance, we have forgotten the fight against communism was the fight against a belief. The difficulty in fighting a belief is a belief is not a target. There are people who hold a belief, places that can house it and boundaries to its influence. But no amount of bullets, bombs or tanks can ever decimate it. There are no generals to assassinate, no capitals to overrun.

The only way to defeat a belief is to give the people something better to believe in. The uprisings that came out of eastern Europe during the final days of communism were not brought about by military force. They were brought about by the people believing that something, anything, was better than what they had.

When the Germans proclaimed to the world "we are one nation," there was no general leading the charge, hammer in hand, to destroy the wall that had separated the nation for almost forty years. It was simply the Germans – a people who no longer could believe in the failed ideal of a country hundreds of miles away.

We often forget that it took almost four decades to shatter that belief.

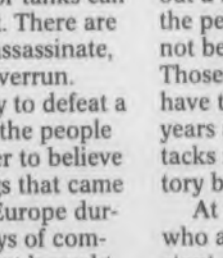
As we entered the next millennium, we find ourselves again in the middle of an ideological battle. The so-called "war against terrorism" is, like the Cold War, a war which we did not choose to fight, but one that was brought to us.

It makes good sense to approach it the same way we approached the Cold War. Amazingly, in little more than 10 years, we managed to forget everything we had learned in the last 40.

There are no blitzkriegs in an ideological battle. We can take the land, but without a better idea to give to the people there we will not be able to hold it. Those who ask why we still have terrorism three whole years after the Sept. 11 attacks need to pick up a history book.

At the same time, those who are promising us instant success need to be looked at like the dullards they are. Charging off like the Mongols is not the way to win a war of ideas, and if Vietnam should remind us of anything, it should be that it is very possible to win the battle but lose the war.

Our failure or success in this war will not lie in Saddam Hussein or Osama Bin Laden. There are scores of people waiting to take their place as leaders. Not until the people reject, wholeheartedly, the ideas of terrorism will we be able to claim victory.



Our greatest weapon in the war on terrorism is the same weapon we had in the cold war, our own ideals.

The idea of something better. The ideas that led to people being gun downed in the no-man's-land between East and West Berlin. The ideas that led parents to risk their lives in the hopes that their children would not live under totalitarian rule.

It is these ideas that will win us this war, the same ideas that we have fought for, for the last 230 years.

A fond farewell for John Ashcroft

JEREMY PARKER

Last Tuesday, John Ashcroft (U.S. Attorney General/the Michael Jordan of frowning) sent a five-page letter to the White House, announcing his impending resignation.

The White House withheld much of the five pages, leaving many Americans to speculate about "the real reason" behind his retirement.

Did he quit because of health problems related to his gall bladder surgery months ago? That can't be, because I have no idea what the gall bladder is or why it's important.

Did the administration deem him too much of a divider, not a uniter? Probably not, because everybody knows they're just kidding around with that whole "reaching across the aisle" thing, anyway.

My guess is that he stepped down to devote more time to letting the eagle soar.

Regardless, I'm wishing him good riddance and giving him the heartfelt one-finger salute I usually reserve for Bob Stoops.

The White House already has nominated Alberto Gonzales to be Ashcroft's successor. If confirmed, Gonzales would be the first Hispanic American to hold the position, proving that this administration is dedicated to reaching out to minorities (unless, of course, you're gay).

But before we move on, let's take a quick look back on some of the accomplishments of John Ashcroft's all-too-long career (cue "We've Only Just Begun").

In March 1998, former Green Bay Packers star Reggie White appeared on the floor of the Wisconsin Legislature, spouting racist stereotypes and faulting the government for "allowing homosexuality to run rampant."

This, of course, caused most sensible people to recoil in horror. Ashcroft, not fitting this definition, penned a letter to White, saying, "you are a credit to sports at a time when many 'stars' set the wrong example." No word on whether the two tongue-kissed later.

Fast-forward to November 2000, when Ashcroft somehow managed to lose his U.S. Senate seat to Mel Carnahan, who had been dead for more three weeks. Missourians decided that "Weekend At Bernie's 3: Senate Style" was better than having Ashcroft represent their state.

President Bush, no stranger to embarrassing elections himself, apparently decided losing to a dead guy was cause for promotion to one of the highest offices in the land.

Less than a year after becoming attorney general, Ashcroft championed the Patriot Act.

This heinous assault on civil liberties made it legal for the government to investigate citizens' library records, search homes and businesses without a warrant and videotape us going to the bathroom.

Rumor has it that Donald Rumsfeld is into that sort of thing.

Ashcroft justified the Patriot Act by saying that thwarting another terrorist attack was "the No. 1 priority." Three months later, he apparently decided that terror could wait. He was freaked out by a breast.

The art-deco sculpture "Spirit of Justice" resided in the Hall of Justice for over 60 years, portraying a blindfolded woman holding a scale and wearing a toga, exposing her breast. Ashcroft deemed the sculpture too risqué, so he spent $8,000 worth of taxpayer money to cover the offending mammary.

Evidently, Ashcroft was curious to see how many clear-headed Americans he could get to simultaneously ask themselves, "is this guy serious?"

It was at this point I adorned my accordion case with a "John Ashcroft Must Be Stopped" sticker and started yearning for the good old days of Janet Reno and her kickass dance parties.

But thankfully, Ashcroft is finally gone. Unfortunately, though, there still remains some trash to be taken out, and I'd like to address that trash for a moment:

Condoleezza, your name is weird, and your answers to the 9/11 Commission were evasive and transparent. Retire now and get to an orthodontist immediately.

Sen. Mike Crapo (R-ID), your name is even weirder. I don't know how you ever win elections.

Finally, Mr. Rumsfeld, please come remove the video camera from my bathroom. It's clearly visible behind the plant.

Good riddance to bad rubbish. Mr. Ashcroft, you won't be missed.

Specter makes his case to chair Senate Judiciary Committee

Senate leader Frist cautions on abortion issue

By Jim Abrams
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – Sen. Arlen Specter's move up to chairman of the committee that handles the president's judicial nominees is on the line this week when lawmakers return to the Capitol to clean up the unfinished work of this Congress and prepare for the next one.

Following their election triumphs, Republicans are eager to wrap up the lame-duck session as quickly as possible, to clear the path for President Bush's second-term initiatives of tax simplification, Social Security overhaul and lawsuit limitations.

But before ending the 108th Congress, lawmakers must deal with spending bills covering most federal domestic programs for the fiscal year that began Oct. 1, vote to raise the government's borrowing limit on the national debt and confront a stalemate on legislation to reshape intelligence agencies.

One focus when the Senate reconvenes on Tuesday will be the efforts of Specter, R-Pa., to convince his fellow Republicans that he deserves to be the next Judiciary Committee chairman. Opposition has arisen to the moderate Republican, who supports abortion rights, as a result of his postelection statements that nominees with anti-abortion views would have a tough time winning Senate confirmation.

He has since stressed he would be a team player if he succeeds the current chairman, Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, who must step down because of GOP-imposed term limits.

Specter told ABC's "This Week" he had never applied a litmus test to Supreme Court nominees and had voted for anti-abortion judges.

"I have supported all of President Bush's nominees in the committee and on the floor, and those go right to the heart of factual matters of concern," he said.

The issue has taken on some urgency because of the possibility of openings on the Supreme Court. The average age of the nine court members is 70. Speculation on a Supreme Court retirement has grown in part because there has been no vacancy in more than 10 years.

Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist, R-Tenn., said Specter must make his case to GOP senators.

A chairman, Frist said on "Fox News Sunday," is responsible to "the feelings, the beliefs, the values, the procedures that are held by the majority of that committee," which overwhelmingly opposes abortion.

head into overtime, but then the rollercoaster that has been K-State's season took its most dramatic dip. On first-and-ten from the Colorado 36 yard line with 16 seconds left, quarterback Joel Klatt eluded Wildcat defensive lineman Derek Marso and hit an open Ron Monteilh for a 64-yard touchdown pass.

And that was it.

After the game, defensive coordinator Bob Elliott placed the blame for the game-deciding touchdown on himself.

"I wish I had that call back," Elliott said. "It was a coverage we thought was the best coverage for vertical routes which is exactly what they did. But it wasn't the right call, and that play has got to be on me. I can't blame our guys for that."

Finger-pointing was non-existent among players as well – except for the fingers pointed at themselves.

"It feels terrible, and I feel terrible, because I was one of those guys that didn't help us win at all," junior safety Jesse Tetuan said. "I played terrible today, and I feel bad because there's seniors that can't get this chance back."

Now, the Wildcats face the task of regrouping and preparing for Saturday's season finale against Iowa State at KSU Stadium.

Senior cornerback Cedrick Williams said the senior class still has plenty to play for against the Cyclones.

"We don't want to go out the way things are going. We want to fight," Williams said. "This is our last game for the K-State fans. We have to play for them. They travel everywhere we go, so if we don't play for anybody, we have to play for our fans."

as we can," he said.

Melodie Power, the final speaker, addressed the problem of hate crimes and called for those present to act in a way Ross would have.

"Let's celebrate Carmin's memory by acting up in the fact that a single person can bring about change, and a small group of committed people can change the course of history," Power said. "The wonderful legacy of Carmin Ross is only a victory away."

Sharon Keane, member of First Congregational Church and part of the choir that ended the lecture, said she knew Ross from church.

She said the lecture was a good tribute to Ross.

"It was very informative," Keane said. "It spoke highly to what Carmin's causes were."

Dave Manning, church member, said the lecture was about what Carmin believed in.

He said people have to dig the find the real issues, and he also said the War in Iraq is bad regardless of the reason the United States is there.

"For whatever the reason, it doesn't take away the bottom line," Manning said. "The number of deaths that are caused by our county's actions is enormous."

Big plays not enough in loss to Colorado

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

BOULDER, Colo. – It was a game that saw heroics on display from Wildcats on both sides of the ball, as the team repeatedly fought back from deficits against the Colorado Buffaloes.

It just wasn't enough.

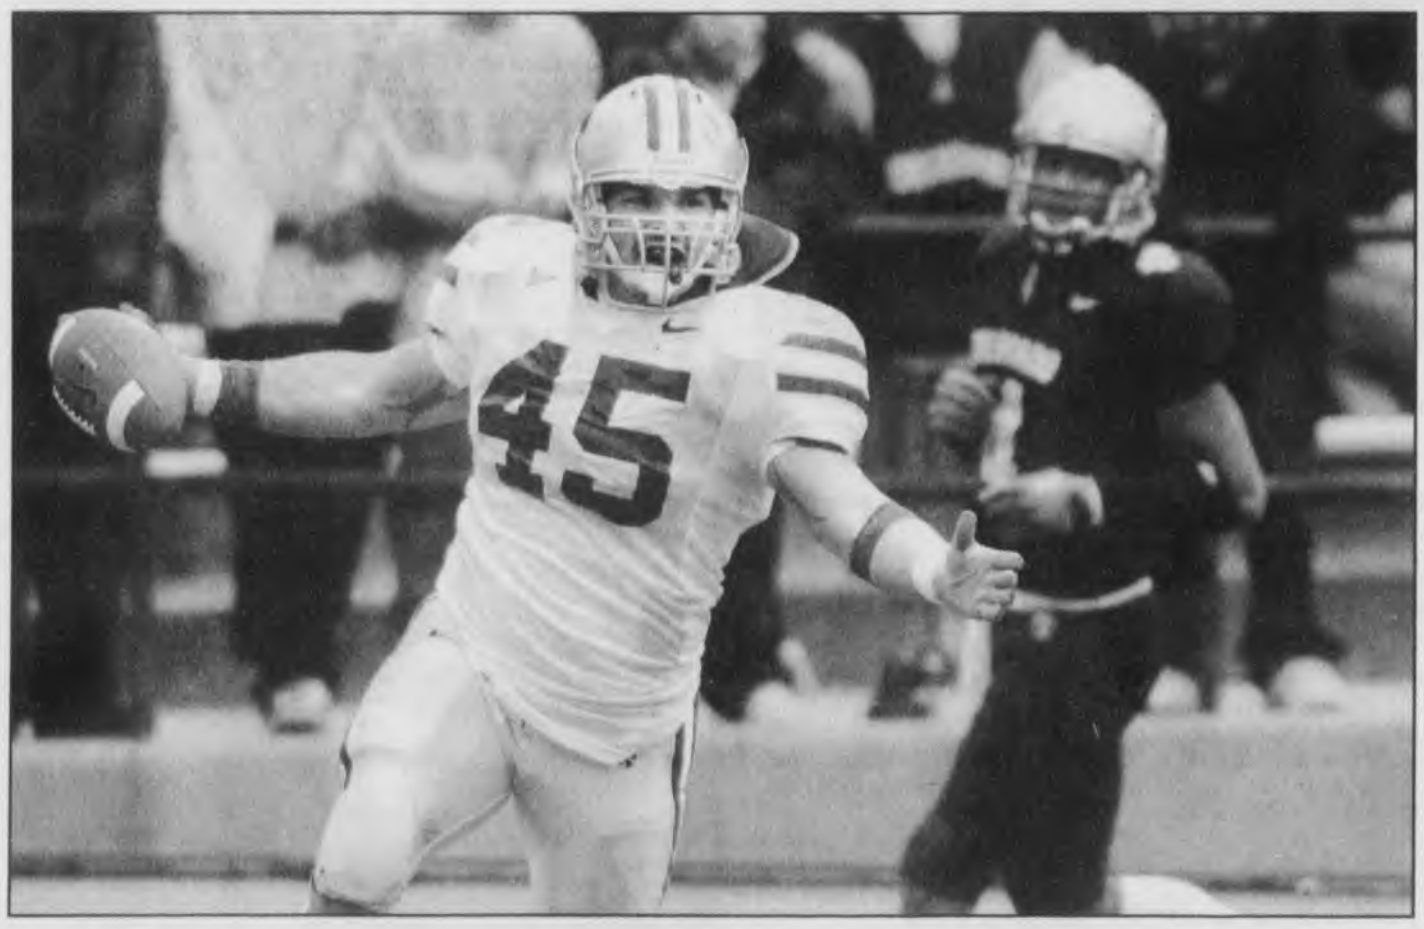
A defensive breakdown in the waning seconds of the fourth quarter allowed Colorado quarterback Joel Klatt to connect with wide receiver Ron Monteilh for a 64-yard touchdown strike, giving the Buffaloes a 38-31 win Saturday at Folsom Field.

The loss snaps K-State's streak of 11 consecutive bowl games and takes the Wildcats out of the race for the Big 12 North Division title.

Junior safety Jesse Tetuan said the game-winning touchdown summed up a day in which the defense gave up several big plays.

"It was something that kind of defined the whole game, a bunch of mix-ups and a bunch of stupid plays that we made ourselves," Tetuan said.

Though many will undoubtedly remember the Klatt-to-Monteilh touchdown when looking back at the game, it was an earlier play that arguably turned the contest around.



With 22 seconds left, and facing third-and-ten from their own 23-yard line, the Buffaloes elected to take the safe route and run the football.

But instead of the K-State defense stopping halfback Lawrence Vickers and the clock running out in regulation, the junior broke off a 13-yard run.

First down Colorado, and the rest is history.

Rowing | Rowers beat Kansas in Showdown

The K-State rowing team has the Kansas Jayhawks' number.

The Wildcats defeated Kansas for the third-straight year in the annual Sunflower Showdown on Friday.

K-State won the first race of the day — the Novice Four — and the Wildcats found success from there, winning three of the five races on the day.

Along with the Novice Four, K-State won the First Varsity Eight and Second Novice Eight races. KU came out on top in the Second Varsity Eight and First Novice Eight races.

The Showdown marked the end of the fall season for the K-State rowers. The Wildcats will resume competition on March 18-20 at the Longhorn Invitational in Austin, Texas.

Baseball | Hill announces 10 fall K-State signings

The K-State baseball team should have at least 10 new members at the beginning of the fall 2005 season.

Hill

Coach Brad Hill announced the signing of 10 high school seniors to National Letters of Intent on Friday.

Two signees hail from the state of Kansas — right-handed pitcher Justin Murray of Manhattan and outfielder Jordan Cruz from Hutchinson.

The state of Texas dominates the rest of the signings, as six of the 10 seniors hail from the state. Those players include right-handed pitcher Trevor Hurley, infielder Tyler Link, right-handed pitchers Corey Morehouse and Anthony Morris, catcher Rob Vaughn and outfielder Byron Wiley.

Rounding out the class is outfielder Robbie Knight of Bennington, Neb. and right-handed pitcher Todd Vogel of Ankeny, Iowa.

Cats hold off Baylor 3-2 on the road

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Baylor pushed K-State to the limit on Saturday before the Wildcats held off the Bears on the road for a 3-2 win.

K-State won 25-30, 30-22, 30-21, 28-30 and 15-10.

The No. 20 Wildcats improved to 17-8 overall and 11-5 in the Big 12 Conference, while the Bears dropped to 12-16 overall and 4-13 in the Big 12.

"I felt we played very well for the most part, minus some strings of points by their servers," Coach Suzie Fritz said. "Our outside hitters had a very good night offensively with attacks, and I thought defensively our serving was good."

One of those outside hitters with a big night was senior Vali Hejjas. Hejjas scored a career-high 30 kills on .371 hitting and 13 digs for her seventh double-double of the season. Sophomore outside hitter Sandy Werner hit an efficient .368 for 16 kills, and senior middle blocker Lisa Martin and junior outside hitter Agata Rezende chipped in with 15 kills apiece.

Senior setter Gabby Guerre posted a season-high 71 assists, and freshman libero Angie Lastra rounded out the stat leaders with 15 digs and three service aces.

Fritz said there was one specific area that hurt the Cats and caused the match to go longer than the two teams' previous meeting in Ahearn Field House this season.

"We didn't defend the left-side attack well and that, more than anything, caused the game to go long," Fritz said. "The ability to hit and block on the left side is very important because almost 60 percent of the plays in volleyball go through that channel."

But Fritz said many of the reasons the match was close had to do with the Bears' play.

"To their credit, Baylor played very well," Fritz said. "They had three good outside hitters that caused us some problems. It's not easy (to defend them), but a good hitter usually beats a good blocker. We just need to get better at it."

K-State returns home Wednesday to face Oklahoma at 7 p.m. in Ahearn Field House.

K-State trounces Athletes in Action

K-State's Shana Wheeler grabs a rebound during the second half of K-State's 97-44 win over Athletes in Action on Sunday at Bramlage Coliseum.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In its first exhibition win over Emporia State, K-State scored 50 points in the paint. Sunday, the Wildcats got it done from the outside, knocking down 13 3-pointers on 29 attempts in a 97-44 win over Athletes in Action.

Senior guard Laurie Koehn led the way in the Wildcats' final exhibition game, making 6-of-10 from behind the arc and finishing with a game-high 22 points in 24 minutes.

Senior Megan Mahoney recorded a double-double, scoring 20 points and pulling down 10 rebounds, while preseason All-American Kendra Wecker finished with 19 points on 8-of-12 shooting from the field.

Only two Wildcat players were scoreless the day.

"I think we distributed the ball really well," Mahoney said. "I think if you look at the scoring, it was pretty spread out. Our posts didn't get a whole lot of touches this game, but we kind of took what they were giving us. That's just how we play – we're very unselfish."

The only time the Wildcats trailed in the game was less than two minutes into the contest, when Jess Hansen knocked in a 3-pointer to give AIA a 3-2 lead.

K-State dominated the rest of the half, outscoring its opponent 44-15. The half included Wildcat runs of 10-0 and 8-0, and the defense held AIA without a field goal for more than eight minutes.

Playing with a comfortable lead, the Wildcats came out in the second half flat, missing their first four shots and turning the ball over four times, allowing AIA to go on an 8-0 run.

Coach Deb Patterson said the second-half start was the most disappointing part of the game.

"I wasn't too particularly happy with the first few minutes of the second half," Patterson said. "I think that might have been our biggest point of let down right there."

The Wildcats quickly took back control of the game, outscoring AIA 20-2 in the next five minutes to push their lead to 68-30. After its opponent's offensive spurt, the K-State defense, which forced 28 turnovers in the game, held AIA to 16 points for the rest of the game.

Though the Wildcats held their opponent to only three baskets in the paint and less than 29-percent shooting from the field, Wecker said the defense has room for improvement,

Chesang qualifies for NCAA championship

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Senior Mathew Chesang's Wildcat cross country career isn't over yet.

In a time of 30:02, K-State's top runner placed second at the Midwest Regionals in Peoria, Ill., on Saturday to earn a bid to the NCAA Championships.

Coach Michael Smith said Chesang's race was one of the best ever by a Wildcat.

"I have gone back to the '70s, and there has only been one runner that has run as high as Mathew did," Smith said. "Shadrack Kimeli won Regionals in 2001, and besides him and Mathew, no other runner has finished higher than third."

On the way to his second-place finish, Chesang beat his brother, Benson Chesang of Kansas, by nearly 28 seconds. Benson won the Big 12 Championships two weeks ago, finishing five seconds ahead of Mathew.

Chesang will now head to Terre Haute, Ind., for the NCAA Championships on Nov. 22, where a top-30 finish could earn him All-America status. That hasn't happened for a Wildcat runner since 1992.

Smith said the competition will be tougher, but Mathew will be in contention for a high finish.

"If he runs the way he did these last two meets, he should be a contender for an All-American finish," Smith said. "He still needs to do it. I would say that would be the objective. But it doesn't get any easier."

The Wildcat men, as a team, ended its season with a 10th place finish.

Junior Joseph Moore was the next closest Wildcat after Chesang, as he finished in a time of 32:02 to place 55th. Moore was followed by junior Micha Gamper, sophomore Tyler Roark and senior Trevor Smith, who placed 80th, 88th and 98th, respectively.

Coach Smith said the men ran as well as they could have.

"On the whole, I think we could have performed better, but at the most, we could have been one place higher," he said.

For the women, senior Trisha Culbertson finished her career as a Wildcat. Culbertson paced the Wildcats with a 44th place finish in a time of 21:47 on the 6K course.

NFL | New Orleans comes back for win over Chiefs

The New Orleans Saints have fallen behind early and often this season. And they have seldom come back.

On Sunday, the Saints recovered from an early 10-point deficit and then scored a late touchdown to win.

Aaron Brooks threw a 42-yard touchdown pass to Joe Horn midway through the fourth quarter and New Orleans beat the Kansas City Chiefs 27-20.

New Orleans (4-5), which has been outscored 54-0 in the first quarter in the last seven games, trailed 10-0 after one quarter against the Chiefs. But for a change the Saints were able to rally — and then hold on to win.

Journalism professors to spin old records for 'Grease' sock hop and festivities

By Tony Herrman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The throwback atmosphere of the musical "Grease" will begin before K-State Theater's first performance Thursday.

Steve Smethers and Dave MacFarland, two members of the electronic media faculty in the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications, will be re-creating a 1950s or early 1960s sock hop radio broadcast at McCain Auditorium.

The sock hop will last from 7 to 8 Thursday night, before the musical begins at 8.

MacFarland said he and Smethers are patterning their performance after Kansas City Top 40 station, WHB.

Along with oldies, they will play station identification jingles.

The two are more concerned about fun than authenticity.

"We're not going to do it justice," MacFarland said. "We're not aiming for historical accuracy as much as a good time."

Festivities also will include a costume contest. Prizes for winning costumes will include certificates for massages, pedicures and manicures, meals at restaurants and K-State merchandise.

The pair will utilize their student counterparts in the musical to help pick the best costumes.

Although dancing is encouraged, there won't be a dancing contest.

"We were afraid people would be too afraid with a dance contest," said Marci Maullar, marketing director for K-State Theatre.

MacFarland said he couldn't remember if it was his wife Charlotte MacFarland, director of "Grease," or Maullar who approached him with the idea.

"This is his area of specialty," Maullar said. "We decided this might be a fun thing to do."

Aside from being the director's husband, MacFarland said he was asked to DJ the sock hop because he did his doctoral dissertation on the development of the Top 40 format and was a DJ in high school.

"I'm the one who roped Steve into it," MacFarland said. "I know he had the same life path.

"He was so deep into the music, he has the ability to win almost any 'name that tune' contest."

Charlotte said the sock hop will be a fun way to get in the mood.

"It's going to be a lot of fun creating more of the flavor of life in the 50s," she said.

MacFarland and Smethers are only DJing before Thursday's show because the sock hop aids the performance that is targeted more for the student audience.

And, it reduces the commitment for two professors who aren't in the theater department.

"It was the feeling of our marketing department to only do it one day, because it would be a lot for Steve and Dave to give up all four nights," Charlotte said.

'Ray' filled with Oscar-worthy performances

"Ray"
Movie review by Corbin H. Crable

Engaging, creative and full of soul, much like its namesake, "Ray" is sure to garner more than one Oscar nod this year.

The biopic examines the life of blues musician Ray Charles, from his childhood struggles to cope with gradually going blind, to his rise to stardom performing on music circuits worldwide, to his painful recovery from the drug addiction and womanizing of his adult life.

The cast is tremendous – each character makes his or her own special contribution to a film that takes an honest, frank look at a beautiful but flawed life.

Jamie Foxx's performance as Ray Charles is both stunning and convincing; one forgets he or she is watching Foxx act the part of Charles. Foxx, unlike many actors who try to take on such larger-than-life roles, actually becomes Charles.

An immersion in one's character is rare; the last time audiences saw such a feat was last year, when Charlize Theron portrayed serial killer Aileen Wuornos in "Monster." Foxx has shown he belongs in this caliber of performers and is sure to receive at least an Oscar nomination for his work.

Sharon Warren, a novice to the cinema who is nearly Foxx's equal when it comes to talent, does a superb job of mixing hope and sorrow in her role as Charles' mother.

Although we only see her in flashbacks to Charles' childhood, Warren does an excellent job of conveying the strong-willed woman who must live with the death of her youngest son and with the blindness of her other son. In her silver screen debut, Warren has shown she is more than deserving of a best supporting actress nomination.

The film is also peppered with strong performances by the actresses who play the other women in Charles' life, such as his wife (Kerry Washington), a woman torn between love for her husband and his heroin addiction, which threatens their marriage.

Regina King, as Charles' mistress, creates a love-hate relationship between her character and the audience as a woman who knowingly enters into a relationship with a married man but ultimately becomes another victim of his womanizing and drug addiction. One easily can loathe her and feel sympathetic for her at the same time.

The story itself shows the genius behind the man and his music but doesn't spare graphic detail in his drug use and subsequent recovery.

Although Charles manages to hurt many on his way to the top of the Billboard charts, he emerges as a changed man at the end of his life, and his music becomes his legacy, not the demons that haunted him.

We remember him for the gifts he gave to the music world, songs like "I Got a Woman" and "Georgia on My Mind."

This film is a fitting tribute to the legend who touched, and continues to touch, generations of music lovers the world over.

Authorities seek cause of O.D.B.'s death

Autopsy results for rapper O.D.B., who died at a Manhattan recording studio, will not be available for several days while authorities conduct medical tests, officials said Sunday.

Results of the tests could take more than a week, said Ellen Borakove, a spokeswoman for the New York City medical examiner's office.

O.D.B., whose legal name was Russell Jones, complained of chest pains before collapsing Saturday. He was dead by the time paramedics reached him, said Gabe Tesoriero, a spokesman for Roc-a-Fella records.

O.D.B. had recently finished a prison sentence for drug possession and escaping a rehab clinic. He would have turned 36 today.

N.Y. lawyer sues 'Law & Order' for $15M

A lawyer sued the producers of the television show "Law & Order" for $15 million Friday, claiming they defamed him by portraying him as a crooked attorney in one "ripped from the headlines" episode.

Ravi Batra said the episode titled "Floater," maliciously inflicted emotional, economic and professional injury on him.

The lawsuit says the "Floater" episode featured an Indian-American, Brooklyn-based lawyer named Ravi Patel who has similarities to Batra — including a bald head and facial hair.

People who know Batra and saw the episode "were disturbed and distressed by the story line of criminal conduct attributed to plaintiff (Batra) by defendants," court papers say.

Equestrian team takes first in three shows, wins 29 individual rides

By Kelly Olson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The English squad of the K-State equestrian team captured first place at all three shows over the weekend at the K-State Hunt Show.

Senior Christi Conforti attributed much of the team success to the two shows Saturday, when the team took 21 first-place individual rides. During the third show on Sunday, the team took eight more first-place rides, totaling 29 for the weekend.

"We had a really good weekend. Everyone did their best, and it showed this weekend," Conforti said. "I knew the competition would be hard, since we faced the same teams as we did in Chicago at the Northern Illinois Hunt Show."

"Just because the majority of the horses were ours doesn't mean we would win."

On top of the large number of first places, K-State riders were atop of the high point awards, as well.

Heather Chatham took high-point rider in the first show Saturday, while Gentry Horigan, Allison Woodworth and Stephanie Bell tied for reserve high-point rider.

Chatham took high point after winning Open Flat B and Open Over Fences A. Horigan placed second in Intermediate Flat A and first in Intermediate Fences, while Woodworth won Open Flat A and placed second in Open Over Fences A.

In the second show, senior Dehlia Burdan received high-point rider, and on Sunday, Woodworth and Kelsey Wright tied for high point rider.

Drew Rose | COLLEGIAN
K-State's Lindsay Cook riders her horse while competing in the walk/trot/canter C at Saturday's equestrian meet at Fox Creek Stables. Cook won first place in the walk/trot/canter C event.

Burdan captured the high-point honor after winning Open Over Fences A and Open Flat B.

Woodworth placed first in Open Over Fences B and Open Flat B.

Wright added to the success by winning Intermediate Fences and Intermediate Flat B.

"We rode really hard this weekend. We rode like we didn't know the horses," Burdan said. "We didn't take any chances, and it paid off. Everyone worked really good together."

Co-captains Burdan and Conforti both said much of the team's success was due to the guidance from English Coach Meghan Cunningham.

"I think our coach has really been pushing us in practice. We all had specific things we had to work on," Conforti said.

Burdan said Cunningham can spot potential in freshman riders.

"She has taken a lot of girls and worked really hard with them to give them the chance to become better riders," she said. "She has a good eye for seeing the diamonds in the rough."

The English squad's next show is the Southern Illinois Hunt Show on Feb. 19 and 20.

The Western squad is scheduled for the Black Hawk Western Show on Nov. 20 and 21 at Kewanee, Ill.

back-breaking touchdown, the K-State defense did have its moments.

Down a touchdown with just more than eight minutes left in the fourth quarter, junior linebacker Ted Sims grabbed a deflected pass out of the air and returned it 37 yards for a score to tie the game at 24.

After a Purify two-yard touchdown run on the ensuing Colorado possession, the Wildcats got some heroics from an unexpected candidate.

Regulated to the bench due to injury for most of the game, sophomore quarterback Dylan Meier stepped in for starter Allen Webb after Webb suffered an injury of his own on the next possession. Meier proceeded to march the K-State offense down the field.

On third-and-ten from the Colorado 17-yard line, Meier connected with sophomore wide receiver Jermaine Moreira in the left corner of the endzone for another game-tying score.

Meier, who Coach Bill Snyder said was "half-speed at best" due to injury, was 7-of-11 for 63 yards on the drive.

Co-offensive coordinator Del Miller choked up as he talked about Meier's effort in relief of Webb.

"He's fought through an awful lot. We haven't talked about it (his specific injury) all year, and we won't talk about it, but he has fought," Miller said. "He's a tough, tough son of a gun."

Snyder said the back-and-forth nature of the game was an example of what his team had done all season.

"I think it's reflective in that we've been such an inconsistent football team over the course of the year," Snyder said.

Meier said the team must rally this week, as it prepares to face Iowa State in the final game of the season Saturday at KSU Stadium.

"We've been tested – our character and our fight – all year, and I can't see any kind of let up for next week," Meier said. "We got to go out fighting, and that's all we can do."

Mandy Chapman Semple admits it started because she needed a flexible part-time job.

As an undergraduate student at K-State, Semple said she decided to take a chance and submit her application to the Manhattan Emergency Shelter Inc. the summer before her senior year in college.

"I knew someone in college who worked here," Semple said. "They had a position open, and I admit I needed a job that worked with my school schedule."

It was that step of faith that landed Semple a job as a night-time staff member at the shelter, and, four years later, a full-time job as its current director.

Semple graduated from K-State in May 2002 with a Bachelor's degree in microbiology, and then received her master's degree in science and public health from Tulane University.

After working for Washburn University as a biology teacher and briefly for Riley County, Semple found herself going back to her college days at the shelter.

"I really fell in love with this place during college," said Semple, who took over the director's position in October after former director Junell Norris resigned in July. "In college, my study of science was controlled – this added the human element. It was the perfect balance for a college education."

With the change in leadership, the shelter staff and its guests are also experiencing a breath of fresh air.

"There's a lot of renewed interest in the shelter now, and that's really good for the shelter," Emily Wagner, client services director, said. "She's real energetic."

Local leaders reflect on Arafat's death

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The death of Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat has produced mixed responses from people around the globe, including at K-State.

Arafat, 75, died Thursday morning in Paris and was buried in Ramallah after a debate between Palestinians and Israelis.

Palestinians mourned the loss of their leader by flooding the streets and waving flags, according to the Associated Press.

Palestinians first requested Arafat be buried in Jerusalem in the Al Aqsa Mosque Compound, the AP reported. However, Israel declined, fearing "it would strengthen the Palestinians' claims to a city they envision as a capital of a future Palestinian state."

Michael Suleiman, distinguished professor in political science and Middle East expert, said Arafat's death can be a chance for change.

"It's also seen as a possibility for new leadership and the possibility for a peaceful settlement in which the Americans and Israelis can participate," he said.

Don Fallon, K-State coordinator of religious activities, agreed.

"I live in the hope that his life and death might signal a stronger world commitment to assist in the negotiations of that troubled area and that out of this will come a leadership that will be open to negotiations and change," he said.

Prime Minister Mahmoud Abbas was elected by the Palestine Liberation Organization to replace Arafat shortly after he died, according to the AP.

Speaker Rauhi Fattouh was also pronounced the caretaker president of the Palestinian Authority, by the Palestinian legislature. Elections for the position will be held in 60 days.

Suleiman said the responses of the Palestinian people to Arafat's death will vary.

Rice to replace Powell; 3 others resign

By Tom Raum
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – President Bush has chosen national security adviser Condoleezza Rice to replace Colin Powell as secretary of state in his second term, a senior administration official said Monday.

Powell, a retired four-star general who often clashed with more hawkish members of the administration on Iraq and other foreign policy issues, resigned in a Cabinet exodus that promises a starkly different look to President Bush's second-term team.

The White House on Monday announced Powell's exit along with the resignations of Education Secretary Rod Paige, Agriculture Secretary Ann Veneman and Energy Secretary Spencer Abraham. Stephen Hadley, deputy national security adviser, will replace Rice, the official said on condition of anonymity.

Combined with the resignations earlier this month of Commerce Secretary Don Evans and Attorney General John Ashcroft, six of Bush's 15 Cabinet members will not be part of the president's second term, which begins with his inauguration Jan. 20. An administration that experienced few changes over the last four years suddenly hit a high-water mark for overhaul.

Rice
NATIONAL SECURITY ADVISER

Known for his moderate views and unblemished reputation, it was Powell who went before the United Nations in February 2003 to sell Bush's argument for invading Iraq to skeptics abroad and at home. But Powell's case was built on faulty intelligence that Saddam Hussein possessed weapons of mass destruction.

Still, the former Joint Chiefs of Staff chairman remained the most popular member of the administration, more so than even Bush.

In a resignation Nov. 12 letter, Powell told Bush that, with the election over, it was time to "step down ... and return to private life." The Army man for 35 years said he would stay on "for a number of weeks, or a month or two" until his replacement was confirmed by the Senate.

Asked what he plans to do next, the 67-year-old Powell said, "I don't know."

In a statement, Bush called Powell "one of the great public servants of our time."

Most of the speculation on a successor to Powell has centered on Rice, who is generally seen as more hawkish and is one of Bush's closest advisers. She is widely considered the president's first choice for the top diplomat job despite reports she intends to return to California – she was provost at Stanford University – or was hoping to replace Donald Rumsfeld as defense secretary.

Aides to Rice declined to comment. In Ecuador for a meeting of defense ministers, Rumsfeld gave no indication that he is on the verge of stepping down. "I have not discussed that with the president," he said when asked if he planned to resign.

Also mentioned as a possible Powell replacement was U.N. Ambassador John Danforth, the former Republican senator from Missouri. Danforth described Powell as "a great person" and "an outstanding public servant." As to whether he might succeed Powell, Danforth said, "It hasn't been mentioned by me or to me."

Powell, one of the architects of the 1991 Persian Gulf War in the administration of Bush's father, often sparred in private with hard-line administration

Citizens express views to USD 383 district

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The search is under way for the new superintendent of Manhattan-Ogden USD 383.

During seven separate public discussion sessions Monday, community members had a chance to voice their opinions about the qualities a superintendent should have.

The sessions were facilitated by Max Heim from the Kansas Association of School Boards, which will ultimately use some of the community input in choosing the finalists for the position.

"They want them to be a good instructional leader and have good interpersonal skills," he said. "I also heard a lot of people say they want a team builder and a vision builder."

Community members were also invited to go on the USD 383 Web site, www.usd383.org, and complete a questionnaire. Or, they could pick one up at the Robinson Education Center on 2031 Poyntz Ave.

So far, about 100 have been turned in, but the due date is not until Nov. 24.

The comments will then be summarized and presented at the Dec. 15 board meeting.

Applications for the superintendent position are being accepted until Jan. 24. Heim said KASB will begin reviewing the applications as soon as Jan. 25.

KASB will then choose five suggested applicants and pass those along with the other applications to the school board. The school board will then choose who it would like to interview.

QUICK QUIZ

The video game industry has saturated the market with a number of big-name title releases in the past few weeks.

Whether it's "Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas" for PlayStation 2 or "Halo 2" for the X-Box, gamers have their hands full with hours worth of gameplay in front of them.

Take the following quiz and see how much of an addict you've become since your latest gaming craze began.

1. What's the last thing you bought?
A. Dinner last night.
B. The game; I've been playing it ever since.
C. Can't remember; gotta beat the next level.
D. I bought an upgrade for my character on Level 6.

2. How much time do you spend gaming each day?
A. Less than one hour.
B. One to two hours each day.
C. More than two hours daily.
D. Most of the days just run together from playing continuously.

3. How many classes have you missed to play?
A. None...yet.
B. I've missed one or two this week.
C. I haven't been to class since last week.
D. Class? Is that a secret bonus level?

4. How long will it take you to finish the game?
A. I'll probably play it off and on for a few weeks and then rest.
B. I've got a few hours of playing before I'm done.
C. I beat the game already.
D. I'm replaying the game for the third time to look for all the hidden items.

5. What's the last news item you remember hearing before starting your game?
A. Colin Powell's resignation.
B. Yasser Arafat's death.
C. Bush winning the election.
D. We landed on the moon.

Answers

If you answered mostly A, congratulations. Your priorities will help you finish up your classes and work before Thanksgiving break, when you'll have plenty of time to game.

If you answered mostly B, you're fairly serious about getting your money's worth out of your game of choice. Pick up a gamer's guide for tips, but don't go crazy.

If you answered mostly C, you're a hardcore gamer who knows what he/she is doing. Your grades might hurt a bit this semester, but you'll have the satisfaction of being the best in your gaming circle.

If you answered mostly D, you probably lied. Anyone with that level of dedication to a video game wouldn't have time to read the Collegian.

CES job search series ends today with career workshop in Union

By Karthik Reddy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A job workshop, the final initiative in a three-week creative job search series sponsored by Career and Employment Services, takes place today.

Kerri Day Keller, CES director, said the series is focused on how to network effectively.

Keller said the segments have been independent of one another, so students are encouraged to attend.

The workshop begins 6 tonight in room 213 of the K-State Student Union.

"The goal in creating this program is to help students with their job searches beyond the traditional means, and help them identify their skill areas," Keller said.

The workshops are popular with the students and can help them in finding a part-time or full-time job, or an internship, she said.

She also said the program was extended to a series of workshops, as opposed to a single event in previous years, in order for more information to be disseminated and further help students.

"This is a good time for students who have been unable to find job opportunities or have not taken advantage of the career fair to attend and obtain information that can help them in making their job search more effective," she said.

Keller said it would be impossible to advise everyone individually, but this series was an excellent means of providing information in the group format.

Mary Ellen Barkley, CES coordinator for the College of Agriculture, said the workshops help students develop helpful skills to tap the hidden job market.

She said most people are usually looking for jobs in the visible market, such as those in the newspapers or other advertisements, but the workshops gave students suggestions on using the hidden job market.

"The creative job search series in general helps students gain better and important skills in networking with people and provides them with an effective means of mastering their job search," Barkley said.

The Sisters of St. Joseph of Wichita

Talk about a radical way to live.

Imagine a life totally devoted to Christ. A life where the rewards you seek are not of this earth. Imagine shunning materialism, realizing there's so much more to life when you follow in the footsteps of Jesus.

We are the sisters of St. Joseph. And it's true, our lives are radically different from the world around us. For ours is a community of vowed women committed to prayer, spiritual growth, and serving others.

We invite you to deepen your relationship with Jesus Christ and join us on our journey.

You may not be entirely certain. And with the many distractions in today's world, it's easy to get sidetracked. But if you listen to your inner voice — if you listen to your heart — you just might find that devoting your life to God as a Sister is the radical way you are being called to live.

IS GOD CALLING YOU?

Get this free CD-ROM from the Sisters of St. Joseph to help you find out if you've truly been called. To request your CD, call Sister Karen Salsbery, Vocation Minister, or visit us online.

TO THE POINT

School district search needs focus, direction

Few things can be more important than promoting education, and hiring talented leaders to do so is vital to any school district.

As Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 begins its search for a new superintendent, it is necessary to keep the district's best interests in mind while looking for the best available candidate.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

The faculty, administration and staff of USD 383 have been committed to offering their best for the community for quite some time, despite contending with state funding cuts and other assorted restraints.

The next superintendent of USD 383 must have vision and objectives for the entire district. In an age when districts allow funding shortages to dictate policy, the next superintendent must be motivated to meet and exceed expectations.

This may be a lot to ask, but it should not bankrupt the district to pay such a leader. It is admirable to provide as much compensation as possible to education professionals, but USD 383 must keep its superintendent's salary in line with salaries at comparable districts in the state.

Striking the balance between finding a quality superintendent candidate and signing him or her to work for a fair amount of compensation is a weighty task for USD 383 board members, but it is one they are more than ready to undertake.

Putting faith in reason

Many world religions corrupted, lose sight of origins

ALTAF KARIM

Once upon a time, there was a guy who used to be a bit crazy and a bit liberal too. It's a pity he had no real job to do. So, as the devil made work for idle hands, he began ogling skies, stalking heavenly bodies and ultimately pissing off his church chums.

In those days our earth was a motionless planet like a statue that got stuck in the center of the universe. Sun and other stars used to revolve around it with the permission of the church.

One day the clergy got spitting mad when this dude shamelessly pulled the Earth from the center of the universe and began dancing around the sun. Consequently, his abominable deeds sent him to prison.

After teaching him a good lesson, the clergy released him from the prison as a token of the religious rage towards him, but they couldn't stop the earth's dance. Since then, this little rascal planet has been revolving around the sun to commend its liberator, Galileo.

This is not an isolated example of blasphemy. Many times in human history, some self-proclaimed custodians of religion wrestled with people who brought up irresistible modern scientific thoughts and ideas.

Here I would like to make clear that I do believe in God from the bottom of my heart and I respect greatly all of his 124,000 prophets. I also believe that there should not be a conflict between God's original words and scientific knowledge. A conflict should arise if and only if the religious ideologies are not based on the absolute truth and when people naively set their faith on these suspicious ideologies.

Unfortunately in today's modern world most religious ideologies are so contaminated and self-contradictory that their credibility has become highly questionable. This topsy-turvy situation happened when few corrupt clergymen made some devilish intervention in religion and modified the original words of Holy Scriptures in order to pursue their own objectives.

Implementation of such corrupted version of religious ideologies in our political systems will lead us nowhere, but this is the way of complete destruction.

To encounter this situation, time to time God has been sending different prophets for the revival of religion and to restore the wordings of His Scriptures. It's been 1,400 years since God stopped sending prophets. Now it's the responsibility of all people of the world to clean up this religious mess by themselves.

Prophet Abraham also adopted a scientific method of reasoning to set his mind free and to reject his forefather's religion. His great sense of humor and unique communication style poked a lot of fun in his prophecy.

He nearly split his gut watching people of his town who used to worship idols during his times.

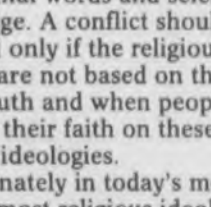
Their ignorance always amused him.

One night he picked up an axe and sneaked into the idol house. He broke all the idols, except the big one. Then he put the axe on the shoulder of the big idol.

Abraham was asked, "Did you break the idols?" Abraham replied, "Don't you see the axe is on the shoulder of the big idol so he must be a real culprit!" The people got spitting mad, "You know very well that stone and wood can not do that."

Illustrations by Kent Holle | COLLEGIAN

Abraham replied, "So why do you consider these helpless idols as your gods and worship them? I have nothing against wood and stone, but I am against ignorance and misguidance."



Thousands of years ago a Greek philosopher, Socrates, also tried to project reality and truth among his people using the same method of reasoning. He launched the idea of monotheism too. According to this, God is suppose to live alone without a son, daughter, father, or partners and also without sleeping and eating.

He made aristocracy his biggest enemy when he declared, "There is one only good, namely, knowledge; and only one evil, namely, ignorance."

Losing the war

America cannot win against terror without re-examining foreign policies

CHAZ STEIMEL

Just a few weeks after I started my freshman year, the world I live in dramatically changed as the World Trade Center attack unfolded.

As America and the world adjusted to the post-Sept. 11 world, I realized in some ways, nothing had changed. America had been covertly fighting a war on terror since 1997. We had been hunting bin Laden for years; the only thing that was different now was that bin Ladin had the attention of the entire world.

Because America has been waging a War on Terror for seven years, it is time we all ask whether we are winning this war. And if not, why?

So I take it upon myself to find an answer to that question, in an attempt to do so I set out to read two books with opposite perspectives on America's success in the War on Terror.

Those two books were Richard Miniter's "Shadow War," and "Imperial Hubris," accredited to an anonymous author.

Initially, Richard Miniter is primarily a journalist, who has spent much of his recent time writing on the War on Terror and bin Laden. He has appeared as an expert on many TV news programs from CNN to Fox News.

In his most recent book, Shadow War, Miniter tracks successes of US and other intelligence agencies. Miniter argues that successes consisting of capturing or killing two thirds of al-Qaeda's leaders, tracking down bin Ladin's private fleet of 15 ships, and preventing countless number of terrorist attacks on America and America's allies is clear evidence that we are winning the war on terror.

Enter the second book, Imperial Hubris. The author asked to remain anonymous because he is a senior member of America's intelligence community, a veteran of over 20 years of service, and if he used his name he would face undesirable consequences.

At the heart of this book, the author argues that America is unequivocally losing the War on Terror. The author supports this claim by first developing a clear analysis of our enemy, bin Ladin.

He then draws links between reasons why bin Ladin fights, and how American policies fuel bin Ladin's hatred.

Such policies include American soldiers on Islamic ground and U.S. support of apostate Islamic regimes, such as Saudi Arabia.

The author crystallizes his argument by stating, "As a result, I think it fair to conclude that the United States of America remains bin Ladin's only indispensable ally."

Although al-Qaeda will eventually fall, terror will continue because the same reasons that drove al-Qaeda to fight will continue to exist, and drive others to fight as well.

The author argues that this is allowed to happen in part because America's hubris, or extreme arrogance, that convinces us that we can win without redressing our policies.

After reading these two books on the War on Terror, several conclusions can be made.

First, it is reasonable to note that America has made some progress in attacking al-Qaeda, as Miniter points out.

Another conclusion that can be made is that the War on Terror is far from being won. Imperial Hubris clearly and distinctly outlines the depth and breadth of the problems we face, and explains how in many ways we have made no progress in our war.

But to return to my original question, are we winning the War on Terror? We have displaced and disrupted al-Qaeda, but we are not closer to winning the war, so no.

RCPD job fair open today

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Riley County Police Department will be answering questions and giving tours during a job fair today.

The fair will take place from 3 to 7 p.m. at the RCPD, 1001 S. Seth Child Road.

Lt. Tim Hegarty, training officer, said this is the first time RCPD is having a job fair there.

"We felt that it might be good to bring prospective employees into where they would be working," he said.

Hegarty said having the job fair is a goal RCPD set for 2004. This allows the department to give tours, have larger displays and have various officers answering questions, he said.

If you go

Riley County Police Department Job Fair

When: 3 to 7 p.m. today
Where: RCPD, 1001 S. Seth Child Road
How much: Free

The fair is targeted for spring 2005 graduates, but everyone is welcome to attend, he said.

"We want good, quality people to work for us," Hegarty said. "We want to talk to anyone that has an interest in us."

There will be police officers, correctional officers and dispatchers there to answer any questions, Dawn Silva, human resources technician, said.

"It'll be nice, because we'll have people that actually work in those positions out available to answer questions," she said.

Silva said she will be there to answer questions people might have about hiring, such as what types of tests are given.

Hegarty said the police officers are currently fully staffed, but RCPD will be looking for five more correctional officers for 2005 because the jail will be expanded. RCPD is also encouraging people interested in dispatching and clerking to attend.

Depending on the turnout, the fair could become a yearly event, he said.

"It depends on how successful we are," Hegarty said.

"It doesn't take a lot of work. The main thing is getting the word out."

50 die in fighting near Baghdad

By Robert H. Reid
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq – U.S. soldiers battled insurgents northeast of Baghdad on Monday in clashes that killed more than 50 people. Some guerrillas were said to be "fighting to the death" inside Fallujah, where American forces struggled to clear pockets of resistance.

At least five suicide car bombers targeted American troops elsewhere in volatile Sunni Muslim areas north and west of the capital, wounding at least nine Americans. Three of those bombings occurred nearly simultaneously in locations between Fallujah and the insurgent stronghold of Ramadi, the U.S. command said.

The zone between Fallujah and Ramadi was one of at least three areas Monday in which insurgents pulled off almost-simultaneous attacks against U.S. or Iraqi forces, suggesting a level of military sophistication and planning not seen in the early months of the insurgency last year.

Pressing their own offensive in central and northern Iraq, insurgents attacked police stations, Iraqi security forces, U.S. military convoys and oil installations across a wide area of the Sunni heartland.

In a speech found Monday on the Internet, a speaker said to be Abu Musab al-Zarqawi, the country's most feared terror leader, called on his followers to "shower" the Americans "with rockets and mortars" because U.S. forces were spread too thin as they seek to "finish off Islam in Fallujah."

The worst reported fighting Monday took place about 35 miles northeast of Baghdad after assaults, at almost the same time, on police stations in Baqouba and its twin city, Buhriz.

Gunmen abducted police Col. Qassim Mohammed, took him to the Buhriz police station and threatened to kill him if police didn't surrender the station. When police refused, the gunmen tied the colonel's hands behind his back and shot him dead.

Officials: Saddam made billions from fraud

By Pauline Jelinek
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – For more than a decade, Saddam Hussein's government raised more than $21.3 billion in illegal revenue by subverting U.N. sanctions against Iraq including the humanitarian oil-for-food program, congressional investigators estimated Monday.

That's double the $10 billion the Iraqi president previously was alleged to have siphoned off. The earlier estimate included only the oil-for-food program. The new, higher number includes illicit profits from efforts like the illegal smuggling of oil in the years of sanctions that preceded the humanitarian program that began in 1996.

"The magnitude of fraud perpetrated by Saddam Hussein in contravention of U.N. sanctions and the oil-for-food program is staggering," Sen. Norm Coleman, R-Minn., said Monday as his Senate Government Affairs permanent subcommittee on investigations began a hearing on the subject.

"This is like an onion – we just keep uncovering more layers and more layers," he said.

New figures on Iraq's alleged surcharges, kickbacks and oil-smuggling are based on new documents obtained by the committee's investigative panel. The documents illustrate how Iraqi officials, foreign companies, and sometimes politicians allegedly contrived to bring vast illicit gains to Saddam's government and how he tried to buy support abroad for a move to get the United Nations to lift sanctions, officials said.

Perhaps the biggest problem with the humanitarian program was that it allowed Saddam to decide who would get oil contracts, said Charles Duelfer, the last chief U.S. arms inspector in Iraq who also studied Saddam's efforts to subvert sanctions.

Giving the Iraqi president discretion over contracts "was the largest lever that we offered him," Duelfer told the committee.

In March, the congressional General Accounting Office, now called the Government Accountability Office, said Saddam's government had siphoned $10 billion from oil sales.

Congressional investigators said they arrived at double that number in figures released Monday partly by considering an expanded period, from 1991 to 2003, rather than counting only from the 1996 beginning of the oil-for-food program.

Once-proud world of pro boxing now a joke

ANTHONY MENDOZA

Which sport is the biggest joke right now?

No, not the NBA and its players' inability to make a shot outside of 12 feet, or the NHL, which enters the 62nd day of its lockout due to a labor dispute.

It's not college football's BCS and the lack of a playoff system in Division-I. The Big 12 North is not even as pathetic as this.

The undisputed winner of the most pathetic sport is heavyweight professional boxing.

This past Saturday would have once been the biggest spectacle and payday for Don King, as two heavyweight titles were up for grabs on the same night, both at the historic Madison Square Garden.

Instead you had names like IBF titleholder Chris Byrd against Jameel McCline.

Then there was WBA champion John Ruiz, who earlier this year lost to light heavyweight Roy Jones Jr., who in turn lost his next two fights in his own weight class, going against everybody's favorite punching bag, Andrew Golota.

The same Golota who is more famous for trying to give Riddick Bowe a vasectomy with numerous shots below the belt, then he is for anything.

Oh yes, there was also someone named Evander Holyfield on the under card.

It is clear after Saturday night that Holyfield at 42 is not the same fighter that he was at 32.

The former four-time heavyweight champion of the world lost in a decision to journeyman Larry Donald. The loss was his seventh in his last nine fights, but like all boxers who have come before him, he will not hang the gloves up.

"I still feel that I can rise to the occasion, so why not continue to pursue the dream?" Holyfield said after the fight. The same fight in which he fell to the canvas in the first round after throwing a left hook that missed its target. "I've never given up on anything."

At some point you have to stop, and since Holyfield refuses to give up on his sport or himself, I will do it for him.

Once known as the sweet science, boxing is a jumbled mess.

It is a sport without a backbone run by sleazy promoters such as King and Bob Arum who ooze greed and corruption.

It also is a made-for-television sport without a true superstar to tune in and watch. While lower weight classes have such draws as Bernard Hopkins, Felix "Tito" Trinidad, Shane Mosely and Oscar De La Hoya, the heavyweights have nothing to offer.

Not even the return of the circus known as Mike Tyson can save this once-proud sport.

Tyson sells pay-per-view subscriptions and creates an enormous amount of media buzz, but he does not do it with precision in the ring that bobbed and weaved him to becoming the youngest heavyweight world champion at 19-years old.

Instead he sells tickets with the possibility of him devouring his opponent or his children.

Until a heavyweight with skill and personality emerges, 50 rounds of heavyweight boxing like Saturday will continue to go unnoticed.

Anthony is junior in print journalism. You can e-mail him at sports@spub.ksu.edu.

The good life

Former Wildcat Leckey enjoying young professional career

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's that time of the year when students start focusing on the end of semester. However, mid-November brings about a different focus for Nick Leckey.

Leckey is thinking about a potential playoff run for his NFL team, the Arizona Cardinals.

Leckey
BACKUP-CENTER FOR ARIZONA CARDINALS

"Right now, we're trying to make a run to the playoffs, and it's looking good," Leckey said. "They didn't make it last year, but the team has really come together this year."

Leckey, former team captain and center at K-State, has tasted success. Last season, Leckey led the Wildcats to the Big 12 Championship. Now, a year later, as backup-center and wedge man on kickoff returns, Leckey is ready to taste success with the Cardinals.

Ryan Lilja, former offensive lineman and teammate of Leckey's at K-State and current Indianapolis Colt, said he believes Leckey is just what the Cardinals' offense needs.

"Leckey's been in big games. He's got all the accolades, and he backs it up," Lilja said. "He's a guy that everyone looks up to, myself included."

But why is Nick Leckey special? What sets him apart from any other rookie in the NFL these days?

Maybe it's his 2003 first-team All-America selection by ESPN and Sports Illustrated. Perhaps it's his 2003 All-Big 12 Conference first-team pick.

According to former teammates and friends, it's Leckey's demeanor.

"Nick was the anchor of our offensive line our last two seasons at K-State, but he wasn't the guy out there yelling at everyone. He led by example," Lilja said.

Senior Mike Johnson, current center for the Wildcats and former teammate of Leckey, agreed with Lilja that Leckey's actions speak louder than his words.

"Leckey brought confidence and a positive mindset to the team," Johnson said. "It made you want to work hard being next to him. You knew he was going to get the job done, and he was going to get it done right."

Tennis team begins off-season tasks

By Stacy Ryan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It may be the off-season, but there is no down time for the K-State women's tennis team.

The Wildcats completed their fall play Nov. 5-7 in the Thunderbird Invitational at Arizona State.

Coach Steve Bietau said he was pleased with the way his players competed throughout the fall tournaments and thought the tournament at Arizona State was a good finish.

"All of them made a lot of progress in the fall. We were solid and we had some good performances and some consistent performances," Bietau said.

Bietau said even though the team will not be competing again until January, the off-time will be used to condition and finish out the academic aspect of the semester strong.

"The next six weeks there will be a big emphasis on conditioning and we'll take a little break from tennis. Fitness is the number one thing, and we want them to concentrate on school," Bietau said.

In addition to conditioning, Bietau said he will be working one-on-one with the players to make minor adjustments on the court.

Freshman Tamar Kvaratskhelia said the team will also try to improve mentally.

"The coaches are trying to work with us on how to condition, think and focus on the court. We are working on the psychological and theoretical aspects of the game, making plans and figuring out mental things, like what to do and what

Wildcat rowers win Sunflower Showdown

By Stacy Ryan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This weekend K-State earned bragging rights for another year.

The women's rowing team competed against Kansas in the Sunflower Showdown on the Kansas River this weekend and came back with wins over KU in three of the five boat races.

K-State's First Varsity Eight boat beat KU's boat by three seconds with a time of 6:28.5. Wins from the Second Novice Eight and the Novice Four helped to seal the win for the Wildcats, who earned 12 out of the 22 points up for grabs.

Coach Patrick Sweeney said he was pleased with the way the team competed Friday.

"They did well as a team. The two novice boats won their races, which were important swinging points that helped us win, and our First Varsity boat won their race, and it is always nice to win the big one," Sweeney said.

At the beginning of the first varsity race KU got a quick start against the Wildcats, but Sweeney said the team maintained its speed and that was important in helping them win.

Senior Linzi Hauldren said it was important for the team to stay focused within their boat.

"KU pulled ahead first, but we didn't let that affect us, and we tried to keep the rhythm and focus on our boat. We did a good job of pushing through them quickly. We didn't stop or back down, we just kept going," Hauldren said.

Sophomore Danielle Scott said keeping up the intensity also helped the team.

"We stayed consistent through the race. We kept it intense, and it never felt like it died down. KU had a weak point and we capitalized – you could see the power that we have been working on in practice," Scott said.

Along with the win over KU, the Wildcats earned a combined seven top-10 finishes from their fall races. The team now has a break until their first spring action in March.

Sweeney said the team had a good fall, but now it is time to

Bonds

Capping a season filled with suspicion and success, the San Francisco Giants left fielder became the oldest player to become the MVP of a major North American professional league. The 40-year-old Giant received 24 of 32 first-place votes and 407 points Monday in balloting by the Baseball Writers' Association of America to earn the award for the fourth straight season.

Los Angeles third baseman Adrian Beltre was second, getting six first-place votes and 311 points, followed by St. Louis first baseman Albert Pujols with 247 points.

Bonds is the only baseball player with more than three MVP awards and the only one to win more than two in a row.

CFB | Oklahoma hangs on to No. 2 in BCS rankings

Computers prefer Oklahoma over Auburn — and Southern California.

The Sooners held on to second place in the Bowl Championship Series standings Monday, staying ahead of third-place Auburn because of a stronger computer ranking.

Last week, the Sooners led the Tigers by .0567. That lead is down to .0271.

The Tigers made up ground on the Sooners in the polls on Sunday, tying Oklahoma for second in The Associated Press Top 25 and getting within two points of No. 2 in the coaches poll.

Pop-punk debut defies the norms

"The Futureheads"
Album review by Mark Sibilla

Pop punk – nothing will induce groans of repulsion or dry heaves of disgust within a music fan like these two words.

This is somewhat unfair, but unfortunately in a music industry where styles are bastardized all in the name of profit, it can only be expected that punk be sugarcoated for mass consumption.

Johnny Rotten must be spinning in his grave.

Fortunately we have bands such as England's The Futureheads with their self-titled debut that steals both elements of true pop and punk back from the mainstream and create their own style in the process.

"The Futureheads" is truly an album that has to be heard in order to appreciate its brilliance.

To describe the bands sound is nearly impossible. They have elements of bands from Wire and Gang of Four, to The Beach Boys and hints of a cappella.

A band with less talent would flounder with so many musically diverse background influences, but The Futureheads have both the musical and vocal chops to pull it off in spades.

The Futureheads are full of creative energy with angular guitar riffs, powerful drumming, and wonderful vocal talents that mesh perfectly and recall the harmonies of The Beatles, The Byrds and The Beach Boys.

The Futureheads burst out of the gate with "Le Garage." A short guitar introduction leads into an excellent mix of 'do-dos' and 'ahs' that sends shivers up the spine.

The album never lets up on the excitement level set by the opening track.

Song "A to B" opens with the band harmonizing the line "A to B" and then a single voice singing "It is a shame/It's a real pity/When you can't raise the energy to get from A to B."

Then the voices trade lines of verse with lines of chorus back and forth throughout the song over a strong drumbeat and the jangle of their guitars.

The Futureheads pull off true a cappella on the song, "Danger of the Water." The song's harmonization is dazzling.

Perhaps the strongest track on the album is a cover of Kate Bush's "Hounds of Love." It is a wonderful re-interpretation of the original; though it might sound cheesy, The Futureheads truly capture the feel and innocence of falling in love within the constraints of a three-minute song.

The Futureheads prove strongest when placing vocal harmonies in the foreground, and there is plenty of that here to satisfy the listener.

The Futureheads have taken elements from numerous bands and styles and combined them to create their own unique sound and style. The effect is an exceptional debut from a very talented band.

Nationally renowned professor to lead forum on gender tonight

By Will Klusener
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State students can explore their roles as men and women in society at a lecture tonight.

Ordinary Women sponsors a forum presented by Michael Kimmel, a leading authority on men and the masculine gender role, this evening at Forum Hall.

Kimmel
PROFESSOR

Kimmel is a professor at the State University of New York and has been nationally recognized for his work with gender roles, said Summer Lewis, senior in sociology, Spanish and women's studies.

"He is considered a leading source on men and masculinity," Lewis, an O.W. member, said. "His work has been used in numerous classrooms, on national news program and featured in national magazines and newspapers."

Lewis said Ordinary Women is dedicated to enriching the lives of men and women on campus, and hosting Kimmel will enhance their message.

"O.W.'s mission is complimented by Dr. Kimmel's message," Lewis said. "We seek to improve the lives of men and women at K-State, in Manhattan, and everywhere by taking action against everyday injustices against women such as domestic violence, sexual assault, homophobia, racism, sexism and unrealistic gender roles."

If you go
Forum on gender roles
Who: Michael Kimmel
When: 8 tonight
Where: Forum Hall

Trisha Martin, senior in elementary education, said Ordinary Women was founded to provide women with an opportunity to discuss and learn about everyday troubles faced by modern women. She said it allows K-State students and Manhattan residents an opportunity to broaden their sociocultural understanding.

"We provide a space for people, men and women, who identify themselves as feminists, to gather and not feel alone," said Martin, president of O.W. "Anyone can join because different people provide different perspectives, and we're always looking for new ones (perspectives)."

Kimmel, a sociologist, seeks to dispel preconceived societal notions of how gender roles affect the relationship between men and women, specifically college students.

"Dr. Kimmel rejects the ideas of biological determinists who argue that biology-hormones or genes-make men and women so different that we must fulfill very different societal roles," said Angela Hubler, associate professor of women's studies.

Kimmel is also the national spokesman for NOMAS (National Organization for Men Against Sexism) and seeks to curb violence against women.

"(Kimmel's) particular area of expertise is masculinity, and he argues that in order to end sexual violence against women, manhood must be redefined," Hubler said. "If we look at the fact that men are 99 percent of those arrested for rape, 88 percent for murder, 83 percent for family violence, and so on, this seems critically important."

Lewis said K-State students should attend Kimmel's forum not only out of desire to learn, but out of desire to enhance their overall understanding of the ways in which men and women interact.

"Dr. Kimmel speaks about numerous issues that affect all KSU students – we are all part of this world and are constantly interacting," Lewis said. "Students can expect to walk away with a better understanding of gender, and this creates awareness and a more informed and well-rounded student body."

Tom Waits experiments with new album

"Real Gone"
★★★½☆
Album review by Jessica Grant

Unlike many musicians who began their careers in the 1970s, Tom Waits hasn't damaged his hearing.

In several interviews, Waits has claimed to have an uncanny sense for sound. The most minute rustles, clanks and rumbles are translated into music as soon as they hit Waits ears.

This explains much of the musical composition of Waits' latest release, "Real Gone."

For "Real Gone," Waits ditched his signature piano, opting instead to become his own beat box. Bizarre as this may sound, Waits manages to make every gurgle, sputter and eerie choke worthwhile.

Another important element to "Real Gone" is the accompanying musicians. Marc Ribot joins Waits on guitar for the first time since the 1980s. Les Claypool and Larry Taylor also take turns playing bass on the album.

Taking cues from more recent rustic albums like "Mule Variations," this release sounds like Bob Dylan or Leonard Cohen on their most grimy and desolate of days.

The album opens with "Top of the Hill," which features beatboxing from Waits and turntable scratching from his son, Casey. The song builds to a frenzy over a simple electric guitar melody and is the perfect piece to begin an album that is signature Waits.

Pieces like the somewhat maudlin war-is-bad ballad "The Day After Tomorrow" and the unforgivably long "Sins of My Father" are unable to bring down the tone of such a solid album.

Some of the most rewarding songs on the album are the rhythm heavy pieces. "Baby Gonna Leave Me" defines syncopated blues with Waits grumbling to accompany Claypool's bass line, while shakers keep the hot time for Ribot's simple yet searing riffs.

"Don't Go into that Barn" finds Waits howling a cryptic warning that highlights his natural prowess as an American storyteller.

"Real Gone" is a reflection of Waits' ability to constantly morph his sound as a musician.

It almost seems unfair to label Tom Waits simply as a "musician."

Waits is a dynamic character who is constantly redefining himself as a multi-faceted artist.

Courtesy art

On one hand, Waits is a croaking poet with a penchant for absurd stories that he layers over electric blues or sophisticated strings.

On the other hand, Waits composes for theater or acts in both Hollywood and independent films, his most recent acting project being the Jim Jarmusch film, "Coffee and Cigarettes."

This array of projects has led to Waits becoming one of the most important contemporary figures in any genre.

CBS fires producer who broke into 'CSI'

CBS News has fired the producer responsible for breaking into "CSI: NY" last week for a special report on Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat's death, a CBS executive said Monday.

The news report came during the last five minutes of the forensics mystery last Wednesday, prompting viewer complaints and leading CBS to repeat the show Friday.

The producer responsible ignored network policy to contact a senior executive before interrupting a regularly scheduled program for a news report, the source said.

With Arafat reportedly near death for several days, CBS News had left explicit instructions for how to deal with that event: run a news "crawl" at the bottom of the screen and direct viewers to the next newscast for more information.

not to do," Kvaratskhelia said.

The Wildcats had a strong fall season with individual and team successes. Kvaratskhelia captured first-place finishes in two tournaments and ended her first fall season with a singles record of 14-2. Senior Maria Rosenberg worked her way towards the top of the K-State all-time career singles win list and is currently tied for second.

Rosenberg said she was pleased with the fall season and is ready to keep working to improve before the spring.

"This was the best fall season out of all of my previous seasons. Everyone is motivated and the team atmosphere is good. We can do a lot of good things in the spring, and we have the potential to be a really good team," Rosenberg said.

Freshman Olga Klimova said one thing helped her this fall, Rosenberg's influence as a leader and friend.

"She is a good leader, and she helped us from the beginning with what to do or not do. She really helped to show us the system of the university and the tournaments," Klimova said.

Rosenberg said she tries to do things right and wants to be a good example so her teammates respect her as a person and player.

According to Kvaratskhelia, Rosenberg does this and also does a good job of making everyone feel important.

Kvaratskhelia said Rosenberg is always encouraging and supportive of her teammates.

"She is the captain of our team, but she doesn't ever act like she is higher up than us," Kvaratskhelia said.

"I never feel inferior; she always acts like we are on the same playing field."

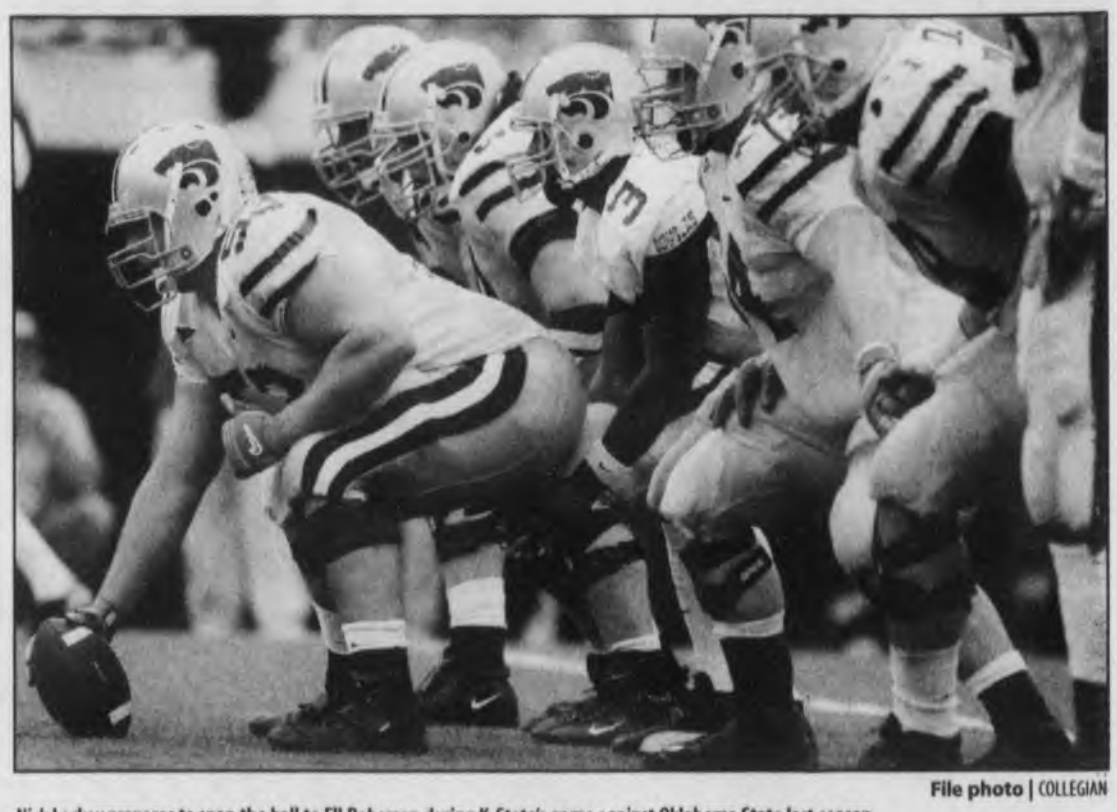
turn towards winter training.

"It is really up to the girls and how dedicated they are. If they back off, they are going to have a mediocre spring, but if they push they can have a really good spring," Sweeney said.

Scott said even though it is not the most fun, winter training is the most important factor for the spring season.

"We have a good base and we just work on endurance and getting stronger. It's not the fun part, but it's crucial; racing is really the icing on the cake. If we work hard now it will pay off in the spring and be rewarding to race at our top peak," Scott said.



Hauldren said when the spring competitions roll around the team is looking forward to putting up a fight against ranked-teams.

While preparation for the spring is a top priority, Scott said this weekend's performance was something to savor.

"It's exciting to beat them (KU), and it feels good to have the cup in our boathouse and look at it everyday. It shows that we are staying consistent and building as a team," she said.

LECKEY | Former teammates believe ex-Wildcat has great NFL potential

Nick Leckey prepares to snap the ball to Ell Roberson during K-State's game against Oklahoma State last season.

While Leckey's former teammates found him to be influential, Leckey said the coaching staff made him a better player.

"The best thing about K-State football, besides the great people, was the discipline," Leckey said. "We were always expected to be on 'Cat time,' which meant reporting to meetings five minutes early."

Leckey, the first true freshman to start on the offensive line under Snyder, said the K-State coaches and their demand for discipline helped him mature as a player.

"We could always count on being fully-prepared for a game, thanks to our coaches," Leckey said. "They emphasized fundamental football throughout the course of the season."

Lilja, on the other hand, attributed much of Leckey's talent to his insight of the game.

"Nick is a real student of the game. He studies his opponents," Lilja said. "It gives him a leg up because he goes into games knowing what to expect."

Last April, Leckey's talent and hard work did not go unrecognized. The Arizona Cardinals picked him up in the sixth round of the NFL Draft.

Despite the late pick, Leckey said he was thrilled to be drafted.

"The draft was extremely nerve-wracking. It is so hectic and unpredictable," Leckey said. "I was just happy to be drafted."

After securing a spot on the Cardinals' roster, Leckey made the move to Arizona to begin practicing with the team. Along with the feeling of excitement, however, came the realization that nothing is certain in the pros, Leckey said.

"One major difference in the NFL is that nothing is guaranteed. You can get out whenever," Leckey said. "You always have to be at your best. It's business."

In the NFL, money matters, and unlike college, money is an issue that can define your role and status on the team, Leckey said.

"It's different – there are a lot more politics in the NFL," Leckey said. "Salaries play a huge role in playing time and roster spots. There are times when it feels like money is everywhere. It's almost like a fashion show."

Aside from the politics, Leckey said he is enjoying the many benefits of the NFL. In addition to the fame and salary that go along with being a professional, Leckey said the best part of the NFL is the treatment players receive.

"You get taken care of better (in the NFL) because the season is so long," Leckey said. "Not to mention, you're an investment for the owners."

Leckey said he also feels fortunate to be playing for the Cardinals. After missing the playoffs last year, the Cardinals acquired a new coach in Dennis Green, and with a 4-5 record, Arizona is a playoff contender.

"I love Arizona," Leckey said. "We got a new coach with a great attitude, and it's infectious."

Although pleased with his career and life in general, Leckey said he has a long way to go to achieve his goals.

"Eventually, I want to be a full-time starter at center. If that doesn't work out, then I want to be a ski bum in Utah," Leckey said.

Unfortunately for Leckey, Lilja said he does not foresee skiing, unless it's Spring Break, in Leckey's future.

"Leckey has all the assets of a great player – he's quick, smart, strong and a hard-worker," Lilja said. "He'll have a long and successful career in the NFL."

SHELTER | Staff works to accommodate disadvantaged

Staff members also have made the effort to prevent homelessness and have renewed their service focus at the facility.

"If someone needed to make a long-distance phone call, we really try to see that it happens, where before that may have not happened," Semple said. "We're seeing how we can provide help with transportation for needed trips to get a driver's license or medical care. You can walk, but it's a long way to the driver's license building.

"It's a positive step to helping people and we're able to take that next step."

All of the organization's houses are full, with 25 people living in the shelter house and additional families and individuals living in the two transitional houses in Manhattan.

As a result, the shelter is looking at an expansion project to build more transitional living houses – along with a capital campaign project this year that will get the entire community involved.

Guests at the shelter have noticed the renewed focus as well.

"They're very impressed with how much more invested they feel," Semple said. "Their morale is up, their self-esteem is up. They want to donate things when they leave here – they're so appreciate of this organization. It is hope."

Thomas Koppe, night shift worker and senior in speech communication, said the change in leadership has been beneficial for not only the guests, but the employees as well. Koppe began working at the shelter as a volunteer for a social work class last year, and then moved into a paid clerical support position this summer before becoming a night shift worker this fall.

Semple's past night-time experience, he said, has changed how the night shifts are run.

"It's nice that she worked night staff at the shelter before," Koppe said.

"She gives us freedom and is really good about stepping back and handling things. Mandy is awesome – she's always energetic, and it's contagious."

Facts about the Manhattan Emergency Shelter, Inc

- Through October the shelter has served 432 people this year. This is an average of 43 people per month, which means it will probably serve more than 515 people for the year.
- In 2003, the shelter served 472 people total. Of the 472 people, 317 were males and 155 were females.
- The organization consists of one emergency shelter and two transitional living houses. The shelter houses up to 26 individuals at any given time. The Sunflower House houses seven individuals while the Fremont House has up to eight people living in it for up to one year.

ARAFAT | Interfaith dialogs vital in peace process

viewed Arafat as a leader and whether they think he has stayed on too long," he said.

Fallon said the new leadership might have an effect on the different religious groups in the region.

"It has the indication for Muslims, Jews and Christians living together and respecting one another and hopefully sharing in the site of Jerusalem as a sacred area for all religious faiths," he said.

In the past, the K-State committee of religions has sponsored dialogs between Palestinian and Israeli students in the hope of building a greater understanding and acceptance, Fallon said.

The committee also has sponsored an interfaith dialog involving students from several religions, including Muslims, Jews, Christians, Hindus and Buddhists.

"I think we have built some very solid relationships amongst students and faculty in these major religions, and it gives me hope that ultimately our world would do the same," Fallon said.

SUPERINTENDENT | Board to choose by February

Heim said board members do not have to choose from the top five choices; it is, however, recommended.

"That's what they hired us for," he said.

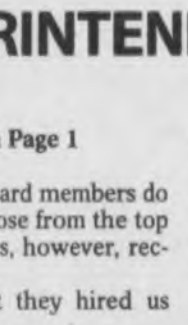
The salary for the incoming superintendent will be negotiable, Board Member Dorothy Soldan said.

"When you interview people coming in for this job, you really need to have a little bit of flexibility so when you identify your preferred candidate you can hopefully get them," she said. "It's very competitive so you want to position yourself in the best way."

Board members will set the salary so that it is comparable to similar districts, Soldan said.

"We know what the superintendent salaries are throughout the state," she said. "We look at similar size school districts' information like that, so we'll use that for our guidelines."

Soldan said the new superintendent is expected to be chosen in February.



In the meantime, she said, the board anticipates there will be several candidates for the position.

"We have a very special school system here, but also lots of people would like to come to Manhattan because of its proximity to K-State, and also Manhattan is also a very nice community to live in and to serve," Soldan said.

CABINET | Replacement candidates begin to emerge officials such as Vice President Dick Cheney and Rumsfeld over how to proceed in Iraq.

Powell
SECRETARY OF STATE

In his most memorable presentation, Powell delivered the administration line before the United Nations and a world audience on the rationale for ousting Saddam Hussein.

"Secretary Powell's departure is a loss to the moderate internationalist voices in the Bush administration," said New Mexico Gov. Bill Richardson.

Paige, 71, is the first black person to serve in the job. He oversaw Bush's signature education law, the No Child Left Behind Act. The leading candidate to replace Paige is Margaret Spellings, Bush's domestic policy adviser.

Abraham, 52, a former senator from Michigan, joined the administration after he lost a bid for reelection. Abraham struggled to persuade Congress to endorse the president's broad energy agenda.

Veneman, 55, the daughter of a California peach grower, was the nation's first woman agriculture secretary. Speculation on a potential replacement has centered on Chuck Conner, White House farm adviser; Allen Johnson, the chief U.S. negotiator on agricultural issues; Bill Hawks, undersecretary for marketing and regulatory programs, and Charles Kruse, president of the Missouri Farm Bureau Federation.

CNN analyst: Divisions in America require healing

Schneider
POLITICAL ANALYST

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Americans, who have become deeply divided, are yearning for a leader to heal the nation.

Bill Schneider, CNN's senior political analyst, said the reelection of George W. Bush shows the division in American politics today.

It's been a very dramatic four years, Schneider said, with the Sept. 11 terrorist attack, anthrax attacks, an economic recession, same-sex marriage debates and two wars.

But despite all the turmoil, voters have stayed with Republicans.

"Most amazingly, the map of the 2004 elections looks like 2000," he said.

The surprise of the election is not that Bush got reelected but the fact moral values were the most deciding factor. That result can be attributed to Bush's campaign adviser, Karl Rove, Schneider said.

"What Karl Rove did was organize a stealth army of evangelical voters," he said. "They pulled a surprise attack on Election Day."

However, throughout history, Schneider said the best question to predict how people will vote is "How often do you go to church?"

Most analysts had predicted the war in the Iraq would be the deciding factor, however.

"This was supposed to be an Iraq election," he said. "The mystery of this election was Iraq was not the dominant issue."

Bush's success came with presenting Democrat John Kerry's plan for Iraq as the Bush plan. However, exit polls still showed a majority of Americans still unhappy with Iraq policies.

"He was reelected in spite of serious public reservations," Schneider said.

What America was looking for in both the 2000 and 2004 election was a president who could unite. Bush was elected in 2000 because of his promise to be a "uniter, not a divider."

"As president, the country is more divided than it has been in decades," Schneider said.

But Kerry wasn't the answer, either.

"It's difficult for people to see you as a uniter if you are seen as wavering and inconsistent," he said.

But there is hope, Schneider said, if candidates realize what is dividing America.

Union alarm forces evacuation

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Patrons evacuated the K-State Student Union Tuesday morning after an emergency alarm sounded.

Jack Connaughton, associate director of the Union said the alarm was set off by smoke in the Union Ballroom

"We were getting ready for lunch in the Ballroom and one of our warmers emitted some smoke," he said. "There was no actual fire."

Sensors in the Ballroom reacted to the smoke and activated the evacuation alarm throughout the building.

However, it didn't take long to detect why the sensor went off, Connaughton said.

"Our maintenance staff looked right at the computer and could tell right away where the alarm was going off," he said. "Then they went upstairs and saw it was just smoke."

After about five minutes, Connaughton announced that it was clear for patrons to enter the building again.

"Most people headed for the exit," he said. "It was a time when we weren't extremely busy so we were kind of lucky from that standpoint."

The sensors that activated the alarm were included in the 1998-2000 renovations, Connaughton said.

"When we remodeled, our highest priority was to have a safe building," he said.

Connaughton said similar situations have occurred when heat or steam activated the sensors.

"It doesn't take much to activate it," he said. "On the plus side that's good for our customers because we get 15,000 to 17,000 people in this building throughout the day so it's comforting to know we have a safe system."

Prior to the renovations, the Union's emergency system was only a series of pull alarms, Connaugton said.

Now, the Union has about 300 emergency devices, John Frese, building engineer, said.

"We have smoke detectors, pull stations and air duct detectors," he said.

Frese said the devices are checked twice a year by Honeywell, the manufacturer of the safety devices, during a visual inspection. The sensors are tested by the company once a year.

The crowd cheered, whistled and laughed as three K-State men showed off what God gave them Tuesday night in the 4th annual Moore Hall drag queen contest.

About 60 people were in attendance in the basement of Moore Hall.

Graduate student Matthew Vanden Boogart engaged the audience and gave away candy with his co-host, Latoyska Howard, freshman in open option.

Chrystal Wainright, freshman in accounting, said the emcees were her favorite part of the show.

"The emcees were so funny," she said. "I loved how they interacted with the audience."

Vanden Boogart approached male audience members and asked them what their name would be if they were a drag queen.

The contest began with a question and answer session, followed by a talent competition and closed with the evening gown competition.

The participants each chose a name for their performance.

Jarrod Carney, freshman in animal science, tied his hair back with a hair band and went by the name Jaretta.

Kyle Braden, freshman in secondary education, donned a curly blond wig and was named Miss Behavin.

Miss Nottaman was portrayed by Nick Zimmerman, senior in information systems and a Moore Hall Resident Assistant.

The audience screamed and hollered with laughter during the talent competition, which featured the song "Sandra Dee," a cheerleader and Shania Twain's "Feel Like a Woman."

Karla Vander Lippe, sophomore in German, said her favorite talent showcase was the cheerleader, Miss Nottaman.

"She was the most enthusiastic during her performance," she said. "And she looked the most like a woman."

CAMPUS CHRONICLES

HEADLINES FROM THE NATION'S UNIVERSITIES

Aggie bonfire tradition continues

COLLEGE STATION, Texas– Matt Barnes, a freshman environmental design major, has experienced Aggie traditions first-hand, taking a role in building the Texas A&M University off-campus bonfire.

Barnes said the work and relationships built prior to Student Bonfire Burn were more important than the bonfire.

"We don't build it to watch it burn; we burn it so we can build another one," Barnes said.

Emmanuel Garcia, a graduate student in Spanish and member of the Bonfire Coalition, said he thinks Student Bonfire so far is admirable.

In 1999, 12 Aggies were killed and 27 others were injured when a stack of more than 5,000 bonfire logs collapsed.

Garcia said discussion of the future of a possible on-campus bonfire should be postponed until litigation is complete and after the Bonfire Memorial dedication.

"We don't want to disrespect the families of those who died," Garcia said. "(When) the Bonfire Memorial dedication is over, then we can move on."

EFFECTS OF DRINKING LINGER LONGER

DURHAM, N.C. – Results from a clinical study conducted at Duke University Medical Center indicate that alcoholics who have recently stopped drinking still have higher-level thinking impairment. The DUMC team, which released the results in September, hoped the study's findings will have an impact on treatment strategies for recovering alcoholics.

"In the long run, the question we are trying to answer is, are there some people [so] impaired due to alcohol consumption that they really can't make good use of the clinical treatment and therapy we offer," said Dr. Roy Stein, study collaborator and clinical associate in psychiatry and behavioral sciences. "[We want to] identify those people and bolster their treatment to compensate for it."

COLLEGES TO RECEIVE SUICIDE PREVENTION FUNDS

CHICAGO – On Oct. 21, President Bush passed a bill increasing the funding for suicide awareness and prevention within the college community with hopes of breaking that trend.

The Garrett Lee Smith Memorial Act authorizes the government to give $82 million to college mental-health centers during a three-year period.

The government has taken steps in the past few years to ensure that help for suicidal individuals is available.

One such step was taken in October 2003, when a different bill was passed to provide suicide awareness programs for colleges and universities.

SOONER RUSH TO END?

NORMAN, Okla. – University of Oklahoma President David L. Boren said he is considering eliminating summer rush and banning alcohol-related events by any student organizations during the week, including Thursday nights.

"We're certainly looking at ending summer rush as we know it today because summer rush is totally unsupervised," he said.

Boren said a lot of problems occur during summer rush.

"We may allow a couple of organized activities during the summer, but they would be more like official dry rush is now," he said. "They'd be very carefully supervised."

Scholars interview today

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Four K-State students were chosen to interview at the state level for Rhodes Scholarships today in Kansas City, Mo., at the Kauffman Foundation.

After the students are interviewed, two students from the state level will go on to compete in the district competition Saturday in Minnesota.

Jim Hohenbary, scholarship adviser, said in 1990 both students from K-State won two slots at the state level and then advanced on to the district level.

At the district level only four scholarships are awarded per district, with a total of 32 scholarships awarded overall.

Hohenbary said the Rhodes Scholarship funds two to three years at Oxford University in England, which is estimated to cost between $40,000-$60,000.

The Rhodes Scholarship is one of the oldest scholarships at 102-years-old.

K-State's first Rhodes Scholar was awarded in 1928. Since then, K-State has produced 11 more winners.

The winners of the state portion of the competition will be announced after the interviews are conducted today.

Cell tower regulations passed

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Cell phone companies will have to follow new regulations when building signal towers in the city of Manhattan.

City Commissioners voted unanimously Tuesday night to amend zoning regulations addressing telecommunication structures.

Eric Cattell, assistant director for planning, said the regulations encourage stealth towers, where the towers blend into the surroundings, instead of towers.

The stealth towers can be no more than 50 feet high and can be either hidden or camouflaged, he said. They can be disguised as flag poles, light poles, chimneys and a variety of other structures.

Towers can be as high as 150 feet and must be at least 150 feet from property lines in the new regulations.

Cattell said cell phones and other wireless options, such as Internet and pagers, have increased in use in Manhattan.

"It's a rapidly increasing industry," he said. "It's very difficult to second-guess the demand there."

The hilly topography of Manhattan adds to the need for more telecommunication structures, but there are other options besides towers for cell phone companies, he said.

Katie Jackson, assistant city attorney, said cell phone companies work with similar regulations at other cities, so it is appropriate to have them. She said companies are not usually too concerned where the towers are placed.

"Normally their goal, as they've emphasized to us, is they want to get them up as soon as they can," she said. "They want to meet the needs of their customers."

Cattell said the regulations took a while to develop, and that's why they were not put into effect sooner. The tower in Westport likely would have been affected by the regulations, he said.

History colloquium to discuss fall of Berlin Wall

By Annie M. Lewis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The fall of the Berlin Wall 15 years ago marked a turning point in world political history.

It will be remembered by students and faculty today in a colloquium organized by Margaret Brickers, graduate student in history.

She said it will be a discussion beginning with three professors giving background on the Berlin Wall from their areas of expertise.

After the introduction, the panel will open the floor for questions from students, she said.

"It's an interesting and important topic," Brickers said. "You might accidentally learn something."

The three professors speaking will be David Stone, Dale Herspring and Brent Maner.

The colloquium will help to recreate enthusiasm for this landmark occasion for people who were not old enough to personally remember it, Maner said.

"People who are students now probably don't view this as the huge news event it was," Maner said.

Stone said he is looking forward to hearing what the students have to say.

"The world can change in ways no one could expect," he said. "How it looks today is not necessarily how it will look tomorrow."

TO THE POINT

Commission's compromise appropriate

City Commissioners made the right decision Tuesday when they voted unanimously to regulate the building of telecommunication structures.

The regulations will affect any prospective cell phone towers from being built any higher than 150 feet tall. They must also be at least 150 feet from property lines.

Manhattan residents and Commissioners were right to be concerned about the appearance of huge cell phone towers popping up around town. Cell phone companies were right to be concerned about their customers getting adequate service in town.

Both of these issues are equally important, and the Commissioners found a good compromise between the two sides. By allowing cell phone companies to use stealth towers – towers that blend in with the surroundings – cell phone service can still remain a priority without sacrificing Manhattan's atmosphere.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Picking their battles

Republican rift against Arlen Specter ultimately useless

LOGAN ADAMS

One of the Republican Party's worst traits, the one that makes me dislike it the most, is its intolerance towards dissent and the discussion of ideas. I may be a conservative, but I don't like being ordered what to think.

This is why I really feel for Senator Arlen Specter right now. He raised a concern with President Bush recently that the Democrats in the Senate would prevent the confirmation of any anti-abortion judges.

That's a sacrilege in the eyes of the religious right, who through the likes of Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist, are demanding that Specter be stopped from becoming the chairman of the Senate Judiciary committee.

This is the price of facing facts. You must put up with all those who stay in denial, often too stupid to think about what you actually said.

Specter said the following when asked about the likelihood of pro-life judges being confirmed by the Senate: "When you talk about judges who would change the right of a woman to choose, overturn Roe v. Wade, I think that is unlikely."

The party and its puppet-masters heard: "No anti-abortion judges shall pass because of my almighty litmus test, ever! Mwa ha ha ha ha!"

Specter is pro-choice. Guess what? He's a moderate, and that's something moderates do from time to time. They don't say "how high" when the party says "jump." They think for themselves, their constituents and their nation.

I'm a dyed-in-the-wool pro-lifer, but for the sake of all that is good and decent, Specter was just warning Bush and the party not to get their hopes up for an easy end to abortion. That's realism. Republicans have only 55 Senate seats; that's not enough to break a filibuster.

That means that all it takes are 41 Democrats to stop anything the Republican party tries to pass, less if any moderate Republicans cross party lines. I love how so many Republicans start shaking when I tell them that, and they realize that they don't have the absolute power they believed they had.

Not enough Republicans have gotten the message yet, and the party is rushing ahead at full speed, not considering the real issues and risks, just barging right in. Yet we wonder how Iraq has gotten so screwed up.

Just wait and you'll see the "mandate" dissolve and the "political capital" Bush waved so proudly in front of the nation like a paycheck come up "insufficient funds."

The party and its supporters should try to be grateful that it prospered as much as it did in the last election, instead of taking their current superiority for granted. All it takes are two more years, and they might be wishing they spent a little more time thinking about how to earn the loyalty of the moderates.

Specter deserves the committee chair because of his seniority and because he's holding a position in politics that respects a great deal of the American peoples' wishes. The Republican Party could save itself a lot of pain by paying attention to his respect for compromise.

If they don't, they're going to learn the hard way how much the Democrats are hurting right now.

Peterson deserves death penalty

On Friday, Nov. 12, Scott Peterson was convicted of the murder of his wife, Laci. At the time of the murder, she was eight months pregnant with their son, Connor.

The trial has been a bit tiresome. But for those who truly seek justice in our legal system, the outcome is just what was hoped for.

Our justice system, while seemingly out to lunch most of the time, got it right on this one. And I applaud the jury for their decision.

But now the jury that convicted Peterson has a very difficult task ahead of them.

They must deliberate between two sentences: life in prison or the death penalty.

Most people seem to believe that Democrats are against the death penalty. Not this Democrat. In this case, more than any other, I say let him fry.

Yeah, I know we don't really "fry" people anymore, but I like the expression.

This crime was a truly vicious, disgustingly horrific crime against women. Unfortunately, things like this seem to happen all too often.

A murder like this deserves a life given in return.

People who don't support the death penalty talk a lot about God being the final judge. Well, God can judge him when he's dead. And what about that old maxim: "An eye for an eye?"

SHANNA HAJEK

I used this saying once in a philosophy class for an argument in which I was supporting the death penalty. A fellow classmate asked "Isn't that a little harsh?"

Um, yeah, well so is killing your eight-months-pregnant wife and dumping her body in the San Francisco Bay.

But what is more important here is the message that the death penalty can send to other men who perpetrate these crimes against women.

It will not be accepted or stood for. You will be punished to the full extent of the law.

Scott Peterson murdered his wife and unborn child for seemingly no other reason than to escape the responsibilities of being a father and a husband.

Doesn't that deserve the most severe punishment possible? I think so. And I don't think life in prison is good enough.

While prison obviously isn't the happiest place on earth, it's too good for the likes of this man.

With three meals a day, television and books to read, and never having to worry about pissing off your boss, I think that's a lot more than someone like him deserves.

I'm not out with the torch and pitchfork for every convicted criminal, you understand. But people who are convicted of first or second degree murder should be prime candidates for the death penalty.

Of course, I don't expect the death penalty for every person who accidentally runs over a pedestrian.

But in murder cases where malice aforethought is evident, nothing else but the death penalty is deserved.

Because if you're the kind of person that can sit around and plan the death of someone's daughter, sister or wife, then you should sure as hell expect the government to plan yours.

With plan to purchase $350 van, band talks about plans to go beyond Manhattan

Journey onward

By Annie M. Lewis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The open road with its endless possibilities has been calling to the Rest of Us for quite some time.

"We are going to buy a $350 van, hoping it will get us out of Manhattan," keyboardist and background vocalist Jason Anderson said.

They started out as Common Ground, but had to change their name because another band in Kansas City already had it, lead singer Miguel Caraballo said.

"We called ourselves Fraid for like two shows," he said. "We've been 'The Rest of Us' ever since."

Caraballo said the name comes from a line in one of their songs.

"The idea is broken people trying to find God," he said. "It's asking the question, 'where is God for the rest of us who aren't perfect?'"

As they changed their name, they also added a few members to the band. Chris Davidson, bass player, is one of the original members, along with Caraballo and Anderson.

"Our first drummer became a cop," Anderson said. "And our guitarist got married, and became really busy with other priorities."

Jason Miller, lead guitarist and Chad Nigh, drums, said they joined the band without even knowing who was in the band.

"My cousin knew Miguel from classes, and I wasn't even playing electric guitar that much yet," Miller said. "I met them and it looked like fun."

Everyone in the band agreed that with multiple influences, the sound is eclectic.

"We are a mix of a lot of things," Davidson said. "You could say we are progressive melodic rock. We aren't a light band, but not a hard rock band either."

Anderson said they can easily be compared to U2 or Matchbox 20.

"I've had people come up to me at shows and say it sounds like there are more instruments than they see," Anderson said. "Thats probably because I play like 20 million instruments on my keyboard."

Currently, they are working hard at touring and building a fan base, Caraballo said.

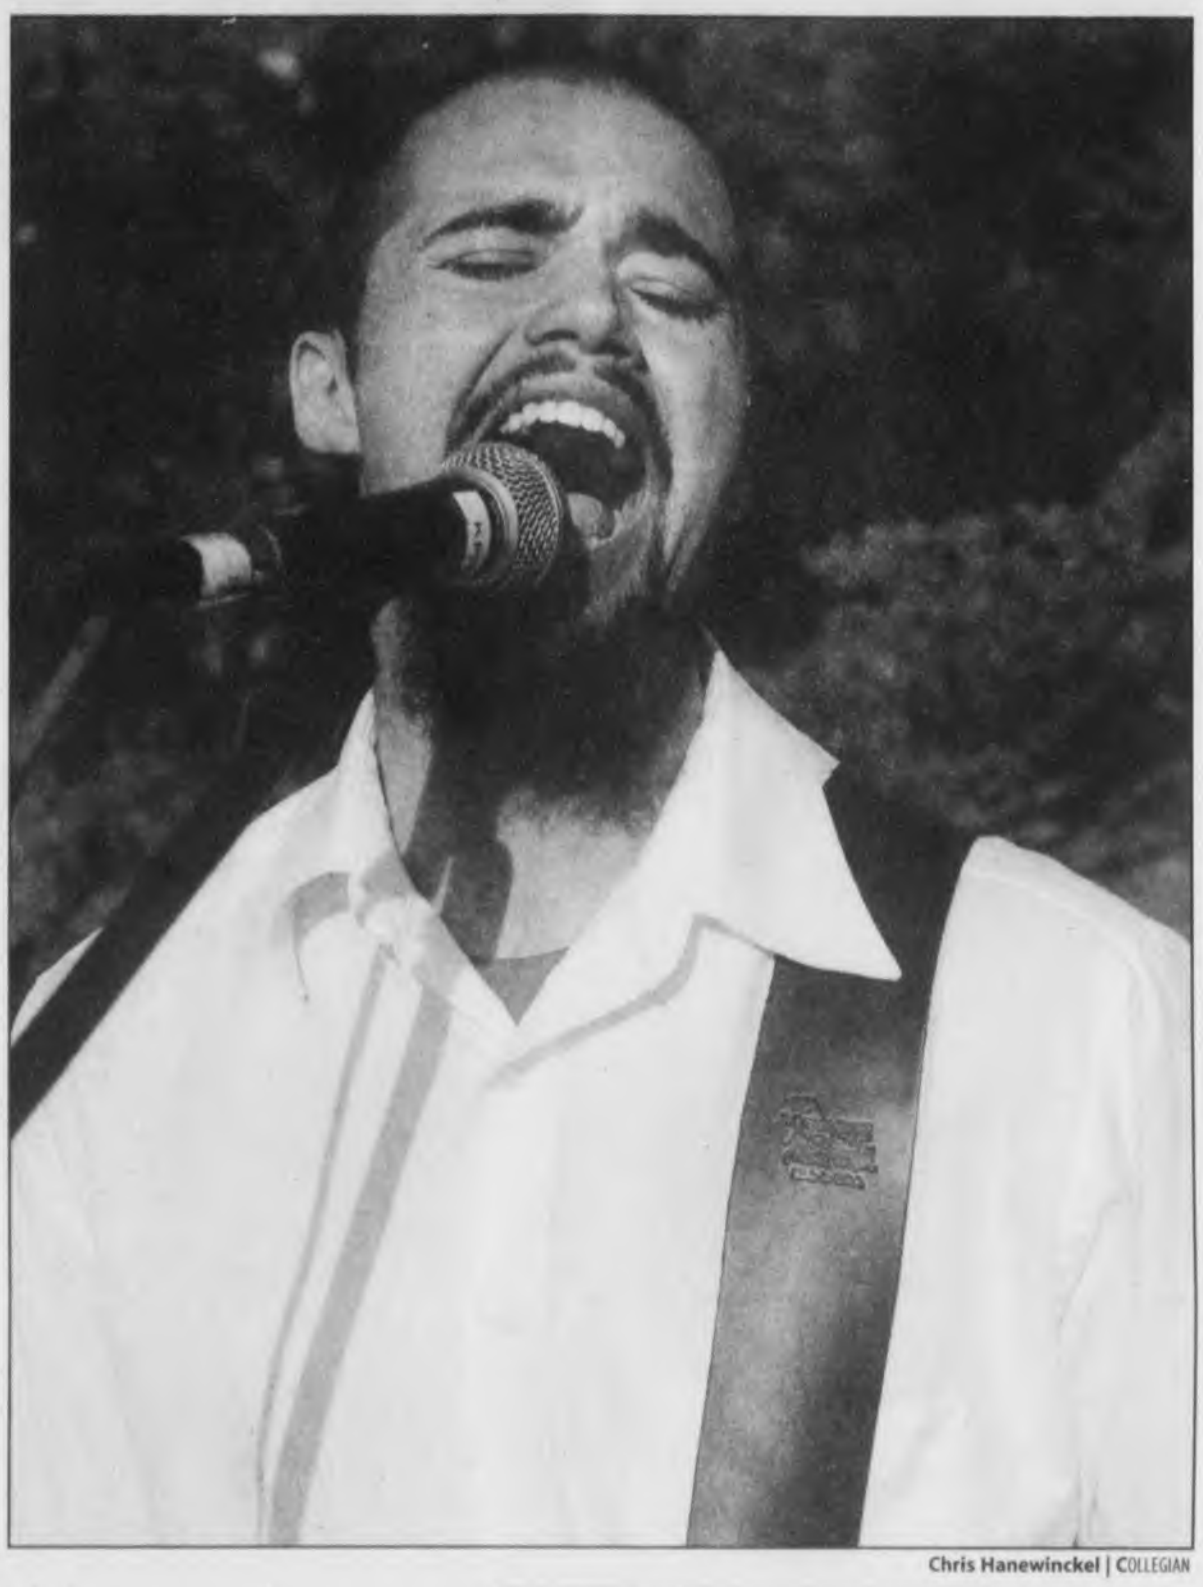
"Right now we are doing weekend warrior touring," he said. "It's all we can afford to do right now."

Anderson said they have traveled all over the Midwest.

"Just recently we have toured all over," Anderson said. "We've been to Oklahoma, Hays, Kansas City and Topeka to name a few."

In the future they want to continue that touring, and maybe going farther out, Nigh said.

"It would be great not to be in Manhattan or Topeka," he said. "I love these places, but I want to travel."



Caraballo described their future plans as a tentative two-year goal.

"In that two years we want to build up our fan base in the region," he said. "Getting that van will be a big deal because then we can go on the road and play."

Local filmmaker wins accolades at Raindance Film Fest in London

By Matt Groneman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Local filmmaker Steve Balderson's second feature film, "Firecracker," was a success at the Raindance Film Festival in London.

The film was one of five to receive a Jury Prize nomination for Best Picture, according to Balderson's website, www.dikenga.com.

Balderson said being nominated for the Jury Prize was incredible.

"The other films, like 'The Machinist' with Christian Bale and Jennifer Jason Leigh, were incredible films," Balderson said. "Just knowing we're a part of that group – wow."

Pleasant Gehman, the actress who played the role of Harriet as well as a musician and writer, said she echoed Balderson's sentiments.

"It was exciting to be at Raindance, and also to know that the film was up for a prize," she said. "I was – and still am – very, very excited about everything having to do with 'Firecracker.'"

Gehman, Balderson and other cast members traveled to the festival together.

"We'd all worked so hard on it, and everyone really bonded during the shoot," Gehman said.

"We were totally stoked, not just to be seeing it completed, but to be in London with each other, at such a wonderful event."

Gehman has had the opportunity to work with Balderson before, and attended her first film festival with him.

"I'd gone to the Cannes festival with Steve in 1999 for his movie 'Pep Squad,' which featured a song of mine," Gehman said. "I feel 'Firecracker' was a major, life-changing experience," Gehman said. "I want to see the film again, a few times."

"For years, I'd been aware of the project ('Firecracker')," she said. "At the Cannes festival was the first time Steve told me about it."

After going to Cannes with Balderson, he told Gehman about what he wanted to accomplish with the movie, Gehman said.

She suggested some cast members for certain roles, including Jane Weidlin of the Go-Gos.

"The story line – the whole thing – is Steve's vision," Gehman said. "He's one of the most visionary people I have ever met in my life."

Gehman greatly enjoyed working with the cast of the film. She was able to work with many talented actors, including Karen Black who had roles in "Easy Rider" and "The Great Gatsby" among many other films.

"I met Amy Kelly on set, and we're great friends now," Gehman said. "I learned a lot about acting from Karen Black."

Though the film's performance at Raindance will help it see a wider audience, it is still uncertain whether it will ever show in Manhattan, Balderson said.

"Even if 'Firecracker' receives a wide commercial release, I'm not in control of whether it will show in Manhattan," Balderson said.

"But it will certainly be in theatres in Topeka or Lawrence if that's the case."

Dr. Dre involved in Vibe Awards scuffle

A fight broke out near the stage at the Vibe awards ceremony as rapper Snoop Dogg and producer Quincy Jones were preparing to honor Dr. Dre, and one person was stabbed, authorities and witnesses said.

Dozens of people sitting near the stage Monday inside a hangar at the Santa Monica airport began shoving each other as the show wound down about 7:30 p.m. News video showed chairs being thrown, punches flying, people chasing one another and some being restrained.

It was unclear if the stabbing preceded or followed the fight. The victim, a 26-year-old man, was taken to a hospital and was listed in stable condition.

No arrests were made.

K-State takes on Sooners tonight at Ahearn

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The women's volleyball team returns to Ahearn Field House to face the Oklahoma Sooners at 7 tonight.

No. 20 K-State is on a two-match winning streak and has a record of 17-8 overall and 11-5 in the Big 12 Conference. Oklahoma is 11-14 overall and 3-13 in the Big 12.

In their match earlier this season in Norman, Okla., the Wildcats bested the Sooners in four games, 3-1. Under new coach Santiago Restrepo, Oklahoma gave K-State a stiffer test in that match than Sooner squads of the recent past.

"Over last year, they're much improved," Coach Suzie Fritz said. "They're a very physical team."

The Sooners number-one weapon is outside hitter Joanna Schmitt, who averages 4.08 kills per game. Setter Julie Chester averages 10 assists per game and middle blocker Keri Coats scores 2.79 kills per game.

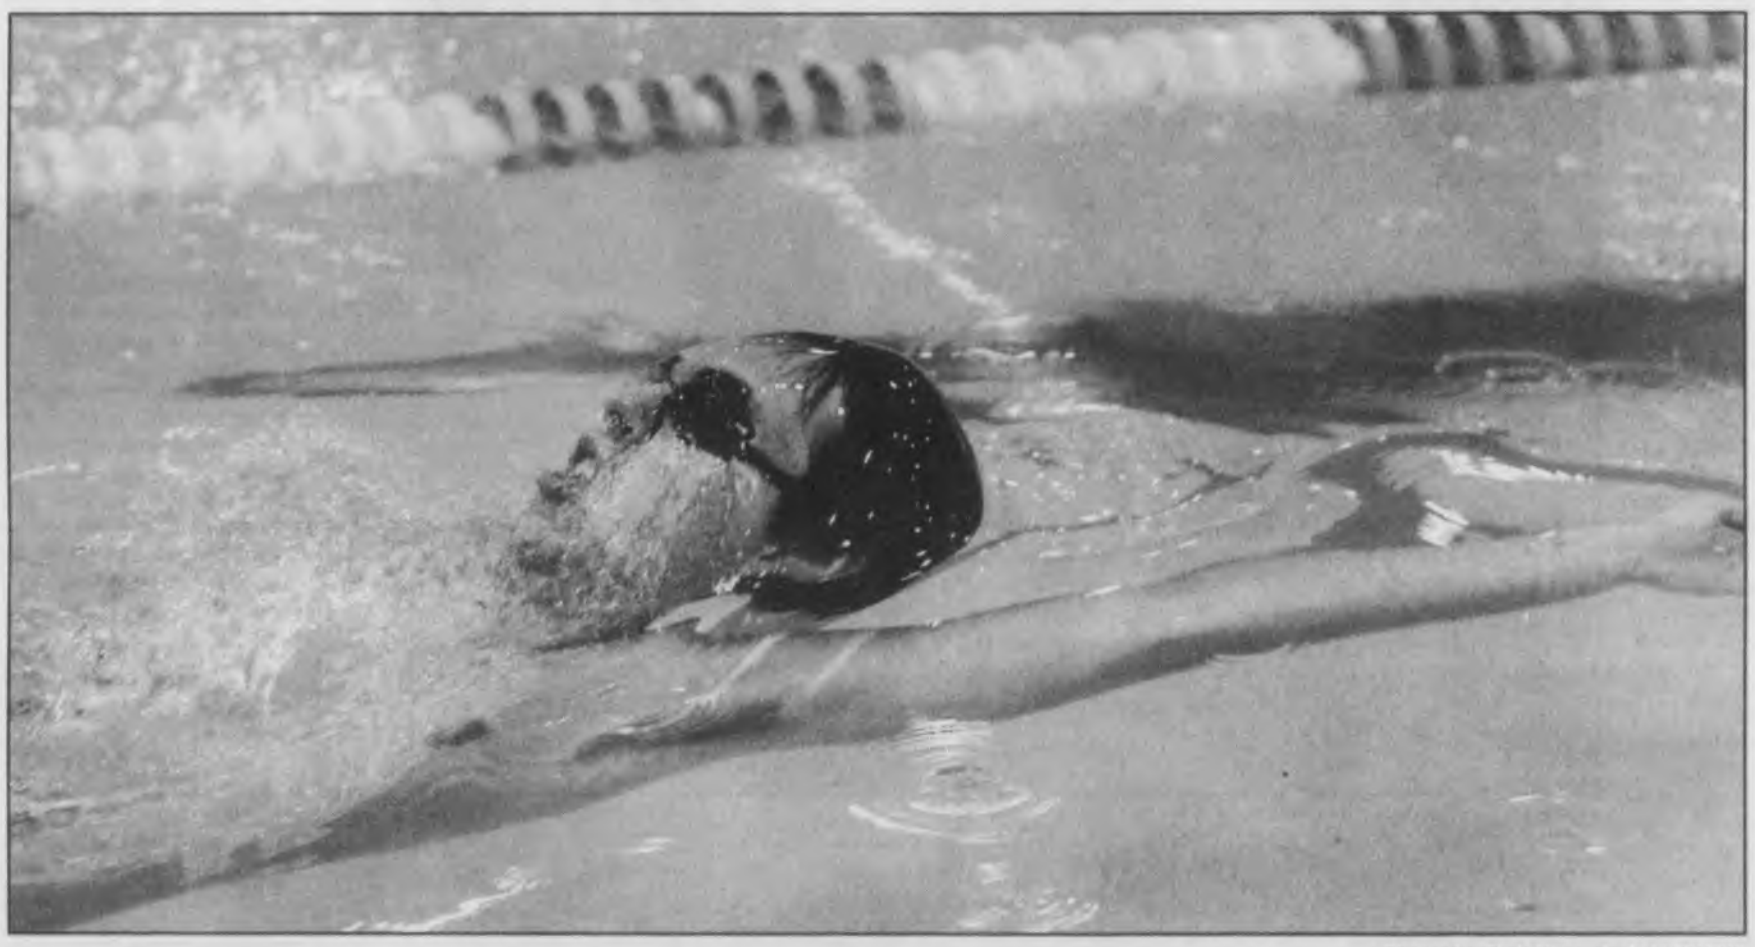
"I like Joanna Schmitt a lot," Fritz said.

Drew Rose | COLLEGIAN

Freshman libro Angie Lastra goes down to make a dig during the second match of their game against Colorado last week. The Cats will be back in action tonight against Oklahoma.

"She's one of their outside hitters, and she can ball-handle, and she's a small but very powerful attacker. She caused us a lot of problems the last time we were down there. And Coats is a very nice player – she puts up a very opposing block."

After a strong performance a week ago against Colorado and a hard-fought win at Baylor Saturday, Fritz gauged her team's progress thus far.



"I still think consistency is a problem for us, but there are times when I think we're playing our best volleyball and playing as good as any team we've ever had here," Fritz said. "We just can't do it for long periods of time yet, and that's our challenge. Our task right now is just to play at a higher level for long stretches."

The Cats have made several line-up changes in the past weeks, something Fritz said will probably continue against the Sooners and for the rest of the season.

She said the competition for playing time is tight at several positions, including at middle blocker between freshman Rita Liliom and sophomore Joy Hamlin and at outside hitter between senior Michaela Franklin and junior Agata Rezende.

"We put an emphasis on practice," Fritz said. "The people that have the best numbers statistically will start the match, but that doesn't mean they'll be the people that will end it."

Dedicated swimmers compete at intramural swim meet

By Stacy Ryan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It may be winter outside, but K-State students are taking advantage of the chance to go swimming thanks to K-State Recreational Services and the intramural swim meet.

The intramural swim meet began Monday and, after two days off, concludes Thursday at the Natatorium. There are eleven events in which participants can compete, including 50 and 100-yard breaststroke, freestyle, backstroke and butterfly.

Intramural Coordinator John Wondra, organizer of this event, said swimming numbers are low and have been continually dropping in recent years. He said he believes part of this can be attributed to the lack of interest and availability of the sport.

"Swimming isn't as popular as it has been in the past. Only larger high schools usually have swim teams and the smaller schools don't, so not as many people participate in high school" Wondra said.

Kaleb Heinrich, freshman in biology, is one of those people.

Heinrich never swam in high school, because it was not an option for him. He said he decided to try the

Women's basketball team looks strong, prepared for schedule

Hustle plays are an important part of the game of basketball, yet they rarely show up as a statistical category.

MATTHEW GIRARD

Diving on the ground for a loose ball, saving a ball from going out-of-bounds, taking a charge or boxing out an opponent from getting a rebound all can change a game in an instant.

These plays can excite a crowd and swing the momentum in your favor, but are usually relegated to the regular season – not exhibition games.

In Sunday's exhibition win over the Athletes in Action, the No. 19 K-State women's basketball team played like they were in the middle of the Big 12 Conference schedule. The aforementioned hustle plays were all over the place, as the Wildcats cruised to a 97-44 victory in their last exhibition game of the season.

Exhibition games are generally a chance to get your back-ups some time on the floor, keep your star players healthy and get a couple of easy games under your belt.

But not these Cats.

From the starters all the way through the reserves, the Wildcats showed they are ready for their grueling 2004-05 season. Among others, senior guard Megan Mahoney was on the floor several times going after loose balls and went into the opposing team's bench to save a ball. Then, there was sophomore guard Claire Coggins, who almost went over the scorer's table trying to save a ball from going out-of-bounds.

It was a refreshing sight to see K-State players going all out against a team they could beat with one hand tied behind their backs.

After the game, Coggins said even though it was just an exhibition game, the team needs to be ready for Big 12 Conference play.

"(Aggressiveness) is totally important, because the Big 12 Conference is so aggressive and it's so competitive, that if we don't learn it now against teams that we can run the court on, then there is no way we'll have that," Coggins said.

And the Wildcats will need it, as four other conference schools are ranked in the Associated Press Preseason Top 25, and the Wildcats could possibly face the No. 6 Duke Blue Devils in the first month of the regular season.

Senior forward Kendra Wecker said coming out aggressive in exhibition games sets the tone for the rest of the season.

"Hopefully, when teams see that we are putting up 95, nearly 100 points on the board, they are going to look at that and say we are looking to push the ball up the floor this year and looking to make things happen in transition and making stops on the defensive end," Wecker said. "We held these guys to 44 points and held Emporia State to 45, so hopefully that sends a message early that we are going to be aggressive this year."

I have a feeling this could finally be the year for the Wildcats making a long run into the NCAA tournament, if they are already playing like it's mid-February.

Guerrero easily defeated his competitors on the Boston Red Sox and New York Yankees on Tuesday, becoming just the fifth player to switch leagues and earn the honor in his first season with his new team.

The Anaheim Angels right fielder received 21 of 28 first-place votes and 354 points in balloting by the Baseball Writers' Association of America.

Yankees right fielder Gary Sheffield finished second with five first-place votes and 254 points. Boston players split the remaining two first-place votes, with left fielder Manny Ramirez finishing third with 238 points and designated hitter David Ortiz winding up fourth with 174 points.

Boxing | Officials suspend Holyfield after loss

Evander Holyfield was suspended indefinitely by New York boxing officials in the wake of his loss Saturday night to journeyman Larry Donald.

The suspension means the 42-year-old former four-time heavyweight champion will have to seek medical clearance if he wants to fight again.

After losing a lopsided decision to Donald, Holyfield said he still plans to fight. Holyfield won only one round on one scorecard and two on the other two in the 12-round fight.

Holyfield has won only two of his last nine fights, and took a beating a year ago from James Toney. Donald didn't hurt him, but Holyfield landed only 78 punches of his own over 12 rounds, according to ringside statistics compiled by Compubox.

Anges Witowski, graduate student in counseling and student development, laughs at her friend Nikki Nottaman, played by Nick Zimmerman, junior in information systems, before the talent show portion of the drag queen competition.

DRAG QUEEN | All-hall competition crowns winner

Nottaman said she had issues with the cheerleading outfit she wore.

"The skirt was the biggest problem," she said. "There was too much me and not enough skirt."

Wainright's favorite talent performance was Miss Behavin's dance and lip sync to Grease's "Sandra Dee."

"She was funny and made people laugh the best." Wainright said.

Jaretta danced to Shania Twain's "Feel Like a Woman." She started off swaying to the music, sang along and even shook her hips to the chorus.

The winner of the competition was Miss Behavin. She was the first non-Moore Hall queen to win the title, said Gregg Joyal, sophomore in landscape design and Moore Hall president.

"This is the first year we opened the contest up to other dorms," he said. "And the winner was from Putnam Hall, which has never happened before."

Braden said he got talked into participating in the contest by his close friends.

"My least favorite part was the first time I tried on the clothes," he said.

Zimmerman said it took a lot of encouragement from fellow staff members at Moore Hall to make him participate.

"I was so nervous, I was barely able to stand up at first," he said.

LECTURE | Division in America requires fixing politics is not social class, education or income – it's culture," he said. "Red versus blue means liberal versus conservative – it's culture. More people call themselves conservative."

For one year after the Sept. 11 attacks there was unity.

"For one year, and I have evidence, a majority of Democrats supported George W. Bush," Schneider said. "I went on the air and said finally, we have pulled away from the divisions."

But in September 2002, the Bush administration presented its plan for the conflict in Iraq.

"To everyone's dismay, all the division in politics came rolling back," Schneider said.

There are people out there who can unite the country – John McCain, Arnold Schwarzenegger and Colin Powell, he said. The 2008 election could be the chance for unification.

"2008 will be the first election since 1952 when there is no incumbent president or vice president on the ballot," he said.

"Americans want a uniter," he said. "That's what's right for the times."

SWIM MEET | Intramural continues through winter

his friends were doing it.

"I wanted to get physically in shape, and I figured that if I signed up for something really physical, then it would help me to get in shape before I compete in it," Heinrich said.

Along with those who have not competitively swam before, there are some who have competed in high school.

Tim Lafreniere, freshman in pre-health careers, was on the swim team in high school.

Lafreniere said he enjoys swimming even though not everyone else shares his interest. He said some people might not like swimming for different reasons.

"It is a really physically and mentally demanding sport, and also people don't want to wear Speedos," Lafreniere said.

Even though their motives for participating are different, both competitors take it seriously.

Lafreniere said he is out to get revenge for losing in the first match of the ping-pong competition earlier this semester.

"My friends and I decided it would be fun, but we're taking it really seriously. We're going to be really intense about it, because swimming is awesome," Lafreniere said.

Final units of flu vaccine available at Lafene shot clinic

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Flu shots will be available for the last time at Lafene Health Center today.

Jay Reppert, medical director at Lafene, said there are about 180 shots left for those at high risk which will be available at a flu shot clinic from 8:30 to 11:30 a.m. and from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. today.

After the clinic is finished, the flu shots will be given to the Riley County Health Department, he said. Lafene will keep a few vaccines in case at-risk students forgot about the clinic though.

Reppert said there haven't been as many people getting shots this year compared to last year.

"We know that we gave more last year to people in the high risk category," he said. "That's been kind of a surprise to us. We expected at least as many as last year."

Some of the reasons for the difference are students may have received the flu shot at home, or they don't realize they fall in the high risk category, he said.

"We'd hate for somebody who's qualified to not get the shot, because they don't realize they are qualified," Reppert said.

Reppert said Lafene is supposed to receive nasal spray vaccines for the flu by the end of this week, but they have not heard what day the vaccines will arrive.

The nasal spray, or mist, is only available for healthy people, he said. People aged 5 to 50 who are healthy and not pregnant can have the mist.

Reppert said the vaccine is only for healthy people, because it is new on the market.

"It's a new vaccine, and they're being cautious with it," he said.

Fast facts
People at high risk

- Persons 2 to 64 years old with underlying chronic medical conditions
- All women pregnant during flu season
- Children 6 months to 18 years of age on chronic aspirin therapy
- Health-care workers with direct patient care
- Out-of-home caregivers and household contacts with children less than 6 months

Businesses encourage smokers to quit

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Smokers have more of an incentive to quit smoking today.

The 28th Great American Smokeout is today, and Quizno's Subs is offering discounts or even free subs for cigarettes.

But the subs aren't the only free perks, because customers also have an opportunity to decrease the health risks from smoking.

And community support is there to help smokers quit.

The K-State Johnson Cancer Center will be working with the Manhattan Cancer Awareness Committee to get smokers to quit, if just for one day, said Marcia Locke, who does JCC public relations and outreach coordination.

According to the American Cancer Society, about 17 million Americans will quit smoking for the day, and some will quit for good.

"If they know millions of other people are quitting, they might not feel so alone," Locke said. "If anyone is going to quit smoking, then why not pick this day to do it?"

Locke said Quizno's was willing to participate.

"We asked them, and they're being cool about it," she said.

A half a pack of cigarettes will get a costumer a half-off price discount on any sub and a whole pack means a free small sub with the 'Quit Cold Turkey' special, Locke said.

"Anybody who is ready to quit can throw out their cigarettes and get half-off a sub or a free sub," she said. "We'll give them a ticket they can use either right then or through the weekend."

Paul Bridges, franchise manager for Quizno's, said Quizno's was doing it for

USD 383 seeks City Commission approval of sales tax increase

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 school board voted 6-1 in favor of requesting a quarter-cent sales tax increase from the City Commission.

Board members voted on the sales tax in light of the district's $1.6 million budget deficit. The budget was originally calculated to be $1.7 million; however after the district's student enrollment was counted Sept. 20, the deficit fell to $1.6 million.

If passed, the quarter-cent sales tax would average out to be about $50 annually per Manhattan resident.

Board members in favor of requesting a quarter-cent sales tax increase include Roger Brannan, Dave Colburn, Nancy Knopp, Walt Pesaresi, Jim Shroyer and Dorothy Soldan.

Board member Randy Martin opposed the movement.

Martin said he was concerned the City Commission would not support the school board's reasons for needing the increase.

"I don't think we can depend on the support of the City Commission," he said. "I can see them very easily saying if you have an alternative, you should do that."

Associate Superintendent Bob Seymour said without the tax dollars and major educational cuts to educational programs, the district could survive by using their contingency fund.

"We might be able to squeak by, but it would pretty much wipe out any reserves we have and the ability to replenish that," he said.

Police arrest local man for child porn

By Jay Dillon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A Manhattan man was arrested Tuesday for downloading child pornography.

Frederick Bly, 711 Allison Ave., No. 11, was arrested at 4:27 p.m. Tuesday on 10 charges of sexual exploitation of a child.

He was also arrested for writing a worthless check.

Lt. Kurt Moldrup of Riley County Police Department said the arrest stems from an ongoing investigation.

"We were called to an address on Oct. 6 at 5 p.m. and some pictures of girls under 18 were found at the address," Moldrup said. "They looked to be downloaded from a computer, and after an investigation, we arrested Bly."

Bond was set at $5,268.62.

Suicide bomber attacks convoy

By Katarina Kratovac
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq – A suicide attacker drove his bomb-laden car into a U.S. convoy during fighting Wednesday in a northern town, where hospital officials said at least 10 Iraqis were killed amid a wave of violence across Iraq's Sunni Arab heartland.

The increasing attacks and the U.S. military's offensive to retake the insurgent stronghold of Fallujah have made November one of Iraq's bloodiest months.

According to an Associated Press tally, the American death toll in the war in Iraq surpassed 1,200 with new Defense Department identifications Tuesday night and Wednesday. The total of 1,208 deaths included 1,204 identified members of the U.S. military, three military civilians and one unidentified soldier reported to have died Tuesday in Balad.

In Fallujah, heavy machine-gun fire and explosions rang out in south-central parts of the city as U.S. Marines hunted remaining fighters. In the northern Jolan neighborhood, U.S. Marines fought insurgents who officers said had sneaked back into the city by swimming across the Euphrates River.

Bullets snapped overhead, and Iraqis collecting bodies of the dead ran for cover behind walls and in buildings as Marines returned fire. After 15 minutes of fighting, three insurgents were dead and one Marine

DIVERSIONS

A WASTE OF TIME — BUT HEY, IT'S BETTER THAN A LECTURE

As the holidays approach and the semester comes toward its end, you might find some free time on your hands. While you're home for the holidays and enjoying Thanksgiving and semester break, check out the following online games and videos to get into the spirit of the season or kill time:

1 | SLINGSHOT SANTA: A CHRISTMAS CANNON

http://www.fetchfido.co.uk/games/slingshot_santa/slingshot_santa.htm

Nothing warms your heart and lets you celebrate the season like this Macromedia Flash game.

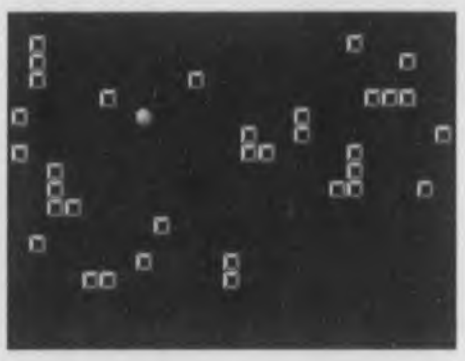
You can use your mouse to control elves as they push along a catapult carrying jolly old Saint Nick himself.

Plan your trajectory and your time of release and try to get the highest score. But beware: if you wait too long, your elves will fall over an edge.

Play again and again to achieve the highest score possible, or as long as you can still have fun watching a fat man in a red suit be tossed across the frozen tundra of the North Pole.

2 & 3 | IT AIN'T OVER 'TIL IT'S OVER

http://www.miniclip.com/hiphopdebate.htm & http://www.jibjab.com



Sure, the elections are over, but that doesn't mean election humor has to come to an end.

At MiniClip.com (top), you can have Bush and John Kerry go toe-to-toe in a hip-hop dance contest. Bush busts out moves like the "Spin Doctor" and "Money Walk," while Kerry kicks it with the "Heiny Heinz" and "Flip-Flop."

At JibJab.com (right), you can view two election-themed spoofs: "This Land" and "Good to Be in D.C." The musical Flash animations took the nation by storm this summer and autumn, and they might be worth another look before the inauguration.

4 | ROAD BLOCKS

http://www.theflashgames.com/road_blocks-swf.html

If you're the kind of person that doesn't like to let his/her mind go to waste, Road Blocks is a game that will let you think through your steps with increasing difficulty on each level.

The objective of the game is to guide a small ball across the board without flying off into oblivion. Using the carefully positioned blocks to stop the ball, you must move the ball from block to block until you reach your destination spot.

If you can't wait to get a Rubik's Cube or other brainteasing toy for Christmas, this game will provide a bit of a challenge.

5 | THE TURKEY JIVE

http://www.missyouso.com/html/turkeyrap.shtml

It may not be the best animation around, nor is it the coolest rap you'll hear this year, but the Internet is for wasting time.

This short Flash animation will give you a few giggles while you're devouring your stuffing and gravy.

Besides, where else are you going to hear such choice rhymes like, "Baste it / Don't waste it"?

Grain science department nears building of flour mill

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Department of Grain Science and Industry has finalized design plans and has begun raising the last of the funds for the flour mill building.

The flour mill building is the third of five department buildings being built north of KSU Stadium.

Fred Fairchild, professor of grain science who is overseeing design plans for the new buildings, said they are needed for the department to be up to date.

"We need to be able to be current and state of the art, and that's why we're building these buildings," he said.

Fred Fairchild
PROFESSOR OF GRAIN SCIENCE

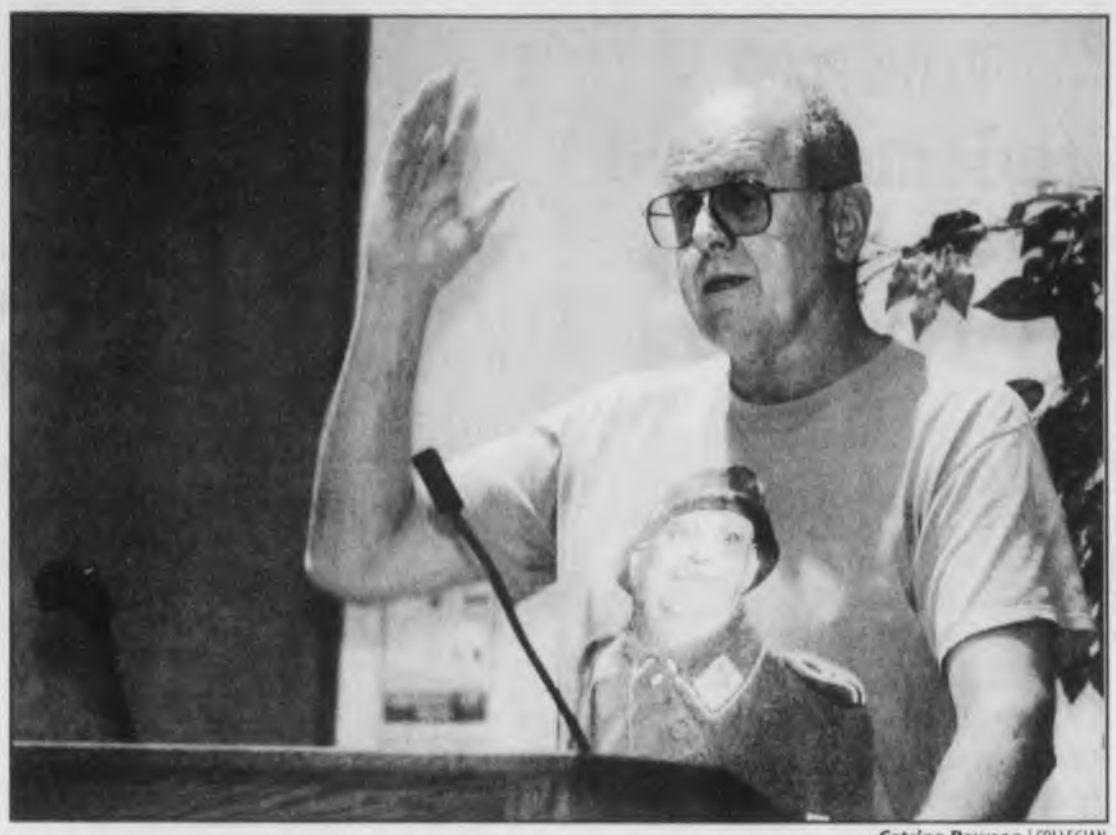
K-State is considered an expert in grain processing, Fairchild said. He also said K-State is the only university in the world that offers baking science, feed science and milling.

"We are looked at all over the world as a source of information for grain processing," he said.

Bio-processing Industrial Value Added Program Center and the International Grains Program Conference Center are already built and being used. The Feed Mill and Teaching, Research and Baking buildings are still to come.

The flour mill is expected to begin construction in the spring, Virgil Smail, department head, said.

"It's right on schedule," he said.



Smail said the $7 million building, paid for by donations, will take a year to build, because it is a complicated building, with complicated machinery.

After the flour mill is finished, the $7 million feed mill will come next, and then the $40 million teaching building will be last. The teaching and research will be paid in half by the state, he said.

Smail said the updates in buildings have already helped the department.

"It's already bringing in more research dollars," he said. "The recruitment of students is better, also."

Networks require tough passwords

By Karthik Reddy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Difficult passwords to guess are the key to keeping K-State computer systems safe.

Andrew Hanenkamp, systems coordinator at the K-State department of computing and information sciences, said the security feature is an easy fix but not used by all universities.

K-State students choose passwords that conform to a variety of parameters, and it ensures passwords are protected. Even system administrators find it hard to get by them, Hanenkamp said.

He said the use of encrypted protocols is strongly encouraged while sending information over a network in order to keep it safe.

Systems are further protected by keeping them patched regularly on known security updates from trusted vendors as soon as they became available, Hanenkamp said.

"We need to work better at educating users and creating awareness among them about not sharing or sending out passwords," he said. "It is also better to pick passwords that are hard to guess and cannot be identified by someone who has met you a few times."

Students at Purdue University were recently advised by university officials to change their passwords to prevent hacker attacks on their accounts.

Scott Ksander, Purdue's vice-president for information technology, said hackers attempted to obtain information from housing student information on the server.

Ksander said the breach was noticed during an observation of the systems that was carried out daily. An anomaly in the systems caused the officials to investigate further and detect the breach of security.

He also said there was no way to know if information had been obtained, but there was definitely a real threat of it when the systems were exposed.

University officials and Purdue police are carrying out investigations into the matter. No one has been apprehended yet, Ksander said.

Students were being advised to change their passwords on a regular basis and other recommendations were being considered to improve security measures, he said. K-State Webmail accounts already require the change of passwords every semester.

Senate to consider membership standard

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student senators will consider a resolution tonight requiring all student organizations registered with the Office of Student Activities and Services consist of only K-State students.

Tyson Moore, Senate vice chair and chair of the campus activities board said previously, OSAS regulations required at least 80 percent of voting members be students.

Moore said the change is being considered because of growing concern that community members, faculty, staff and administration are taking over student organizations.

"The whole mission of student organizations in the first place is to directly benefit students on campus and get them involved," he said. "The only logical way to go about that is to make it 100 percent students."

Moore said there are also concerns that members who are not students may be indirectly receiving funds from Student Governing Association allocations, which are paid for by privilege fees and meant only for students.

The exact definition of what constitutes a member is somewhat unclear, as it may differ from organization to organization, but Moore said anyone who directly affects the direction of the organization by voting is considered to be a member.

He said it was still possible for active non-members who aren't students to receive allocation funds or affect groups' agendas, the resolution made such actions against OSAS regulations.

"If an organization was caught, I'm sure there would be some repercussions," Moore said.

At the Nov. 10 Senate meeting, Senate Chair Eleri Griffin said organizations that had been problematic in the past include some sports clubs, as well as the Chinese Student and Scholars Association.

Zhigang Guo, graduate student in genetics and president of CSSA, said he thinks the resolution is unfair.

"We have 400 members in our organization, and over 300 of them are students," Guo said.

He said that the members who weren't students were generally family members of students or faculty, but that these people only made up 50 to 80 members.

Guo said he would be attending the meeting to oppose the resolution.

TO THE POINT

Students should take advantage of flu shot clinic

Students who qualify for the flu shot should take advantage of the opportunity that most Americans wish they had.

Severe shortages from British suppliers have caused those who normally get flu shots to go without this season. But, Lafene Health Center is offering the vaccine for those who are in danger of complications from the flu.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

However, Lafene has seen only a small number of students who are at high-risk actually come in to be vaccinated. People qualifying include children up to 23-months-old, adults over 65, people suffering from chronic medical conditions, pregnant women and health-care workers.

Many college students live in housing situations where disease can spread easily, and the threat of influenza is only stronger with students with other high-risk traits.

The flu shot costs just $12 – worth it considering the trade-off of actually getting the flu.

The vaccines are available from 8:30 to 11:30 a.m. and 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. today at Lafene.

While those who are not at high-risk should save the shot for those in need, people who do qualify should get it.

A case of the evils

Arafat's legacy rests with history of violence, deception

Illustrations by Sarah Kissick | COLLEGIAN

GRANT REICHERT

So, as often happens, say you're stuck in Palestine late Wednesday night.

You flip on your TV, and there's Tarabisho, the little chick puppet with a nails-on-chalkboard squawk. It's a children's show, with this particular episode dedicated to the importance of trees.

A child asks Tarabisho what he would do if a little boy were to chop down his trees.

Tarabisho answers, "What I'll do to him? I'll fight him and make a big riot... I'll bring AK-47s and the whole world, I'll commit a massacre...."

First point: This show actually aired in Palestine according to Palestinian Media Watch. Second point: Tarabisho lacks opposable digits, not to mention hands; methinks he's all talk, no massacre.

In another show, "Children's Club," kids sing about wanting to become suicide warriors and inflict "violence, anger, anger, anger" on Israelis.

First point: 3-1 anger over violence ratio? That's angry! Second point: Palestinian culture is, to use a colloquial term, friggin' messed up.

Palestinian Media Watch reports a poll from Al-Hayat Al-Jadida (try saying that three times fast... and you'll probably be tackled by bystanders and shipped to Gitmo) which found 79-80 percent of children wanted to be "Shahids." Shahid is Arabic for "martyr," which is the American word for "blowed-up wacko."

I know what you're thinking. "Children scare me. Shouldn't we nuke Palestine, carpet bomb the ashes, unleash hungry wolves onto the land, and then nuke the wolves?" Easy there, cowboy, that's not how we do things here in America. We use lions, son. Lions.

Still, there is hope for Palestine. Yasser Arafat, the Palestinian terrorist-in-chief with a face that only a blind mother could love, came down with an illness a few weeks ago.

Details were sketchy, but he was initially declared brain dead, a diagnosis which I could've made years ago. At the time, a Palestinian envoy said "[Yasser] is at a critical point between life and death," which meant he was staying in a French hospital.

Arafat's disease could have been anything from liver failure to AIDS, due to his, uh, lifestyle choices.

The Israeli Insider, a daily Israeli mag, noted a book by a former Romanian intelligence official wherein he writes: "[Yasser's] playing tiger again... the squawling almost broke my eardrums. Arafat was roaring like a tiger, and his [male] lover yelping like a hyena." If that doesn't make you vomit up your Fruit Loops then you, my friend, must not eat Fruit Loops (of which, dude, what's your problem?).

Arafat assisted brain-washing Palestinian children. According to Palestinian Media Watch, Arafat said, "The child who is grasping the stone facing the tank, is it not the greatest message to the world when that hero becomes a martyr [blowed-up wacko]?"

Through his myriad terror connections, Arafat earned the nickname "the father of modern terror." He discarded peace in favor of bloody intifada, stole millions from his people and radicalized a generation of Palestinians by imbuing in them an ideology of death and Jew hatred.

So, as for his illness, it's obvious Arafat contracted corpus corruptus, a case of the evils. Luckily there are three known cures. Unluckily, each involves large amounts of explosives, stakes and silver bullets.

But, alas, Arafat's disease recently progressed to a slightly less curable stage: death.

Last time I wrote a column celebrating the death of a terrorist, a letter to the editor implored me to ask myself "Would I talk that way about my mother?"

So, just for the record, if Yasser Arafat was my mother, and I didn't turn out to be a hyena or a tiger, in between dry heaves I would be like, "Mom," retch, "you SO need to be, like, totally blown up or something. And I'm staying out late tonight, because all that's on TV is Tarabisho, and he's goin' off about his trees again."

All I want for Christmas...

JAMES HURLA

Dear Santa,

I know it's not even Thanksgiving yet, but Wal-Mart told me it's time to start thinking about Christmas. I really don't need anything this year, but I want to give you a wish-list for other people who might be too shy or too bad to get presents from you.

Parking is always a problem for some of my friends, Santa. I want you to bring them a nice new parking garage for them to put their cars in. Since so many people will have to share the garage, it would be nice if you could also bring a soul for the Parking Services people.

The big bad parking police give my friends tickets at the Rec, and it makes them sad. Please give Scott and Tyler $18 each so they can pay the leeches their precious money.

Santa, a lot of people at K-State have been angry lately and lots more have been very sad. They like their football coach, but he seems to be getting a little old and didn't win very much this year.

Since you're not going to be busy until Christmas Eve, and K-State football certainly won't need you at that time, please bring an early gift to the players and fans. Bring the team a special-teams unit and a defensive secondary. Don't bother putting them under the tree – they'll be needed on the field right away.

Also, if you could strike Bob Stoops with lightning, it would be much appreciated.

The president almost got fired a couple weeks ago, and all his friends are running away from him.

I think he might smell bad, or maybe Colin Powell and John Ashcroft might think their boss was dumber than a comatose elf, but they decided they didn't want to play with George Bush anymore. Now he's all by himself in that great big house.

Please bring Mr. Bush a new set of friends who will restore one or two of my civil liberties that Johnny stole and who won't call my mother-in-law a terrorist like Education Secretary Rod Paige did.

I know, Santa, that you probably don't involve yourself in politics too much. It's a dirty game that ruins lots of good people, and you would be much fatter and less jolly – like Ted Kennedy – if you did get involved.

But some of Mr. Kennedy and his friends have been really upset. I know Mr. Kennedy is upset a lot, like when he runs out of bourbon or when people say he "killed that hooker."

John Kerry is a good friend of Mr. Kennedy, and he tried to be president but was way too boring. Please bring Mr. Kerry a personality.

Also, please bring the Democrats some sort of reasonable plan for the future that doesn't involve killing babies or pretending to end all diseases.

It's getting kind of boring for the Republicans to be in power after all these years, and they would like to return to the two-party system.

So this gift would be a good gift for everyone.

There's one last gift, Santa, and it might be too big for you to give.

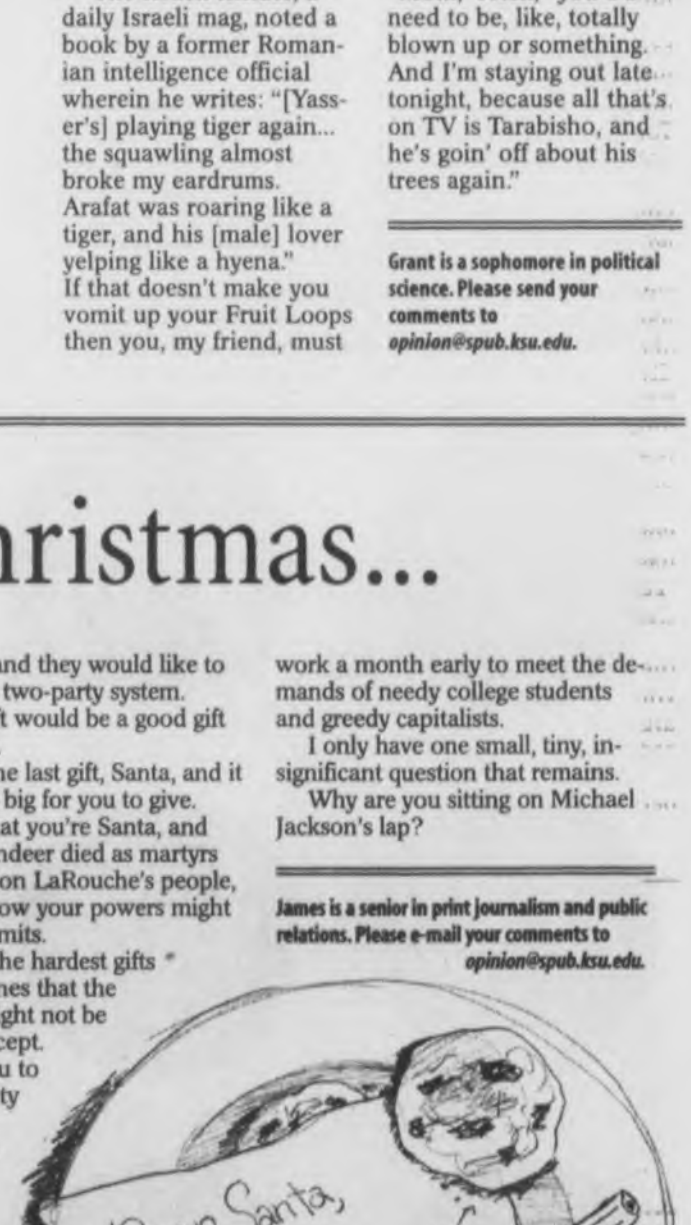
I know that you're Santa, and that your reindeer died as martyrs to save Lyndon LaRouche's people, but I also know your powers might have some limits.

Some of the hardest gifts to give are ones that the recipients might not be willing to accept.

I want you to give credibility back to the news media.

I know it's crazy, but I think they would end up being happy if they had a little responsibility and some principles to uphold.

Fox News and CNN could join hands with the New York Times and Washington Post (The Washington Times is not welcome.) and al-Jazeera could play guitar and everyone would sing "Kum-Bay-Ah."



Thank you, Santa, for listening.

It's very kind of you to start work a month early to meet the demands of needy college students and greedy capitalists.

I only have one small, tiny, insignificant question that remains.

Why are you sitting on Michael Jackson's lap?

Animal-auto accidents increase

Highway Patrol urges motorists to be careful of deer movement

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Drivers beware.

State reports claim there will be an increased number of deer on the road this fall.

The deer population increases from October to January, Kansas Highway Patrol Lt. John Eichkorn said.

"When the population increases, it brings a lot of deer movement toward the roadways," he said. "The week of Nov. 14-20 is the peak week of deer-related crashes."

Deer-related accidents account for nearly 10,000 accidents annually in Kansas. In 2003, 9,108 accidents were reported, causing 332 injuries and no deaths. Riley County had 1,670 car crashes in 2003, with 184 of them deer-related.

"Deaths in deer-related accidents, however, are not unusual," Eichkorn said. "And there are several ways to avoid a serious animal-related accident."

Highway Patrol Superintendent Col. William Seck said by being more alert, people can avoid their chances of colliding with a deer.

Motorists are encouraged to look for deer, especially during dusk and dawn, a peak time when visibility is low.

Jenilee Borth, junior in interior architecture, said she has hit a few animals on the road.

"I have hit animals on the road, such as a coyote or possum," she said. "I hit some of them, because I couldn't see them near the road."

Drivers should be more cautious and prepared to slow down when traveling near wooded areas, parks and streams, Eichkorn said.

"Deer-crossing signs should also be taken seriously," he said.

Eichkorn said if a deer is near a road, expect more to be around because they travel in groups.

"Just because they are standing by the road, don't assume that they see you coming," he said. "They may bolt out in front of you."

A common misconception on how to avoid a deer is to swerve away from it, Eichkorn said.

"People should not take invasive or unsafe actions just to miss the deer," he said. "The more serious crashes occur when people avoid animals, and sometimes that can result in death."

The law does require some accidents be reported.

"If someone does hit an animal, with estimate damages of $500 or more, they are required to report it to the nearest law enforcement agency," Eichkorn said.

"Those who do not report the accident can be charged with a misdemeanor."

Fast facts

Steps to take after hitting an animal

1. Pull over to the side of the road.
2. Check the condition of the animal.
3. Call local authorities.
   Dial *47 to reach the highway patrol dispatcher.
   Dial *KTA to reach the Kansas Turnpike Authority.
4. Remain calm until authorities arrive.

Topeka bans discrimination against gays

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA – The Topeka City Council on Tuesday night approved a version of an ordinance making it illegal for the city to discriminate in hiring on the basis of sexual orientation.

Council members voted 5-4 to approve the ban. City attorney Brenden Long said the measure affects the city of Topeka's hiring practices and not the public at large.

He said Shawnee County commissioners passed a similar measure last year.

The council initially considered a proposal that would have inserted the terms "sexual orientation, or gender identity or expression" into sections of city code that ban discrimination based on other reasons, such as race, gender or disability.

Council members then voted 5-4 to amend the ordinance to remove the phrase "gender identity or expression."

About 70 people addressed the council before the final vote. The first 20 speakers all urged the council to reject the ordinance.

Most of those were members of the Rev. Fred W. Phelps Sr.'s congregation at Westboro Baptist Church, which has conducted anti-homosexual picketing in Topeka and other cities since 1991.

Mayor James McClinton interrupted many early speakers to warn they were violating council rules by veering too far from the topic or engaging in repetitious speech, which he defined as saying things that had already been said by themselves or others.

"We will not become a circus in here tonight," the mayor said.

Those coming to the lectern included many from conservative Christian churches, who suggested passage of the ordinance would define homosexuals as a protected class. They questioned whether the measure would stand up to legal challenges.

Proponents of the ordinance said gay people don't choose to be homosexual. They also said the city has a moral obligation to protect human rights.

"It does not matter what form discrimination takes, we should at every step attempt to prevent it," said Topeka lawyer Pedro Irigonegaray.

"The issue here is equal protection under the law."

Kmart, Sears merge

By Megan Reichgott
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO – Kmart is acquiring Sears, one of the most venerable names in U.S. retailing, in a surprise $11 billion deal that will create the nation's third-largest retailer.

The company being created by the combination announced Wednesday would be known as Sears Holdings Corp., but it was clearly orchestrated by Kmart chairman and Sears shareholder Edward Lampert, who will lead a new board that will be dominated by Kmart directors. The company said it will continue to operate the Kmart and Sears stores under their current names, but some locations may close or switch from one to the other store.

The company said it will continue to operate the Kmart and Sears stores under their current names, but some locations may close or switch from one to the other store.

Shares of both companies surged on news of the deal. Kmart Holding Corp. shares climbed $17.38, or 17 percent, to $118.60 on the Nasdaq Stock Market, while Sears, Roebuck & Co. shares soared $9.69, or 21 percent, to $54.89 on the New York Stock Exchange.

The deal marks a remarkable comeback for Kmart, which had sharply scaled back operations after seeking bankruptcy protection in 2002. The combined companies expect to save more than $300 million a year by improving operations and combining their purchasing power.

"We need to have a very low cost structure in order to compete with our biggest competitors," Lampert said at a news conference in New York.

Lampert would not provide any details on possible layoffs, except to say, "There will be some head count changes that come out of this."

Both companies' roots date to the late 1800s. Sears began as a mail-order house while Kmart began as the Kresge five-and-dime chain. Sears, which opened its first retail store in 1925, became the nation's biggest retailer, a title it held until 13 years ago.

The combined company is expected to have $55 billion in annual revenues and nearly 3,500 stores. That means it will trail only Wal-Mart and Home Depot among the biggest U.S. retailers.

It will have its headquarters in the northwestern Chicago suburb of Hoffman Estates, home of Sears, but will maintain a "significant presence" in Troy, Mich., where Kmart is based.

Under the agreement, approved by both companies' boards of directors, Kmart shareholders will receive one share of new Sears Holdings stock for each Kmart share. Sears, Roebuck shareholders can choose $50 in cash or half a share of Sears Holdings stock.

Bush names former personal lawyer to be counsel

By Terence Hunt
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – President Bush on Wednesday named Harriet Miers, a longtime Texas associate, as White House counsel.

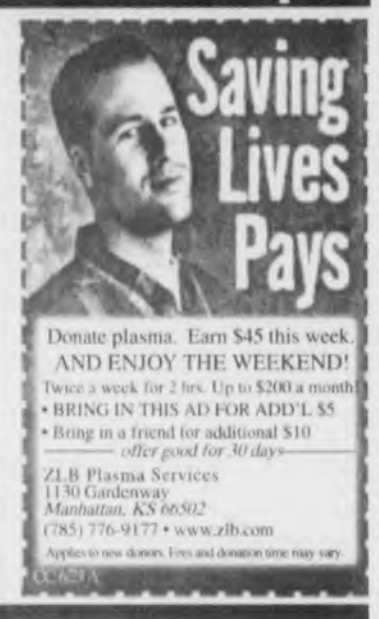
Miers succeeds Alberto Gonzales, nominated by Bush to be attorney general, said White House spokesman Scott McClellan.

"Harriet Miers is a trusted adviser on whom I have long relied for straightforward advice," Bush said in a statement.

"Harriet has the keen judgment and discerning intellect necessary to be an outstanding counsel," the president said. "She is a talented lawyer whose great integrity, legal scholarship and grace have long marked her as one of America's finest lawyers."

Formerly Bush's personal lawyer in Texas, Miers came with the president to the White House as his staff secretary, the person in charge of all the paperwork that crosses the president's desk. Miers was promoted to deputy chief of staff in June 2003.

From 1995 to 2000, she was chairwoman of the Texas Lottery Commission. In 1992, she became the first woman president of the Texas State Bar. She has been president of the Dallas Bar Association as well, becoming in 1985 the first woman in that post.



Miers also has served as a member-at-large on the Dallas City Council. She earned her undergraduate and law degrees from Southern Methodist University in Dallas.

Miers is often one of the first staff members to arrive at the White House in the morning and among the last to leave. She enjoys an especially close relationship with Bush, and she is sometimes the only woman on the brush-clearing excursions at his ranch in Crawford, Texas.

Cats sweep Sooners at home

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State cruised early and never looked back on its way to a third-straight win, sweeping Oklahoma 30-17, 30-16 and 30-22 on Wednesday night in Ahearn Field House.

The 3-0 win moves the No. 20 Wildcats to 18-8 on the season and 12-5 in the Big 12 Conference. Oklahoma falls to 11-15 overall and 3-14 in the conference.

K-State hit a season-high .435 for the match with seven attack errors, while notching 12 team blocks and holding the Sooners to .127 hitting.

Coach Suzie Fritz said her team's efficient hitting performance is an indication of the Wildcats' improvement toward their goal of playing at a high level for a complete match.

"I think we're closer," Fritz said. "Again, for two-and-a-half games we put together a very consistent effort, and it continues to be something we talk a lot about with this team. There's no doubt in my mind we're playing at a higher level than any team we've ever had for stretches, but we're not able to do it long enough yet."

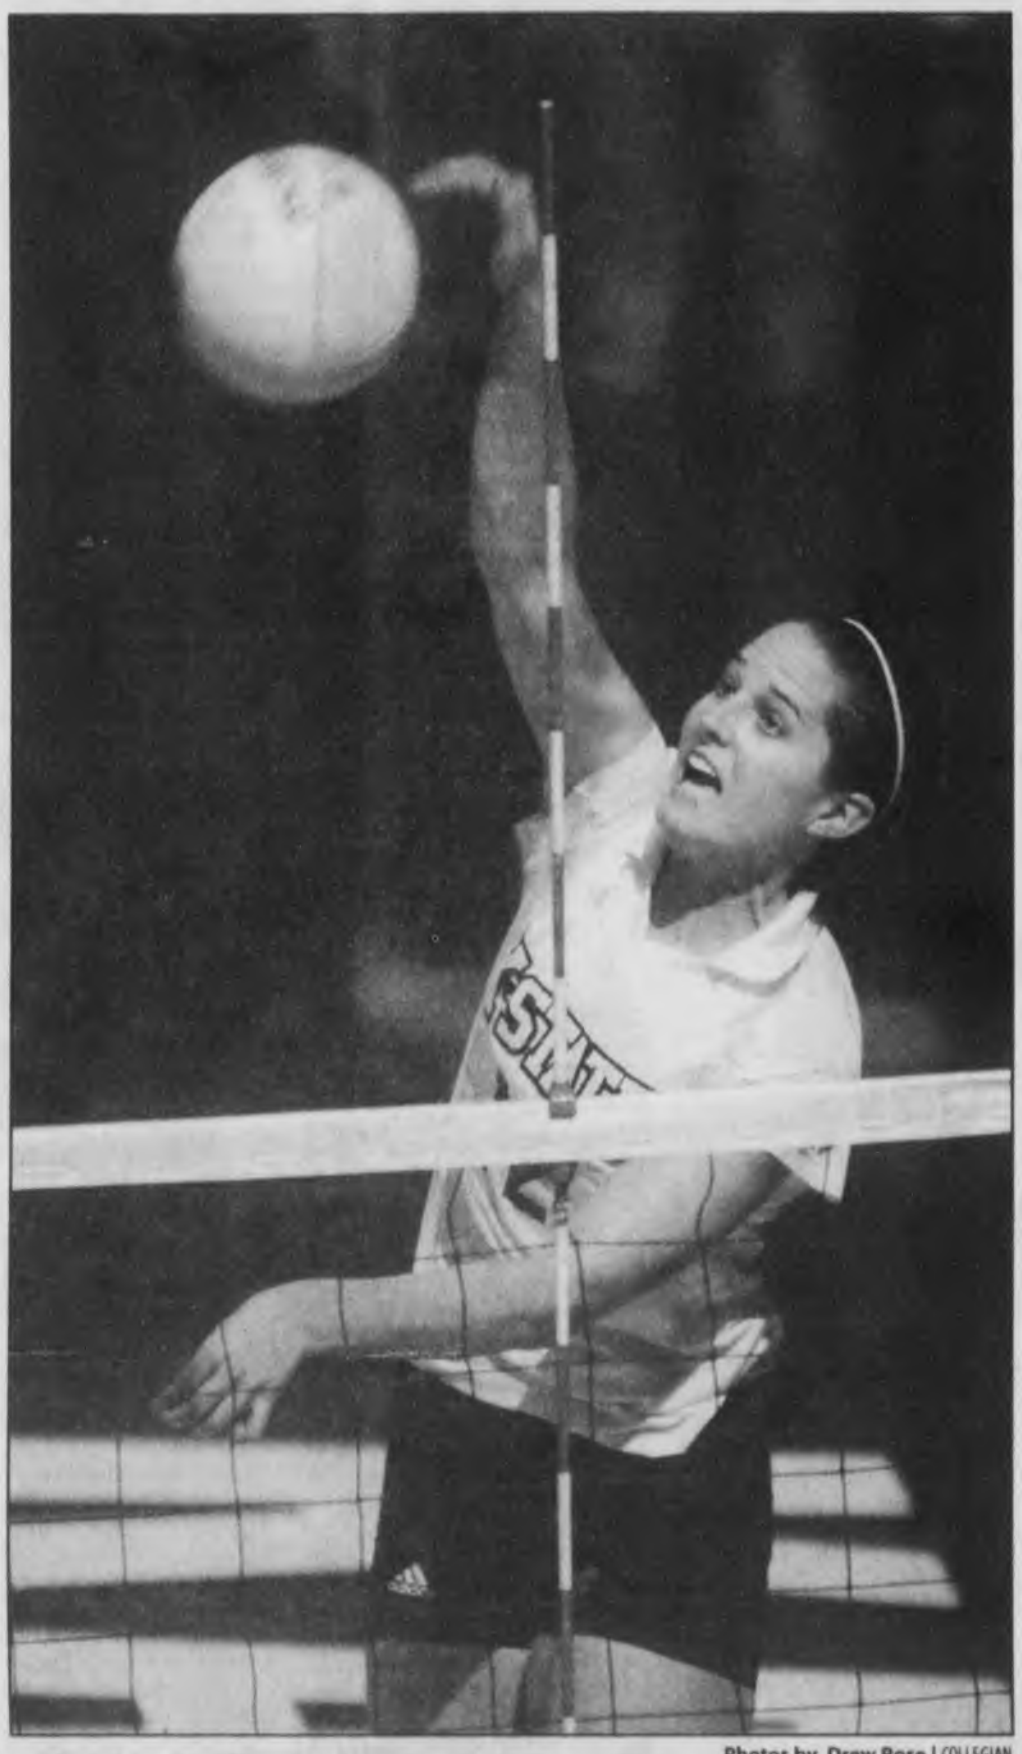
If K-State had any struggles, they came at the hands of Oklahoma outside hitter Gabriela Tonon, who had 13 kills.

"If there was any frustration, it was our inability to defend left-side attack," Fritz said. "Tonon was getting away from us a little bit, but other than that, I thought from all aspects we played very well."

K-State went on a 13-2 run to put away the first game, took a lead early in the second and went on an 8-0 tear after an 11-8 deficit en route to a win in game three.

The Cats got great performances from their seniors, with setter Gabby Guerre coming close to a quadruple-double with 31 assists, six digs, seven blocks and 10 kills on torrid .769 hitting. Middle blocker Lisa Martin had eight kills on .571 hitting and seven blocks, and outside hitter Vali Hejjas led all Wildcats with 13 kills.

"This is a time when your seniors need to be doing those things," Fritz said.



Guerre said the team is hitting its stride right when it needs to – before tournament play.

"We're trying to peak in December, and I think we're on our way to doing that," Guerre said.

"That's when we want to be good, when we're going right into the tournament."

Wildcat Weekend to showcase variety of sports

By Jay Dillon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State sports fans are in for a treat this weekend when Wildcat Weekend kicks off Friday with the No. 18 women's basketball team playing Wyoming at 6 p.m. in Bramlage Coliseum.

Wildcat Weekend marks the start of regular season play for both the men's and women's basketball teams. The women's game will be followed by the men's game against North Dakota State at 8:30 p.m.

Wildcat Weekend continues at 11:10 a.m. Saturday with the last football game of the year against Iowa State at KSU Stadium, and the volleyball team ending the day's action with a 7 p.m. match against Texas Tech in Ahearn Field House.

The weekend ends on Sunday when the women's basketball team takes on Pepperdine at 4 p.m.

Sports Information Director Garry Bowman said having all the teams here at once is great for the programs.

"This year it worked out great with football and volleyball both being at home at the same time as basketball starting their seasons," Bowman said. "This is definitely one of the more busy weekends in recent memory for sports at K-State."

Last year, a similar weekend schedule was held when the men's and women's basketball teams had a double-header the night before the K-State-Missouri football game.

Sage Shepherd, freshman in engineering, said he knew about the football and volleyball games but did not know about the basketball games.

"I've been to every home football game and all but two volleyball games, so I will be going to both the football and volleyball games this weekend," Shepherd said. "I probably will go to the basketball games as well."

Ben Hohly, senior in secondary education, is a member of the band but did not know about Wildcat Weekend.

"I play in the marching band and the band that plays at the volleyball games," Hohly said. "So I'll be at those, I probably won't go to the basketball games."

Along with the athletic events, there will also be several promotions during the men's and women's basketball games.

Former All-American and Wildcat women's basketball standout Nicole Ohlde will be signing autographs from 5 to 6 p.m. on the concourse of Bramlage Coliseum. The K-State baseball team will also be signing autographs between games.

K-State's Claire Coggins goes up for a lay-up during the first half of Sunday's game against Athletes in Action. The Cats will be back in action Friday against Wyoming at Bramlage Coliseum.

During halftime of both games, there will be shows to entertain the crowd. At halftime of the women's game, the WNBA's Minnesota Lynx mascot "Prowl" will perform. During the men's game, the dance team "Marching Cobras" will perform.

Also, the first 3,000 fans will receive men's and women's basketball schedule magnets.

Students get into both women's basketball and volleyball games free.

Undefeated college football teams can strike a blow to BCS

MICHAEL ASHFORD

Rejoice, all of those in favor of a college football playoff: the big, bad Bowl Championship Series might take another hit this year.

There are three undefeated teams in position to play for the BCS Championship, and all three just might stay unbeaten.

USC has been No. 1 all year long, and unless the Trojans royally screw things up, they will stay there. They play in the Pac-10 for crying out loud. That's even worse than playing in the Big 12 North this year.

OK, maybe not, but they have it easy out there in L.A.

The real story comes down to Oklahoma and Auburn.

Both are undefeated, and both have every reason to be in the Orange Bowl come January.

Assuming USC stays unbeaten, only one will join the Trojans in Miami, and so another potentially disastrous situation is brewing for the BCS.

I am loving it.

I hate the BCS.

Not only does the system not crown a true champion, but it created more controversy than there was at its inception. Just look at last year. LSU and Oklahoma played for the "national title," but does anyone really believe it was the right match-up?

LSU trounced the Sooners, while USC beat Michigan in the Rose Bowl, and we ended up with another split national championship between USC and LSU.

The very thing the BCS was supposed to prevent happened in just its fifth year of existence. Turn to this year, where chaos could erupt if USC, Oklahoma and Auburn all finish undefeated.

Who is going to be left out, and for what reason?

Each team has an exceptionally strong case for playing in the Orange Bowl.

The team that gets left out will scream bloody murder, and the idea of a playoff for Division-I football will be even more appealing.

I hope and pray that all three finish undefeated.

I have hated the BCS since day one, and I am a strong proponent of a college football playoff.

Every other division in college football has a playoff, why can't Division-I?

I personally think if USC, OU and Auburn all stay unbeaten, it will be Auburn and USC playing for the title, because Auburn's remaining schedule is stronger than the Sooners'.

I wouldn't mind if this happened.

First, it would tick off the Sooners to no end, which I love seeing.

Secondly, I think an Auburn against USC match-up is more intriguing than OU against USC.

Lastly, huge questions would arise about the validity of the BCS.

So keep the wins coming Trojans, Tigers, and yes, even you Sooners.

Down with the BCS!

Football | Casey named to Academic All-District team

K-State senior tight end Brian Casey has again been honored for his academic work.

Casey

Casey was named to the Academic All-District VII second team by the College Sports Information Directors of America, the organization announced.

Maintaining a 3.47 grade point average in accounting, this is Casey's first time on the academic all-district team. Casey was named first team Academic All-Big 12 last season.

MBB | Recruiting class has international flavor

From the Ivory Coast, to France to Michigan, men's basketball head coach Jim Wooldridge truly scoured the world for his 2005-06 recruiting class.

Wooldridge

Wooldridge announced the signings of three players to National Letters of Intent on Wednesday: junior college transfer David Hoskins and international players Ousmane Cisse and Sidiki Sidibe.

Hoskins, a 6-foot-5 swingman, began his collegiate career at Central Michigan where he averaged 8 points, 3.2 rebounds and 2.6 assists per game as a true freshman. Hoskins then transferred to Schoolcraft College, where he will redshirt this year, leaving him with three years of eligibility at K-State.

Cisse hails originally from Abidjan, Ivory Coast, moving this year to the United States. A 6-foot-8, 245 pound forward, Cisse will play his senior year of high school at Community Christian School in Stockbridge, Ga.

Rated by many NBA and European scouts as a top-20 European prospect, the 7-foot-1, 265 pound Sidibe is tied with Nick Pino (1965-68) and Joe Leonard (1997-2001) as the tallest players to sign with the Wildcats. A native of Asnieres, France, Sidibe does have just three years of basketball experience.

Track and Field | Coach signs 4 recruits for 2005-06

Track and field head coach Cliff Rovelto announced the signing of four student-athletes, including the current holder of the national high school indoor high jump record, for the 2005-06 season.

Rovelto

The class includes Overland Park's Jana Gwinn; Marianne Schlachter of Birndorf, Germany; Scott Sellers of Cinco Ranch, Texas; and Breanna Yost of Montezuma, Kan.

Sellers highlights the class, as his jump of 7'05.25" set the national high school indoor record. If Sellers were to jump that height as a Wildcat, he would tie the current K-State indoor record set by former All-American Percell Gaskins in 1993.

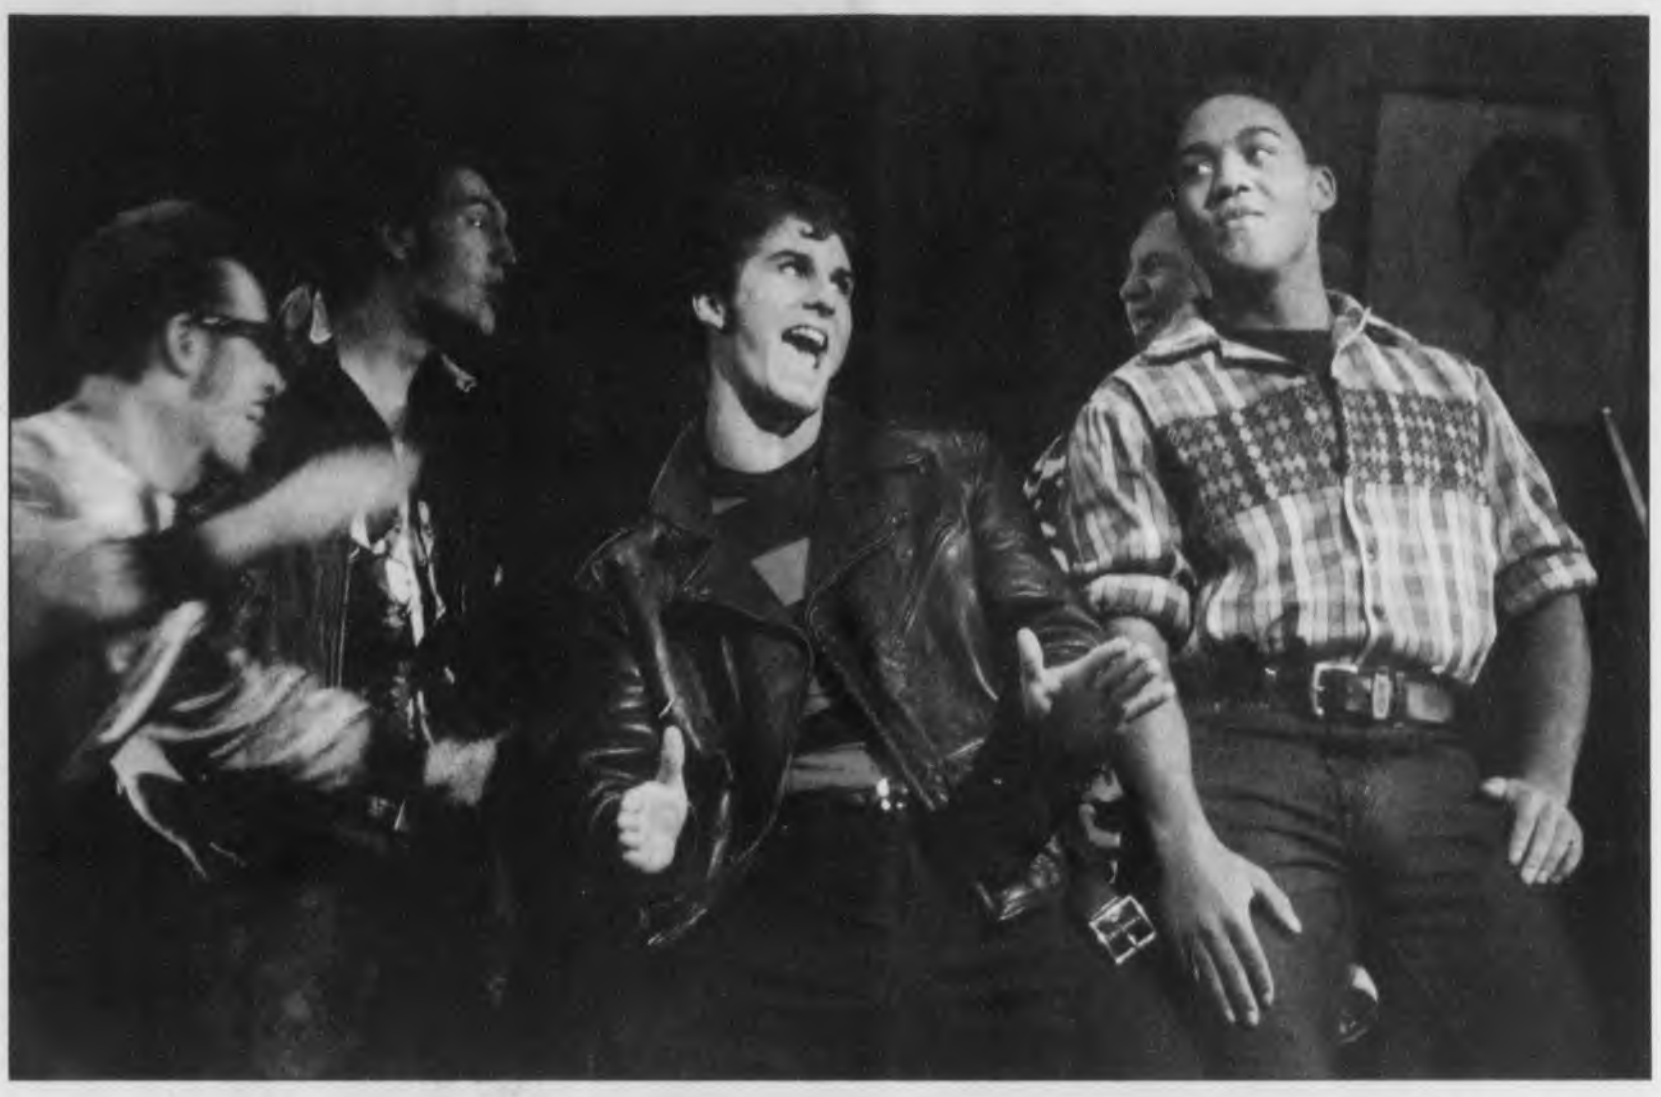
Gwinn, a current student at Blue Valley North High School, will run cross country and track and field as will Yost.

Schlachter has jumped as far as 42'05.50 in the triple jump and has vaulted 12'05.50" in the pole vault.

Men's Golf | Team adds three recruits for next year

K-State men's golf head coach Tim Norris announced the signing of three recruits for the 2005-06 season.

Making up the class of recruits is Joe Kinney of Lake Villa, Ill.; Jay Kramer, a transfer from Johnson County Community College and native of Lenexa, Kan.; and Robert Streb of Edmond, Okla.



Kinney is a four-time all-conference selection at Antioch Community High School. Last season, he finished fourth at the Illinois Class AA State Championships.

At the 2004 Junior College nationals, Kramer tied for 22nd as a freshman.

Streb is arguably the most prestigious of the class. The Edmond North High School senior is ranked No. 1 in Oklahoma and No. 33 nationally by Golfweek/Sagarin.

Streb was an AJGA honorable mention All-American in 2004.

K-State Theatre revamps "Grease" production

By Tony Herrman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State production of "Grease" includes aspects to separate it from the 1978 movie and every other production of the musical set in a high school in 1959.

"Grease" has the first set – for a show in McCain Auditorium – that was designed by a student. The car, Greased Lightning, was also created from scratch by the technical staff.

Director Charlotte MacFarland said about two thirds of the songs in "Grease" were left out of the movie.

"Yeah it has John Travolta, but the musical is more hard-edged," she said. "The women fight, the dances are bigger and there's something about live dance, live performance that's just wonderful. Plus, I think it's the kind of thing, you can get up and dance in the aisles if you feel like it."

In addition, MacFarland said the energy that comes from collegiate theater makes the show entertaining.

"It's like why would you go to a K-State football game if you can see the Chiefs," she said. "Because this has a spirit you don't find, and it's a very wild and personal musical. Also, the bigness and the color of the set and the costumes and the lighting are thrilling."

MacFarland said even though "Grease" is a very popular musical it is more of a '70s person's idea of the '50s.

"I think a lot of the reason is people feel a great affection for that music and a great affection for that era," MacFarland said. "It's interesting because I was going into my first year of high school in 1959, so I actually grew up in that era, and 'Grease' doesn't really show that period."

For a musical whose characters are nearly all high school students, the bonds made off stage strengthened immediately.

"We made it a point that we all became really close friends immediately, so that helped a lot," Debbie Swann, who plays Rizzo, said. "We'd also sit down and talk about who do we think our characters are, what kind of histories do they have and make them who they are."

Playing characters that have been made famous by the movie version of the musical has challenged the actors to put their own version of the characters.

"I have seen the the movie many times, but as an actress, you can't take past performances and compare yourself to them," said Swann, junior in theater and English. "I'm sure people could think I have some similarities to Stockard Channing, but I like to Learn the makings for a tasty Thanksgiving

WILL KLUSENER

One of our nation's favorite holidays is just around the corner.

Over the Thanksgiving holiday, we celebrate by gathering with friends and family around a table laden with tasty goodness and watch a game where grown men break their own appendages for money.

Grocery stores (and fad-diet publishers) love this holiday as well, because we Americans love to eat and will buy enough food to have turkey soup and sandwiches on the leftovers menu for the next four months.

Some of us don't get to go home though.

For those of you who are spending your Thanksgiving break here in Manhappiness or for international students who want to experience a Thanksgiving meal for the first time, I've prepared a short list of the basics for a traditional Thanksgiving meal. I take no responsibility for how it turns out.

The most important (and difficult) item is turkey. Turkeys are expensive, time consuming and an overall pain in the ass.

But if you insist on preparing a real one instead of buying pressed Butterball from the deli, the National Turkey Federation (there really is one) recommends heating the oven to 325 degrees and cooking until the internal temperature is 180 degrees in the thigh and 170 degrees in the breast. This will usually take between three to five hours, so plan accordingly.

What Turkey Day dinner would be complete without a heart-stopping bowl of mashed potatoes? In my book there really is only one way to make mashed potatoes, and that's homemade.

Real mashed potatoes are insanely easy to make. Take 10 to 15 large spuds (double the number for red or new potatoes), cut them in half and place in a large pot. Then fill the pot with water until they're covered and boil for about 50 minutes or until they are soft.

After you've drained the water, put your soft spuds into a large bowl and smash them with a large fork or potato masher. Add a cup of milk for creaminess, and then add butter, garlic and salt to your own taste.

Of course, now you need a green vegetable. My favorite is asparagus. Simply boil it until it is soft and flexible, then add butter.

Others prefer mustard or collard greens, though you have to buy a lot, as they tend to shrink exponentially when you cook them.

Your best bet is to prepare a large bowl of green beans, or make a green bean casserole. This is simple as well. Check out the recipe I've included for details.

All that's missing now is the pumpkin pie. Pumpkin pie is, alongside turkey, the most recognizable symbol of Thanksgiving.

The best way to handle this is to buy one. They're pretty cheap, and you'll be sick of cooking by that point anyway. Be sure to buy a pie that has a graham cracker crust, and don't forget the whipped topping.

How to

Make green bean casserole

1. Gather:
4 cups of cooked green beans
1 10 oz. can of cream of mushroom soup
1/8 teaspoon of black pepper
3/4 cup milk
1 1/3 cup of friend onions
2. Mix the soup, green beans, pepper and milk together and bake at 350 degrees for 25 minutes.
3. Add the onions on top and heat for another five minutes. Let it cool.

Police seeking G-Unit rapper Young Buck

Police were searching for rapper Young Buck in connection with a stabbing at the Vibe Awards, an assault apparently sparked when Buck's musical mentor, Dr. Dre, was punched just before being handed a lifetime achievement award.

Buck fled the Santa Monica airport hangar where the awards show was being taped Monday night, police Lt. Frank Fabrega said in a statement. A warrant was being prepared alleging assault with a deadly weapon.

The incident was sparked as Snoop Dogg and Vibe magazine founder Quincy Jones were about to give Dre a lifetime achievement award. A man later identified as Jimmy James Johnson approached Dre, who was seated at a table in front of the stage, and appeared to ask for an autograph before punching the veteran hit-maker, police said.

TLC seeking replacement for Lisa 'Left Eye' Lopes

The two surviving members of TLC said they had no plans to replace Lisa "Left Eye" Lopes, but now they are looking for a temporary fill-in for the rapper who died in a car crash more than two years ago.

Rozonda "Chilli" Thomas, 33, and Tionne "T-Boz" Watkins, 34, have hooked up with UPN for a reality series aimed at finding someone who can perform with the group.

They are being careful not to say the new person will become the third member of TLC. In fact, the show is being called "R U the Girl With T-Boz and Chilli."

GREASE | Youthful actors cast to best suit roles in revamped version of classic musical at K-State

think the Rizzo I do is mine."

One of the most noticeable ways the actors have made the characters their own is a brunette Sandy, played by Rebecca Morphis. Morphis, a natural brunette, kept her original hair color.

"When I found out who I was, everybody was like 'aren't you going to be blond?" Morphis, freshman in theater, said. "I was told I was going to stay brunette, and it was basically because it is so different from the movie."

MacFarland said it's always been the theater department's policy to cast the most talented actor, but even some of the actors who were talented had voices that were too low or didn't look like greasers. This is why many of the cast members, including the two leads, are freshmen.

"When I first got cast I got a phone call, I thought they were playing a big senior prank on me," Morphis said. "So I didn't believe anything 'til I saw the cast list."

Michael Weiser, who plays Danny, said he was just hoping to be seen on stage.

"I was in Topeka, and a friend called me and told me 'you got Danny Zuko.' I said 'that's funny, now what'd I really get?" Weiser, freshman in theater, said.

The actors playing the greasers were close friends even before casting began. Weiser said he asked some of the other guys on the floor to come and audition with him and they turned out to be Kenickie and Roger.

"Three of us live on the same floor of the same dorm together," he said. "If we see each other walking to class we'll all walk together, we ride back together."

The two leads see the similarities to their characters differently. Morphis, said she identifies with being new to campus, but Weiser said he doesn't see much Danny Zuko in himself.

"I'm definitely not a cool person, so being Danny Zuko on the street is not exactly what I do," he said. "Danny Zuko's kind of a jerk so I hope nobody thinks I'm Danny Zuko."

promotional reasons and to help out.

Betty Book, senior administrative assistant for JCC, said she used to be a smoker for about 25 years.

"I quit several times before, not usually for very long – six months, or a year, or two days, or even on the smokeout day," she said.

She said she can remember the exact day she quit nearly nine years ago: Jan. 5.

"It was really an important day," Book said. "Quitting smoking was an important decision."

She quit because she didn't have any cigarettes left, and decided it was time, she said.

After she quit, Book said she could smell again, breathe better and had more money.

"It's really good healthwise and financially," she said.

Lafene Health Center has a free program for students wanting to quit. It's called K-Staters Inspired to Stop Smoking.

Carrol Kennedy, health promotions director, said students can set up appointments with her to take advantage of this program.

KISS also has group sessions once a month, including at 4:30 p.m. today.

"We're trying to do smokeout everyday here," she said.

IRAQ | Coalition continues isolated fighting in Fallujah

was slightly injured in the hand, officers said.

The rush of warplanes streaking through the low-lying clouds shook the city and blasts sent smoke into the sky. The U.S. military said airstrikes Wednesday were concentrated in southwestern Fallujah, destroying enemy positions.

The U.S. military says it is fighting pockets of insurgents after taking most of Fallujah.

The car bomb came during clashes in Beiji, a city 155 miles north of the capital, witnesses said. The vehicle hit a convoy and exploded, then U.S. soldiers opened fire.

Ten people were killed and nine others wounded, hospital officials said, though it was not clear how many were caused by the blast. The 1st Infantry Division said three U.S. soldiers were wounded in the suicide attack. Beiji is the site of Iraq's largest oil refinery and a major power station.

U.S. forces and insurgents also battled for three hours in the center of the insurgent-heavy city of Ramadi, west of Fallujah. Hospital officials said seven people were killed and 13 people wounded in the clashes, which left two residential buildings in flames.

A police spokesman in Karbala said a police officer from the city had reported that 31 policemen returning from training in Jordan were kidnapped over the weekend by insurgents who attacked their hotel in western Iraq. The spokesman said the report was not confirmed.

The Interior Ministry and the office of Prime Minister Iyad Allawi said they have not been able to confirm the report. A spokesman for the U.S. Embassy in Amman said he had not heard the report.

The police officer who made the report said he escaped a raid Sunday by armed men on the hotel in the town of Rutba, near the Jordan border, according to the police spokesman.

The officer said around 20 armed men attacked the hotel, covering the captives' heads with black bags and tying their hands before dragging them away, the spokesman said. The officer said he was beaten but was not abducted.

Meanwhile, Iraqi security forces, backed by U.S. Marines, freed a captive Iraqi truck driver during a raid south of Baghdad, the U.S. military said. The rescued hostage, who was not identified, was taken to a nearby U.S. base, where he was treated and released.

In Baghdad, some 3,000 protesters peacefully demanded the release of seven followers of Shiite Ayatollah Mahmoud al-Hassani, who had been detained by U.S. forces in the past week.

The northern city of Mosul, where insurgents launched an uprising last week, appeared calmer, the military said Wednesday, after a U.S. assault to restore control. On a handful of small arms attacks continued, the military said.

The U.S. military said it was expanding its investigation into the fatal shooting of a wounded man by a Marine in a Fallujah mosque over the weekend. The investigation will also look into whether other wounded men in the mosque were also shot and killed, a spokesman said.

The probe was prompted by videotaped pool pictures by NBC that showed the shooting during an operation of the 3rd Battalion, 1st Marine Regiment in the mosque on Saturday.

Allawi is "very concerned" about the shooting, his office said. American and Iraqi authorities have been trying to stem outrage over the shootings among Iraqis, particularly the Sunni Arab minority, and Arabs across the region. U.S. Ambassador John Negroponte expressed regret over the shooting but said it should not undermine U.S. efforts to remove guerrillas from the city.

SCHOOL BOARD | Contingency fund of $1 million available in event district faces unanticipated situations

In the previous school board meeting, Seymour said the contingency fund is money that has been put aside for unanticipated situations. The fund was used last year to settle negotiations with teachers.

Seymour said the contingency fund has slightly less than $1 million, which is about $600,000 less than the current budget deficit.

Shroyer said he opposes relying on reserves.

"I don't think we want to send the message that we can make it through this year if this doesn't pass," he said. "The quarter-cent sales tax issue is to maintain, as best we can, our infrastructure, our programs, so when soldiers come with an influx of kids we'll be ready."

School board members are concerned about the number of students that may come along with the 3,400 soldiers who will be moving to Fort Riley beginning in January.

Martin said a petition should be gathered before taking the sales tax proposal to City Commission.

"There's so much politics flavoring what the commissioners might do, it makes me nervous to go to them," he said.

Knopp disagreed.

"I'm concerned about counting on a petition if we're serious about the sales tax issue," she said.

Man drowns in lake

Resident dies after canoe capsizes

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A Manhattan man drowned after a boating accident Wednesday afternoon.

Franklin D. Johnson, 69, died after his canoe capsized, throwing both him and his wife, Lucille, into the water near the Blue Valley Yacht Club.

Franklin Johnson became entangled in a rope, making it difficult to hold his head above water, according to a Riley County Police Department press release.

Lucille Johnson untangled the rope, but her husband was unable to stay above water after he was freed.

The Riley County Underwater Recovery Team responded to the scene at 4 p.m. and found him at 5:10 p.m.

Resuscitation by medical personnel was unsuccessful and Franklin Johnson was pronounced dead on scene.

Student advances to district level

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State student Seth Bridge will continue on to the district level competition for the Rhodes Scholarship Saturday in Minnesota.

Bridge
SENIOR IN POLITICAL SCIENCE

Bridge, senior in political science, history and international studies, first competed along with three other K-State students at the state level competition Wednesday.

He is one of the two students who competed at the state level selected to go on to the district level, which is the final level of the application, Jim Hohenbary, scholarship adviser, said.

Eight districts make up the final leg of the application. Only four scholarships are awarded per district, with a total of 32 scholarships awarded overall.

Bridge is now studying at the Moscow State Institute of International Relations in Russia and had to fly to the United States to attend his interviews.

The Rhodes Scholarship funds two to three years at Oxford University in England, Hohenbary said. The estimated cost is between $40,000-$60,000.

K-State has had 12 students receive the scholarship since 1928.

Scholarship winners will be announced Saturday at the conclusion of the interviews.

Businesses start holiday season early

By Annie M. Lewis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Santa Claus is here – and he beat the turkey to it.

The holiday season officially began in downtown Manhattan when Santa arrived there earlier this week. Manhattan Town Center and downtown businesses celebrated the holidays with a lighting ceremony, live nativity scenes and holiday sweets.

Although Sara VanAllen, marketing manager at the mall, said Santa always comes at this time, some stores around the city have started selling holiday items earlier than in past years.

Janis Crow, marketing instructor, said she has seen a big push for stores to sell Christmas items early, partially because stores want to help customers who don't like crowds.

"Some people are too busy this season, and shopping might seem like a challenge," she said. "Shoppers who really don't care for crowds go early to avoid the rush."

Target distributed its toy catalogues earlier this season and put up holiday signs to help their guests, Roberta Franzen, Target executive team leader, said.

"Our goal is to help people," she said. "We want to help our guests that want to shop early."

Sue Zschoche, associate professor of history, said she remembered a time when people went to local shops to buy gifts, but national chains are becoming the choice of many consumers.

"There is a greater competition between stores," she said. "I think the earliness of the season is about the businesses' attempt to get their sales going quicker."

Some stores put out Christmas items before Halloween to try to attract customers, Zscoche said.

Senate turns down proposed restrictions on organizations

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Community members, faculty, staff and administration who are members of student organizations at K-State can breathe a sigh of relief today.

Student organizations on campus are still required to have at least 80 percent of their members be K-State students.

On Thursday, a bill proposing to raise that requirement to 100 percent failed by a vote of 28-21-3. The bill had passed unanimously through the Campus Activity Board and been reviewed in the Senate Operations Committee prior to reaching the floor.

Inside, Page 5
Find out what happened at Thursday's Student Senate meeting.

The bill's supporters argued that organizations were being overrun in some cases by community members and that people who do not pay student activity fees were benefiting from the allocation of those fees.

Tyson Moore, Senate vice chair and CAB chair, authored the legislation along with Senate Chair Eleri Griffin.

Moore said the bill was intended to return control of these student groups to the students.

"The problem is a lot of these violations are not or cannot be detected under the current policy," he said.

Moore said about 100 of more than 300 groups on campus are believed to have non-student members.

Faculty Senate Representative Blair Reynolds said he had numerous problems with the proposed legislation.

Reynolds said the current restrictions requiring 80 percent of members to be K-State students provided for an "overwhelming student majority."

In addition, he said the non-students were providing a service for others in their groups.

"These organizations are enhanced by non-members," Reynolds said.

Your guide to this weekend's entertainment

1 | DOUBLEHEADER

With the preseason behind them, the K-State women's basketball team kicks of the 2004-05 regular season at 6 tonight at Bramlage Stadium versus Wyoming. The men's basketball team starts their regular season campaign versus North Dakota immediately after the women's game at 8:30 p.m.

The women's team begins this season ranked 19th in the nation, and former Wildcat Nicole Ohlde will be on hand before the women's game to sign autographs at 5 p.m.

2 | KNOW WHEN TO HOLD 'EM

While this week's After Hours events will be in the K-State Student Union, it will be a bit more like Las Vegas as Union Program Council sponsors the first ever K-State Texas Hold 'Em Poker Tournament.

While the tournament tables are full, spectators can still make their way to the Union to watch as the action unfolds in the Sunflower Room. All registered players should arrive by 7:30 p.m., and the tournament will run from 8 p.m. to midnight.

There will be a break at 10 p.m. for free pizza in the Union Courtyard, and a free screening of the film "Rounders" will start at midnight.

3 | SAY GOODBYE

After K-State fans get their first glimpse of the regular season for men's and women's basketball, they can head over to KSU Stadium for Senior Day as the Wildcats (4-6, 2-5 in Big 12) face the Iowa State Cyclones (5-4, 3-3 in Big 12).

After this, it's months of wintery wondering about the 2005-06 squad. Kickoff is scheduled for 11:10 a.m., and the game will be broadcast on Fox Sports Net.

4 | TURKEY LURKS ON THE HORIZON

If you're lucky enough to not have classes on Monday and Tuesday (or if you have no problem with skipping), get a head start on your Thanksgiving break.

There's a nice, long semester break after finals week in December, and taking advantage of Thanksgiving break will be good practice for the grueling weeks of relaxation during semester break.

5 | TREASURE ISLAND

An action/adventure film from Nicolas Cage and producer Jerry Bruckheimer? They're fairly common.

But one that's rated PG? It might be as rare as the treasures sought by Benjamin Franklin Gates (Cage), whose latest mission becomes a frantic search for treasure alluded to in clues from symbology on dollar bills.

That's just the story behind "National Treasure," which opens today in theaters nationwide today.

Local Mexican restaurant set to re-open Monday

By Addie Laue
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After being closed for several months, El Cazador will re-open Monday in Manhattan.

The restaurant was shut down Aug. 16 after 15 illegal immigrants were found working there.

Twelve of the 15 immigrants were deported.

Sammy Sammarai, executive vice president at S and S Development Inc., rents the Manhattan location to Santigo Palomino, the restaurant's manager.

He said Palamino was unaware of the immigrants' fake green cards.

"Santiago didn't do anything wrong," Sammarai said. "They all gave him green cards, and he believed they were real. It is impossible to get ahold of anyone at Customs to verify these things."

El Cazador was planned to re-open last Wednesday, but the event was delayed because they were understaffed.

"He hired two more cooks," Sammarai said. "They will be there and ready to open on Monday."

Sammarai said Palomino did some minor remodeling while El Cazador was closed.

In order to re-open, Palomino needed only to have the restaurant inspected by the health department. Other licenses are still valid, including the restaurant's liquor license.

Brad Claussen, building official from the codes department, said El Cazador would not need to be re-inspected unless Palamino had done major remodeling, requiring a permit to be issued.

Student group advocates for increased organ donations

By Melissa Baier
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Organ donation has become a new crusade on campus.

The members of Students for Organ Donation are beginning to enhance knowledge of organ donation and to offer new life to seemingly hopeless patients.

Students impassioned by both personal struggles and a desire to help the community incorporated this program.

Faculty adviser Reggie McGowan, is on the transplant waiting list.

Erin Miller, president of Students for Organ Donation, said the organization is hosting a campaign to inform students of their options and of the life-saving potential organ donation offers.

"We're trying to bring about awareness and to encourage students to sign donor cards. To make a difference in the lives of thousands who need organ transplants," Miller said.

Donatable organs include the heart, pancreas, kidneys, liver, lungs, and intestines. Patients also can donate tissues, tendons, ligaments, corneas, skin grafts, and heart valves, which restore function and improve the quality life.

For more information on organ donation and how to get involved call (888) 744-4531 or visit www.ksu.edu/donatelife.

Organ donations from one individual can save eight lives and affect as many as 50 individuals in some capacity.

Students for Organ Donation sponsored a visit by heart transplant recipient Tony Scuka, who spoke Tuesday of his harrowing eight-year ordeal with a rare and potentially fatal virus.

The first implication of health problems occurred six months before he was formally diagnosed, when he suffered extensive bruising for no apparent reason. Tests revealed his heart was beating at 240 beats per minute.

Furthermore, Scuka's spleen began malfunctioning and attacked his platelets, reducing the normal number from 500,000 to a dangerously low 8,000.

Doctors removed Scuka's spleen and inserted a defibrillator to control his erratic heartbeat. When the heart exceeds 180 beats, the brain begins to suffer from oxygen depletion.

"It was awful. He was a very active man and suddenly his body just couldn't keep up. We just kept waiting for the call that Tony had died," said Julie Kabriel, Scuka's niece and a member of Students for Organ Donation.

Within five weeks, one family's terrible tragedy and selfless donation led to Scuka's life-saving operation on June 26, 2004.

"I'd like to meet the family, I've got part of their family in me, and I just want to be able to tell them how grateful I am," Scuka said.

Despite the difficulties Scuka and his family have endured for the past eight years, the future looks bright, he said.

"I have a new lease on life. I'm 58 going on 25. I'm glad someone thought enough of me to give me another chance. Everyday is a new day," he said.

Ag students head home for harvest

By Jeremy Dautenhahn
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

About one-third of K-State agronomy students return home for the fall harvest.

Abby White, president of the College of Agriculture ambassadors, said about 1,000 students frequently go home.

"I think it depends on each student's situation, but a good percentage of students I know go home frequently to help out," said Barb Bremenkamp, president of the Wheat State Agronomy Club.

Gerry Posler, agronomy professor, said about a third of agronomy students go home to farm.

The students bale hay, milk cows, seed fields and clean barns, among other duties.

White said she goes home at least every other weekend.

"I help build fences, work and feed the buffalo and any other miscellaneous things that need done. I also have two horses at home, one of which I am currently training so I can show him next summer," White said.

Corey Fortin, agricultural ambassador, said his parents own a sale barn, and he goes home to work with the cattle before the Sunday sales.

"Then I help on Monday's work – the sale penning, loading, unloading and sorting cattle. With our cattle we are just moving them out to corn stalks. I also help vaccinate and work calves."

White said families must find other means to operate farms once their children go to college.

"They are better able to manage now, because my brother is finished with school and back farming with them," White said.

Many students who frequently go home are dedicated to their families and the life they were raised to love, White said.

"Going home to help out the family isn't a huge problem ... it's something you want to do, to go and help out," White said.

TO THE POINT

Senators make correct decision to keep clubs open to all

Student Senate made the right decision last night by not requiring that campus organizations have 100 percent of their members be students.

By allowing such organizations to have up to 20 percent of their members be non-students, the university is reaching out to the surrounding community.

K-State and Manhattan must interact; they're neighbors, after all.

If the Senate had passed the bill, the division between the two sides would have grown much deeper, and student life would suffer as a result.

Another important issue is that many such groups, including rugby, would not be able to function without non-students attending and participating.

All students pay money into the funds for these organizations, but it's relatively inexpensive for the students to keep them up and running, especially when the benefits are considered.

By keeping the standard at 80 percent, Student Senate ensured a better experience for all K-State students, while providing a link to those on the other side of the two-foot wall.

Besides, 80 out of 100 is a landslide in and of itself; requiring more is utterly redundant.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

A way with words

Job prospects for English majors better than some think

LETA REPPERT

English majors have tons of job opportunities when they graduate – burger flipper, pizza delivery person, ditch digger, garbage collector, etc.

Or so goes my younger brother's favorite joke, which I, as an English major, have heard far too many times.

Garrison Keillor takes this joke to a whole new level on "A Prairie Home Companion," when a supposed English-major-burger-flipper waxes poetic (as opposed to waxing poetically, which he would be doing were he cleaning floors or cars): "Is this a spatula which I see before me?.... Behold a car approacheth to the window. Now I must do the work fate sends me. And better it were done quickly."

While the job market for English grads is a bit better than these quotes would suggest (I think), jobs in English are not the most lucrative.

Of course, English majors can go on to become lawyers, journalists, teachers, and much more, as the English department website points out, but the fact remains that an English major does not directly prepare students to go immediately (or perhaps, ever) to high paying jobs.

When I talked to a couple of my professors about pursuing a master's or Ph.D. in English, they warned me that it isn't worth becoming a professor unless I am sure that that is what I want to do, since the pay is not that high and the work is underappreciated.

Their advice combined with the time, effort, and annoyance of graduate school applications and taking both the general and subject tests of the GRE should be quite enough to scare any reasonable person away from the field.

Or so some would think.

However, there are many benefits of being an English major.

For example, English majors are great babysitters. It's a well-known fact (or should be) that poetry puts kids to sleep. Try "The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock" sometime. "Let us go then, you and I, / When the evening is spread out against the sky / Like a patient etherised upon a table..."

Another great benefit is that of being able to spout poetry at opportune moments, such as on dates, which comes in handy if your plan, like mine, is to make your fortune by marrying a millionaire (Hint: don't try "Prufrock" for this one).

Seriously, though, being an English major does have benefits.

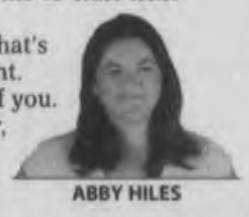
One is that majoring in English forces you to analyze texts and be able to write about them. These analytical and writing skills are crucial in any number of jobs.

One of my professors (not an English professor) once told me that he thought English majors can teach any subject. Obviously, they need to have knowledge of that subject, but his point was that majoring in English provides a well-rounded education that is excellent for preparing teachers.

In fact, the literature with teaching certification track in the English department prepares students to teach high school English when they graduate – certainly better than flipping burgers.

To quote Mark D. Larabee of the U.S. Naval Academy, "A technical background lines you up for a narrowly-defined specialty in graduate school or industry. A background in English, however, gives you the power to present yourself as the best candidate when you seek scholarships and admission to a multitude of graduate programs..."

In short, an English major really is good preparation for life in the real world. It may not be what you are looking for if you want to be able to jump right into a high-paying job after college, but, if you really enjoy the subject, it is definitely worth it.



"To thine own self be true," and all of that. "Aye, there's the rub."

Thanksgiving tradition a needed break

ABBY HILES

I would like a show of hands from those of you who are actually going to come to class next week.

Uh huh. That's what I thought. Hardly any of you.

I, however, will be sitting in my creative writing class at 4:05 pm on Tuesday not because I necessarily want to, even though I like that class.

I have already used up my obligatory three absences and now am forced to attend every class from here on out, including the one before Thanksgiving break.

I will probably be one of the two people there.

Thanksgiving break is a little on the ridiculous side. Not that I think we shouldn't get it off, but the fact that the powers that be just don't give us all the entire week off is a little stupid.

Think about it. Most classes are cancelled that week anyway. Thousands of students (out-of-state and otherwise) are hopping on planes. Besides, what can a professor really do with one class period in a week? Not a whole lot.

One of my professors told us he was going to be gone but had found us a substitute, so not to worry. Just what a bunch of 21-24 year olds need: a babysitter.

Thanksgiving break is a tease, really. It is a tease and a joke to those of us who worship Christmas break and the end of a long semester. Our academic calendar waves these three days in our face, showing us how great life is when we aren't going to school full-time, and then yanks it away and brings us back to reality.

And in case you didn't notice, after Thanksgiving break we only have two full weeks of school and then finals. That's it. So let's hear it for two more weeks!

As I see it, Thanksgiving isn't a real holiday anyway. It is just an excuse to spend four hours watching a televised parade filled with 150-foot inflatable cartoon characters (which I do every year) and contribute to the country's rising obesity rate (pumpkin pie, here I come).

Fathers, brothers, and other football lovers alike spend the entire day huddled around the TV switching between the Cowboy/Lions game and whatever other gridiron contest that happens to be on. Crazy relatives tell stories of past Thanksgivings while lingering over the last piece of pie. And everyone gets a little sleepy after indulging in pounds of delicious turkey and suffering from the lasting effects of tryptophan.

Thanksgiving Day, yet again, comes to a close and my favorite part hasn't even happened yet.

You see in my family, Turkey Day celebrations aren't complete until about noon the next day. Every year my grandma, mother and I get up at the crack of dawn and hit the unbelievable sales that only happen on that one Friday.

We aren't completely psycho like the moms who wait in line at 4 a.m. to grab TVs at Best Buy for $99, but we do hit the stores around 6 a.m. After all, most of every thing is gone by 9 a.m. anyway; therefore, why not make a morning out of it?

So as I sit in creative writing next Tuesday, all by my lonesome, I'll probably be complaining to Imad about having class and looking at the window wishing I was in my car headed to my mom's house.

Thanksgiving might not be a real holiday, but its tradition. And far be it from me to stomp on years of three days off, green bean casserole, and post-holiday shopping.

Saying that homosexuals have the same freedom to marry as everyone else is like outlawing every church except the Baptist Church and then trying to claim we all have equal freedom to go to church.

So I was just watching the new Lil John video, and they're drinking out of gas tanks that say "crunk" on the side. What?

Homosexuals do not have the same freedom to marry as everyone else. Everyone else has the freedom to marry someone they love; we don't.

Does the KSU Math Department get their kicks by asking us stuff on the test that wasn't in the study guide? I'm just curious, because it sure seemed that way during the Calc 1 test last Tuesday.

How come when I wear my glasses people say I look smart? Do only smart people have bad eyesight?

The mullet is dead, and I feel as if a part of me has died with it.

To the girl in the single room in Moore Hall: you know who you are. If you could please take it to your boyfriend's place once in a while, we would all really appreciate it!

To the loud, obnoxious girl in my 12:30 sociology class: shut up or don't come.

It seems that for every hot girl, there's some guy tired of screwing her.

Smoking menthol cigarettes causes anal bleeding.

It's nice to see that over $100,000 is wasted on useless jet-setting by our beloved Wefald and Coach Snyder. Thanks guys for making our tuition shoot up again!

"You are the best sister a backstabbing tramp ever hoped for," that's why I love soap operas.

Snyder, what you should have told the news people at your conference was, "Don't hate me cuz I don't have to pay money to ride in a private jet."

Nice to see K-State still waters even though it's rained the past three days, and it's supposed to rain the next seven. Way to go.

Group: Iran bought nuclear plans

By George Jahn
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

VIENNA, Austria – Iran bought blueprints of a nuclear bomb from the same black-market network that gave Libya such diagrams and continues to enrich uranium despite a commitment to suspend the technology that can be used for atomic weapons, an Iranian opposition group said Wednesday.

Farid Soleimani, a senior official for the National Council for Resistance in Iran, said the diagram was provided by Abdul Qadeer Khan, the Pakistani head of the nuclear network linked to clandestine programs in both Iran and Libya.

"He gave them the same weapons design he gave the Libyans as well as more in terms of weapons design," Soleimani told reporters in Vienna.

Soleimani said the diagram and related material on how to make nuclear weapons was handed to the Iranians between 1994 and 1996.

In 2001, Khan also delivered to Iran an amount of highly enriched uranium, the material that can form the core of nuclear warheads, he said. He said he didn't think the amount was enough to make a weapon.

Soleimani's organization is the political wing of the People's Mujahedeen, or Mujahedeen Khalq, which the United States considers a terrorist organization. While much of its information has not been confirmed, it was instrumental in 2002 in revealing Iran's enrichment program.

Mark Gwozdecky, spokesman for the International Atomic Energy Agency said, "we follow up every solid lead," but added the U.N. nuclear watchdog would have no further comment.

A diplomat familiar with the agency and its investigations into Libya's and Iran's nuclear programs said the IAEA has long believed that Iran received from Khan material similar to Libya's. But the IAEA has never been able to confirm it received blueprints, the diplomat told The Associated Press, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Libya bought engineers' drawings of a Chinese-made bomb through the Khan network as part of a covert nuclear program that it renounced last year.

Iran says it does not have such drawings, and no evidence has been found to dispute that claim.

Undated picture shows Pakistan's Nuclear program architect, Dr. Abdul Qadeer Khan, left, receiving Pakistan's top civil award 'Pride of Performance' by then President Rafiq Tarar. According to media reports Wednesday, an Iranian opposition group known as the People's Mujahedeen claimed Iran obtained weapons-grade uranium and design for a nuclear bomb from a Pakistani scientist who had confessed selling nuclear secrets abroad. Abdul Qadeer Khan, who in February 2003 confessed in a televised statement that he had been involved in passing on nuclear secrets to Iran, Libya and North Korea, has been detained at his upscale home in the capital since then.

Cat Cannon group endures funding shortage

By Annie M. Lewis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Cat Cannon will be firing T-shirts Saturday after overcoming funding struggles with the K-State-Salina Student Governing Association Senate.

The funding for Cannon, a campus organization, was almost dropped by the Salina Senate.

Salina SGA Treasurer Justin Kling, junior in computer science technology, said the budget is less than previous years due to a lack of privilege fee money.

The Cat Cannon can receive money from the allocations budget, Kling said. The overall budget was smaller than usual this year.

"With this administration, they did not receive any cuts in funding compared to other clubs," Kling said. "Other campus clubs sustained severe funding cuts from the SGA Senate."

Although the Cat Cannon is sponsored by Tony's Pizza in Salina, the club still needed more money from SGA to operate, said Daniel Mathewson, senior in mechanical engineering technology and Cat Cannon president.

"When the Allocations Committee couldn't give us the full amount we asked for, we reformatted our budget," he said. "But as I looked at the smaller amount, I realized we needed more money."

Kling said the Allocations Committee granted the club $1,000 at first and suggested the club look for further outside funding.

"The committee was concerned about how much could be given to keep things fair and use student's money in a way that benefits them," he said.

The Cat Cannon went again to SGA and asked for more money, Kling said, and a separate bill requesting an additional $1,000 was introduced Tuesday to the Senate.

"The Senate amended the allocation to $3,511.80, and the separate bill for $1,000 was removed," Kling said. "The separate bill would take money from the general account rather than the allocations account."

Mathewson said part of the controversy arose when SGA was afraid the shirts were not beneficial to the student body.

"We went to two meetings to help them understand why we needed the shirts," he said. "They thought we were just buying shirts and giving them away."

The benefits of the shirts, Mathewson said, is that they promote K-State, the Salina campus and SGA.

"It's amazing how crazy people get over these shirts," he said. "People go to extremes, jumping over each other to get them."

Greg Spaulding, academic adviser for Cat Cannon, said the club members work harder than people think.

"They are responsible for building and maintaining the Cat Cannon," he said. "They also travel around to high school football games and they went to the state fair."

Spaulding said this is the first year the Cat Cannon has had any financial difficulties.

Senators re-examine election regulations

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

At Thursday's Student Senate meeting, senators continued addressing changes in the elections regulations following last semester's 3-vote victory by current Student Body President Hayley Urkevich and Vice President Erik Ankrom.

The bill, which passed unanimously, alters the informal election regulations in Student Governing Association's bylaws to require that no member on the Election Review Committee or the Student Tribunal be involved in campaigning for others.

Senate Operations Chair Sarah Laib said members of these two groups, charged with overseeing problems with elections, would not be allowed to campaign for or contribute to any bid for an SGA office.

Laib said at the body's next meeting, scheduled for Dec. 2, a 16-page bill would be introduced outlining further changes to the election regulations addressing issues which arose in last year's campaign.

Also at Thursday's meeting, bills addressing the disbursement of the City/University Project Funds for 2006 and the increase in the Office of Student Activities and Service's privilege fee allocations, were discussed.

The City/University Fund is a fund which consists of sales tax revenue generated on K-State's campus that is used to benefit K-State and the community.

Governmental Relations Chair Matt King said his committee recommended the funds, totaling $367,144, be used to continue funding a multi-year commitment to widening Denison Avenue, funding the installation of street lights and two lighted crosswalks on North Manhattan Avenue and the continued improvement of the University Gardens Project.

The OSAS privilege fee request, which was passed by the Privilege Fee Committee without alteration, calls for a $20,000 increase. This request will be voted on at the Dec. 2 Senate meeting.

Privilege Fee Chair Michael Burns said the increase was almost entirely due to increases in Senate officer compensation and the need to make up funding for SafeRide, which can no longer come from the City/University fund.

The two bills were referred to their respective committees.

During the second open period, Ankrom addressed the body to apologize for an e-mail that he accidentally sent to a listserv in which he made statements he said he regretted.

Ankrom said his statements, meant to be his own beliefs, were not representative of the body and he apologized to anyone who was affected by them.

Research grants exceed $114 billion

By Caleb Amyot
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State has had another big year of research grants.

K-State was a hot bed for research grants during Fiscal Year 2004 with $84.5 million awarded for federal research grants, $8.5 million for various state level grants and $21.5 million from the local and private level.

These total out to be over $114 million in extramural funding, which indicates that plenty of funding is available for those professors and graduate students interested in furthering their research efforts within their particular field of study.

Ron Trewyn, vice provost for research and dean of the graduate school, who is responsible for administering the Office of Research and Sponsored Programs at K-State.

The ORSP, according to its Web site, stands as the principle agent in negotiation between K-State and all funding agencies for university projects regardless of their source.

Trewyn said many of the research grants, primarily federal grants, are in the multi-million dollar range.

All of these projects are in excess of $900,000 and were also granted to many different colleges across the campus, showing that K-State research expertise stems not from one, but several of the universities academic disciplines.

Larry Erickson of the College of Engineering was awarded more than $3 million by the U.S. Department of Defense for K-State's Urban Operations Lab.

From the College of Human Ecology, Paula Peter was awarded more than $3 million by the U.S. Department of Agriculture for research on Kansas Food Stamp Nutrition Education.

Two more projects also fell within the multi-million dollar mark FY 2004. One was an award to Charles Cocke from the College of Arts and Sciences for over $2 million by the U.S. Department of Energy for work with the Structure and Dynamics of Atoms, Ions, Molecules and Surfaces.

Daniel Marcus was awarded about $2.1 million by the U.S Department of Health and Human Services for research on Epithelial Functions in Health and Disease. Marcus is a member of the College of Veterinary Medicine.

Trewyn also made mention of Charles Rankin's $1.4 million grant for work on the Midwest Equity Assistance Center, in the College of Education. Susan Brown in the College of Arts and Sciences received a $1 million grant for research on Insertional Mutagenesis of the Red Flower Beetle.

Cats face Raiders on Saturday

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The women's volleyball team looks for its fourth-straight win at 7 p.m. Saturday in Ahearn Field House against Texas Tech.

No. 20 K-State is on its second-longest winning streak of the season after sweeping Oklahoma on Wednesday to raise its record to 18-8 overall and 12-5 in the Big 12 Conference. The Red Raiders won on Wednesday as well, snapping a four-match losing skid with a sweep of Iowa State, which improved their record to 9-14 overall and 5-12 in the Big 12.

Coach Suzie Fritz said a big challenge in facing Texas Tech is the different look the Red Raiders give to opponents.

"They have speed, and they run a very fast motion offense, that if they pass well can be very difficult to defend," Fritz said. "That's always been a characteristic of them – they ball-control well, and they run very fast. It's a little bit unorthodox, something we don't see a lot."

Outside hitter Kelly Johnson leads Tech with 4.52 kills per game, followed by Kiley Lyons with 2.61 kills per game. Setter Laura Grote averages 9.59 assists per game, and libero Desiree Batista averages 3.64 digs per game.

With three matches left in the regular season, Fritz said the Wildcats are focused on these last matches as the NCAA Tournament draws near.

"This is going to be a big challenge for us to first and foremost take care of Texas Tech and not look too far forward, and then to go into our last two matches," Fritz said. "What I like about it is we control our own destiny. If we take care of business and take care of these next three, then we put ourselves in position to have an opportunity to host (NCAA first-round matches)."

Fritz said the Big 12 season in itself will have the Cats ready come tournament time.

"Your preparation for the Big 12 Conference is your preparation for the postseason," she said. "As you prepare for each and every opponent and the challenges and differences that each team presents, I think that's how you prepare for the NCAA tournament."

K-State is currently tied with Missouri for fourth in the Big 12, a game back of third-place Texas A&M.

The Wildcats play both teams in their last two matches.

Sophomore outside hitter Sandy Werner goes up to make a kill during the first game of the match against Oklahoma on Wednesday evening at Ahearn Field House. Werner had 11 kills during the match.

No. 19-ranked women's team starts season with 2 weekend games

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's basketball team begins its defense of the Big 12 Co-Championship at 6 tonight as the Wildcats host Wyoming to begin the regular season.

After two exhibition games, No. 19 K-State will play the first game of a double-header with the men's team, with the women's game.

Sophomore guard Claire Coggins said the team is ready to show the fans what they are all about.

"We are ready to come and be very intense, because this is for real now," Coggins said. "We want to come out with an aggressive attitude. We want to be intimidating to our opponents. I think our fans can look for some major kick-butt attitude out of our team."

Wyoming returns three starters – guard Ashley Elliott, center Sara Hippen, and forward Kristen Lenhardt – from a team that finished 11-18 overall last year. Elliott, who averaged 16.9 points and 3.2 assists per game last season, leads the Cowgirls. Elliott was the second-leading scorer in the Mountain West Conference last year.

Coach Deb Patterson said Wyoming's returning talent makes them a dangerous squad.

"Wyoming has a lot of new personnel, but three really great returning

Men's team hopes extra preseason scrimmages help in regular season

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Now, Coach Jim Wooldridge begins to find out if those six exhibition games paid off.

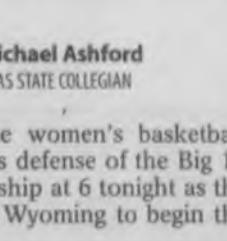
After an extended preseason schedule that included a trip to Canada for four games, along with two games at home, the K-State men open regular season play tonight against North Dakota State at Bramlage Coliseum.

The game is the second half of a men's/women's doubleheader and will begin at approximately 8:30 p.m.

Following a 14-14 overall record a season ago and a 6-10 mark in conference play, Wooldridge said the coaching staff and the team expect to take a step upward this year.

"I think these kids understand, the ones that were here a year ago, that they were within an eyelash of moving up, and they can see that they were close to being able to win more games in the league," Wooldridge said.

K-State went 5-1 in exhibition play, and the Wildcat playing rotation is fairly established.



Wooldridge said on the perimeter, sophomore transfer Fred Peete, freshman Clent Stewart and sophomores Lance Harris and Cartier Martin will see the bulk of the court time, with junior Schyler Thomas playing a utility role.

Cats' fan support at final game of season will prove meaningful

K-State fans, are you ready?

Are you ready for Saturday's showdown with the hated Cyclones of Iowa State? Are you ready to come to KSU Stadium and watch a home team that is out of bowl contention and guaranteed a losing season for the first time since 1992? And finally, are you ready to support a team in its most meaningful game of the 2004 season?

KENT HILDEBRAND

Meaningful, you say?

Meaningful to Iowa State, sure. They can still capture a Big 12 North Division title and a trip to a bowl game, but for K-State, how can it be anything more than a love-fest for Darren Sproles and the other 21 Wildcat seniors?

If the only reason to come to Saturday's game was to thank the seniors for their careers here at K-State, in which they had a 32-18 record and won a Big 12 championship, that would be enough.

But for K-State football and Wildcat fans everywhere, this one should mean much more.

Sure, this game will mark the end of the most disappointing season in recent memory, but K-State fans, the only thing that's been as disappointing as watching the Wildcats falter this year is you.

Yes, like the team, you once had a great reputation and national respect. You were few but mighty. You made quaint little KSU Stadium a nightmare for opposing teams, and you flocked to road games and bowls by the thousands. You printed up t-shirts labeling yourselves "the best fans in college football."

And then something happened.

The Wildcats were still winning, but for some reason you started losing your fire. A nationally-ranked football team wasn't a novelty anymore. You quickly forgot about the 0-for-autumn days of the 1980s and a program known as "Futility U." An 11-win season wasn't good enough anymore.

Last year's Big 12 Championship perked you up a little bit, but then home losses to the likes of Fresno State and a three-game conference losing streak brought you back down to Earth.

You still came to games, but the energy was waning. You didn't expect a win over Oklahoma. You shuddered when Allen Webb started against Nebraska. You yelled profanities at Jesse Tetuan

Football | Reports: Holtz to retire, Spurrier could replace

Lou Holtz will retire as coach at South Carolina after the season, the Associated Press learned Thursday night, apparently paving the way for Steve Spurrier to replace him.

Holtz

Holtz told his team before Thursday's practice that he was retiring, according to a source close to the program who spoke on condition of anonymity. All season, the 67-year-old Holtz said he was worn out and tired, and even said Spurrier would be a good choice to succeed him.

The Tennessean of Nashville reported Thursday that Spurrier had agreed to take over at South Carolina, if and when Holtz stepped down.

An announcement regarding Spurrier, who won a national championship at Florida, is expected next week, the newspaper said, citing an anonymous source close to the situation.

Holtz is the eighth-winningest coach in Division I with 249 victories at six schools. He took each school — William & Mary, North Carolina State, Arkansas, Minnesota, Notre Dame and South Carolina — to bowls in his second season after inheriting losing teams.

NFL | Owens apologizes for 'Monday Night' controversy

Terrell Owens apologized Thursday to anyone offended by his role in a steamy segment with actress Nicollette Sheridan during the intro to "Monday Night Football."

Owens

"I felt like it was clean, the organization felt like it was a clean skit and I think it just really got taken out of context with a lot of people and I apologize for that," Owens said. "Personally I didn't think it would have offended anyone and, if it did, I apologize."

ABC and the Eagles also apologized this week, with team management saying it wished the segment "hadn't aired."

The opening, which has generated complaints to ABC and the Federal Communications Commission, showed Sheridan wearing only a towel and provocatively asking Owens to skip the game for her as the two stood alone in a locker room. She drops the towel and jumps into Owens' arms.

MLB | Expos' move to Washington, D.C., delayed

The Montreal Expos remain in limbo, already out of one home but not quite ready to move into a new one.

Instead of rubber-stamping the Expos' proposed move to Washington, D.C., as expected Thursday, Major League Baseball owners made the surprise decision to table the vote. Commissioner Bud Selig said the move will still take place, with a vote by owners coming by Dec. 6.

Baseball officials are so confident the team will be in Washington for its April 15 home opener, in fact, that alternatives weren't even discussed.

Season tickets went on sale Thursday morning, and the team announced that manager Frank Robinson had agreed to a one-year contract extension through next season.

Selig said the issues that delayed the vote were "internal," describing them as "housekeeping" matters.

He declined to be more specific, but one could be baseball's negotiations with Baltimore Orioles owner Peter Angelos.

Angelos had previously objected to having a team move just 40 miles from his Camden Yards stadium, but he gave his blessing in September after reaching an understanding with baseball that protects him financially.

'Halo' strikes again

Popular video game sequel becomes instant hit with K-State gamers

By Paul Suter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In a world with aliens, tanks, heavy gunfire and grenade melees, some K-State students sacrifice studies to fight.

This is not the next world war; it is "Halo 2," the follow up to "Halo: Combat Evolved," and to some, arguably the most popular sequel for the X-Box video game system to date.

Clancey Livingston, freshman in biology and education, said he bought "Halo 2" the day it came out (Nov. 9), said the big deal is with the way the game was made.

"The game is really exceptionally done. The graphics are great and has a deeply involved storyline," Livingston said.

Putting in almost 30 hours so far, Livingston said he has liked the gameplay more than the first game, but not so much the storyline.

"'Halo 2' is almost a requirement to buy after playing the original. It is a good franchise if you feel like you have to buy the other," Livingston said.

Livingston said most of the gamers excited about "Halo 2" are male, but he has a few female friends who have played the game.

"They don't play much." he said, "'Halo 2' is more for college guys than anyone else."

Featuring new and updated weapons along with a new online multi-player option for X-Box Live members, "Halo 2" is almost an entirely new game, but still follows up the original story from "Halo" said Kyle Hill, freshman in computer engineering.

"I pre-ordered the game before it came out and picked it up the day it was released," Hill said.

Hill, who has played "Halo 2" almost every day since he bought it, likes the sequel better.

"I think the storyline is better in 'Halo 2.' Plus you can play online, whereas 'Halo' did not have that option. You can also play as the Covenant, or the enemies of the game."

The "Halo" games, Hill said, are really the only huge games for the X-Box.

"I bought my X-Box to play the first 'Halo'. 'Halo 2' already has a huge fan base because of the popularity of the first game," Hill said.

"The ending of 'Halo 2' leaves players to believe that a third will come out. When 'Halo 3' comes out for the X-Box 2, then I will have to buy an X-Box 2 to play the new 'Halo' game," he said.

Deciding on which Halo game is better, Travis Tozer, junior in mechanical engineering was quick to answer.

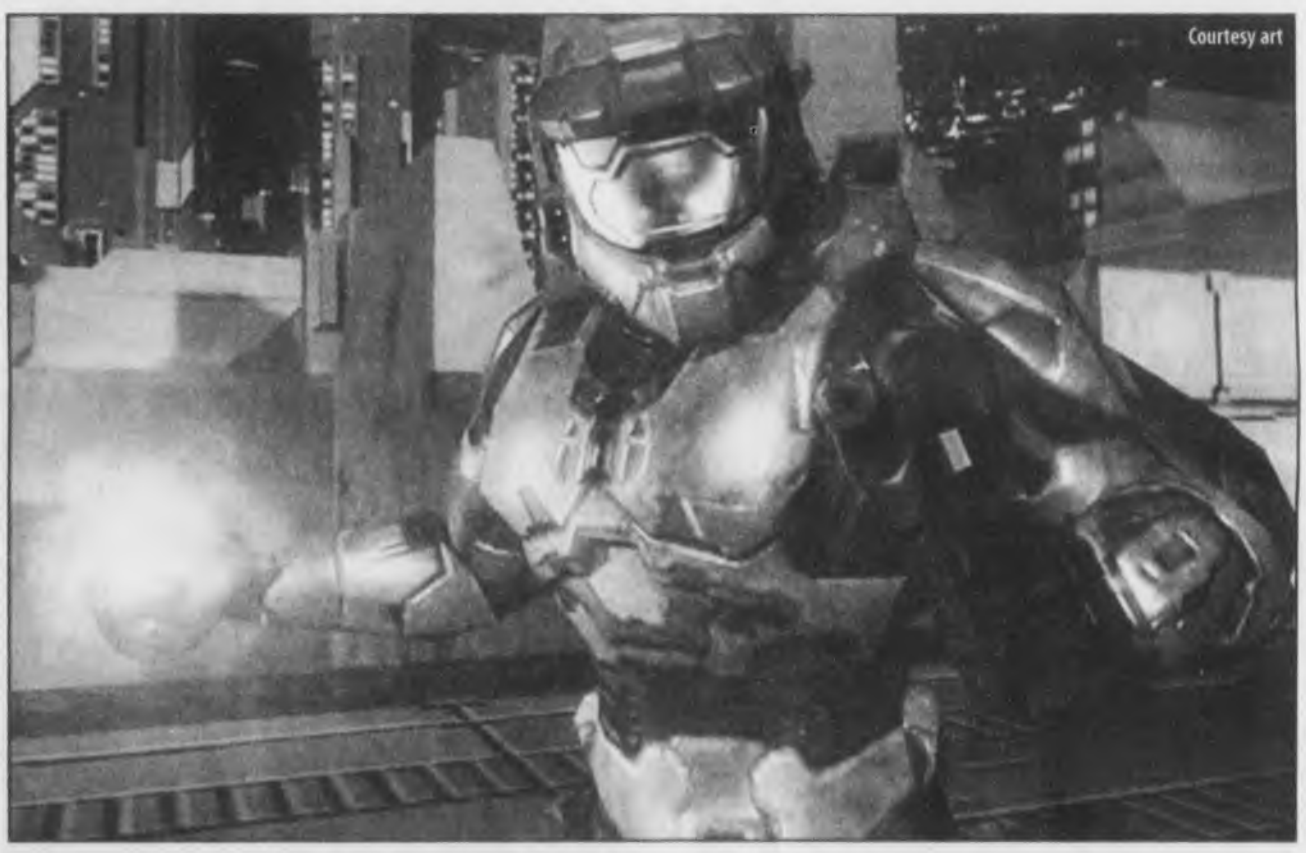
"'Halo' was so much better than 'Halo 2.' I feel the movement is much smoother and there was more tricks to master," Tozer said.

"'Halo 2' is not a good sequel because it lost to what made the original so good," he said.

One feature Tozer said he appreciated in "Halo 2" was the online play, in which as many as 16 people around the world could play interactively.

"You have to have an account to play online, but can bring in a guest in some scenarios.

"There is a ranking system to where you only play people at your skill. It keeps high ranking players from playing low ranking players," Tozer said.



Having anticipating "Halo 2" for four years with many others from the gaming world, Tozer said remains loyal to the original.

"It is not a bad game as itself, but won't last as long as the original. I think there won't be a long lasting appeal to the players, even though it will still sell commercially," he said.

Fast facts
'Halo 2'

- As a sequel, "Halo 2" is setting record highs in sales according to the Associated Press. Its sales figures were more than $125 million in the first day.
- Sequels to video games are the hot topic for many big name companies such as Sony, Microsoft and Nintendo, wrote Matt Slagle, Associated Press technology writer. Such big name sequels include "Half Life 2," "Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas," "World of Warcraft," and "Metroid Prime 2: Echoes."

Pick-up lines cannot compete with sincerity

LACEY STORER

I can still remember the time in high school when a guy walked up to me and said, "I just wanted to thank you for doing your part for keeping the earth beautiful."

One of my friend's first college dating experience was some guy trying to use, "Hey, is that a space suit you're wearing? 'Cause your body is out of this world."

My friend Whitney, dressed as a pirate for Halloween and got a lot of, "Can I search for your buried treasure?" lines.

What do all of these lines have in common? They were all used by guys in some kind of attempt to hit on us, and they all sucked.

Pick-up lines have come a long way since the day of "Hey baby, what's your sign?" but that doesn't mean they've gotten any better or more effective.

Surely at some point in time, maybe when our parents were in college, that pick-up line worked and was a good way for shy guys to get in with a hot girl.

But such is not the case anymore. Pick-up lines have become the lowest form of winning someone over, not far above stalking.

So guys, if you are still using a pick-up line as your first move, then it's time to revamp your game plan.

The problem with pick-up lines is that there are no good ones. No matter what line comes out of your mouth, it's extremely hard to make it sound smooth.

Mostly they just come out sounding corny or cheesy or crude and make girls want to do nothing but laugh in your face or run away. Either way, it's not a desirable situation for you.

Another disadvantage of pick-up lines is that they're all so generic.

No girl is going to mistake any pick-up line as a sincere compliment. If it sounds like something you could say to any other girl in the room, we assume you probably already have.

Pick-up lines will not only earn you ridicule from the opposite sex, but from any males around you as well. A couple of Collegian sports writers told me that if they see you trying to use a pick-up line, they will make fun of you for being so lame.

So keep in mind that if your pick-up line fails, not only are you getting mocked by the girl and her friends, but probably by your buddies as well.

So what should you do instead of using a pick-up line? Use something real instead. Give a girl a compliment, a sincere one.

Tell her she has a pretty smile or a nice laugh. This will at least make us think you were paying attention to us and noticed our unique features.

If you're at some type of event or party, make a comment related to the event. Talk about the scene, the music, the guy dancing by himself in the corner. It's something she'll have some comment on.

Pretty much anything that is natural and leads to a real conversation will be 10 times more successful than using a pick up line.

Just being relaxed and confident is enough to get a girl interested, no need for "Good thing I have my library card, 'cause I want to check you out."

And even if it's not successful and you get rejected, at least you didn't get rejected using a stupid pickup line.

Howard Stern promotes switch to satellite

Shock jock Howard Stern, surrounded by strippers and cheered by thousands of fans, began promoting his switch to satellite radio Thursday at a Manhattan rally where he handed out free boom boxes and satellite subscriptions.

Stern

"Down with the FCC!" Stern told a legion of sign-waving backers gathering at Union Square. "They have ruined commercial broadcasting."

Across the square on Fifth Avenue, the culture war took on another slant, with fans of the rival satellite radio XM staging their own rally, hoisting placards touting the shock jock antics of its "Opie & Anthony" radio team.

Stern personally handed out a free Sirius boom box to the first 500 fans, while he handed another 20,000 redeemable certificates for free radios.

The certificates must be redeemed online by Nov. 24, and the redeemers must sign on for a year, at $12.95 a month, of Sirius — which would leave them just short of Stern's January 2006 debut.

Riders prepare for away meet

By Kelly Olson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There will be a lot of firsts this weekend for the K-State equestrian team's Western squad.

Nichole Tiffany, first-year assistant coach focusing on the Western squad, will be taking her team to its first away show of the season, as they travel to the Black Hawk Western Show on Saturday and Sunday in Kewanee, Ill.

As a 2002 K-State graduate and former rider, Tiffany said she knows what it is like to be a member of the team, and now the leader.

"It is very different being on the other side," Tiffany said. "I can really appreciate now what my coaches were trying to impart on me. I hope I can be some use to the girls on the team and help them learn something I didn't know."

When she was a member of the team during her college years, Tiffany aided in acquiring NCAA sanctioning for K-State.

Growing up in a family of professional trainers began Tiffany's path to a passion for horses.

Tiffany participated in local and national competitions, which eventually led to her chance to represent Kansas at the American Quarter Horse Youth Association World Championship Show from 1995 to 1999.

Despite being on the other side of the coach-rider relationship, Tiffany said she really enjoys coaching.

"I love it. This is the best of both worlds. I am in the equine industry and working with girls with my same interests," Tiffany said.

"The girls have been completely accommodating and accepting and very great to work with. I hope I am giving something back to them they can take and use."

The team has been taking the knowledge Tiffany has to offer, following the team's K-State Western Show on Oct. 9, and is ready to travel this weekend.

"We have been working on riding with precision, balance, mental edge and overall putting it together with no mental errors," Tiffany said.

Senior and team captain Kristin Tanney said she is excited and very well prepared to ride to success this weekend.

"My goal for the team this weekend is to beat Black Hawk all three shows," Tanney said. "It's their home turf, and they've really stepped up these last few years, but we've got a fresh start."

Many teams that participated at the K-State Western Show will ride in Illinois, including Iowa State, Northwest Missouri State and Truman State.

K-State placed first at both shows that weekend out of the six teams participating.

Senior Heather Zsamba said she attributes much of the team's success to the coaching and captains.

"The coaches are very important in building and refining our skills. Without coaches, it would be difficult to succeed and be as united as we are," Zsamba said.

"Also, the team captains are not only our leaders, but they help to keep us joined as a team and leave the all-important fun factor in there."

Tiffany said the team is ready to go.

"I anticipate great things. I am very excited because the girls are very focused and ready.

"I am anticipating nothing less than what we have had in the past," she said.

players who understand the system well," Patterson said. "I think it will put our players in a position to make plays on the run on the defensive end of the floor."

During K-State's two exhibition wins over Emporia State and Athletes in Action, the Wildcat defense was smothering. The Wildcats held the teams to 45 and 44 points, respectively.

However, Patterson said she expects more from her defense.

"Defensively, we had a lot of areas in which we need to make great improvements defensively, as the level of opponent continues to rise," Patterson said. "I want our overall intensity on the defensive end to be at a much higher level that where we've been."

The last time K-State and Wyoming met, the Cowgirls prevailed 73-70 in overtime on Nov. 25, 2000. Nicole Ohlde was the leading scorer for the Wildcats, as she poured in 36 points in the game.

The Wildcats will look for more of the same this time, as they hope to establish a strong post game against the Cowgirls.

Junior center Jessica McFarland said the Wildcats are out to prove the doubters wrong this year.

Lindsey Bauman | COLLEGIAN
Naytanda Smith is fouled while going up for a shot against Emporia State during K-State's 85-45 win over the Hornets on Nov. 9 at Bramlage Coliseum.

"With Ohlde graduated, everybody is going to think we are going to be missing stuff in the post," McFarland said. "Everybody is going to be looking at us all year round. It is going to be a goal of ours to show that we can dominate in the post and show we can score and get boards."

The Wildcats will continue play Sunday afternoon as they face Pepperdine at 4 p.m. The Waves are led by first-year head coach Julie Rousseau.

Patterson said Pepperdine's new system under Rousseau will pose a challenge for her team.

"We're not real sure what we are going to see when they come in here," she said. "Pepperdine has a new coach, so that means an entirely new system. Obviously, there is a little bit of uncertainty."

after every missed tackle. You even second-guessed the coaching of Bill Snyder, murmuring about how the game may have passed him by.

Now, your worst fears have been realized.

No bowl game. No winning season. The long-forgotten dark ages of K-State football futility are returning.

Don't consider that this year's team is young and has been hampered by injuries.

Or that we have two capable quarterbacks when they're healthy. Or that Tetuan was an anchor for an inexperienced secondary and, unlike the 50,000 of us in the stands, starts on a Division-I football team. Or that you had the chance to watch one of the best running backs in college football history for the last four years.

Or that Snyder faces the daunting task of getting high school blue-chippers to come to Manhattan, Kan., over the Texases and Floridas, and then must beat teams loaded with future NFL stars. Despite this, he has built one of the nation's most successful programs and has done so without any major NCAA violations.

None of that matters to you, though. You expected winning results, and instead you got a team with the worst record in 12 years.

Maybe you're right, maybe tomorrow's game isn't that meaningful. But for 22 seniors and the rest of the football team, it is.

You can bet they'll show the resiliency of a team that three years ago shrugged off a 6-6 season to finish 11-2 in 2002, and then last year came back from three-straight losses to win the Big 12.

For them, there's still plenty on the line.

And for you K-State fans, there's still plenty to cheer for.

Are you ready?

MEN | Team hopes exhibition experience pays off

Down low, Wooldridge said juniors Jeremiah Massey and Marques Hayden, senior Justin Williams and sophomore Tyler Hughes will comprise the rotation, with senior Dramane Diarra entering the picture when he returns from injury.

In exhibition play, Peete and Massey took the lead scoring roles for the team. Massey led the team in the preseason with 17.8 points per game, while Peete scored 14.2 points per game in his first action as a Wildcat.

Wooldridge said Massey, who is last season's Big 12 Newcomer of the Year, will become an even better player if he does things well beyond scoring and rebounding.

"I've got a lot of confidence in him that he can do more things on the floor that don't show up on the stat sheet that can help his team win," Wooldridge said.

The Wildcats were able to get increased work on a variety of aspects of their play during the lengthy exhibition season. However, Wooldridge said the team still has a ways to go, especially on the defensive side of the ball.

"The Pittsburg State game in the first half again showed us we can't go out and play lackadaisically on defense. We have to tighten the defense up," Wooldridge said.

K-State plays a North Dakota State team tonight that comes off a 16-13 season and entering its first year of Division-I ball.

Though Wooldridge calls the Bison a "good match," eyes will not likely be on North Dakota State – they will be on the Wildcats to see if those extra preseason games will make a difference in moving the program forward this year.

Wooldridge said he believes the games were greatly beneficial, but their complete effect is yet to be seen.

"I guess we'll find out in the next month or so," he said.

SENATE | Senators: non-students benefit clubs; bill isolates campus

Committee Member Justin Shrauner spoke in favor of the bill.

"What I don't like is privilege fees going to non-K-State Students," Shrauner said. "The students pay that for the students."

Other opponents of the bill, like Education Senator Shiloh Dutton, argue that non-student members still benefit clubs and organizations.

"These are paid by the students to invest in students," Dutton said.

"The rugby team cannot field a team without community members, so it still benefits students."

Dutton said he wouldn't mind if a few non-students benefited indirectly from Student Governing Association allocations if their presence improved organizations.

Agriculture Senator Nick Levandofsky said the bill closed the K-State campus to the community.

"We have this wall around our campus, we might as well build it 40-feet high," Levandofsky said. "It's a beautiful wall, but we might as well build it 40-feet high and put a draw bridge at the Alumni Center."

He said the community supports K-State and that respect should be reciprocated.

Senator Bill Muir authored an amendment to change the wording so only voting members were required to be K-State students. It failed on a voice vote.

Arts and Sciences Senator David McCandless opposed the amendment.

"The more qualifiers we put into restricting this, the easier it will be to circumvent it," he said.

The policy would have taken effect with the next registration time in March or April of 2005, Assistant Dean of Student Life Gayle Spencer said.

HOLIDAY | Retailers use new methods to draw holiday shopping crowds

"They move the date up for selling these items to get a leg in on the competition," she said.

Wal-Mart gained more shelving space after building the SuperCenter, so it was able to stock holiday items earlier, Roy Hulett, store manager, said.

"Something new for us is that we will be open on Thanksgiving Day," he said. "It will change how people react to the day after Thanksgiving Day sale."

Another marketing strategy that Wal-Mart tried this year was putting a flyer on the Internet. Hulett said they usually mail out flyers once a month, but this year customers will be able to access December's flyer at their personal computer.

The rise in the popularity of Internet shopping adds another form of competition for most stores, Crow said. In order to make customers' shopping easier, they extended the shopping season.

"There are always those customers that prefer to see, touch and feel the product," Crow said. "So they won't be shopping online."

Foreign leaders to visit West Bank next week

By Josef Federman
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM – Sponsors of an internationally backed Mideast peace plan will send their foreign ministers to the region next week in hopes of restarting Israeli-Palestinian talks in the wake of Yasser Arafat's death.

British Foreign Secretary Jack Straw and Russian Foreign Minister Sergey Lavrov will go to the West Bank next week, after Monday's visit by Secretary of State Colin Powell. The Spanish and German foreign ministers also are expected in coming weeks, Palestinian Foreign Minister Nabil Shaath said.

"All of these important foreign ministers are coming to meet the Palestinian leadership and to talk about an action plan for the coming period," Shaath said.

The flurry of high-level visits was the latest sign that, with Arafat gone, the international community is ready to dive back into Mideast diplomacy and get the so-called "road map" peace plan back on track. The plan, which aims to create an independent Palestinian state by 2005, has been stalled since being signed in June 2003.

Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon, who refused to negotiate with Arafat, is instead moving forward with a planned unilateral pullout from the Gaza Strip and four small West Bank settlements next year. Palestinians fear the plan is an Israeli ruse to maintain control over most of the West Bank.

K-State's leader in all-time rushing yards, career all-purpose yards, touchdowns, rushing touchdowns and 100 yard rushing games, Darren Sproles, will play his final game in a Wildcat uniform. The Cyclones rush defense is ranked 37th nationally.

K-State was eliminated from bowl contention for the first time in 12 years, losing on the road last week to the Buffaloes, 38-31.

K-State motivated to finish strong

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When the K-State Wildcats (4-6, 2-5) take on the Iowa State Cyclones (5-4, 3-3) at 11:10 a.m. on Saturday in the final game of the season, they will find themselves in a unique situation.

The outcome of the game will have no effect on K-State's Big 12 North Division title and bowl prospects – those went by the wayside for the Cats with last Saturday's 38-31 loss at Colorado.

Tight end Brian Casey, who along with 21 other seniors will play their final game at KSU Stadium, said there is still plenty of motivation to defeat the Cyclones.

"I'm not a quitter or anything like that," Casey said. "I give 100 percent and my best effort all the time, and just because this game doesn't really mean anything to us doesn't mean that our preparation is going to be any different."

In a twist few could have predicted prior to the season, Iowa State is the team with the most on the line this weekend. The preseason pick to finish last in the Big 12 North, the Cyclones have won three straight and currently sit at the top of the division. Iowa State would with the North with wins over K-State and Missouri to end the season.

Coach Bill Snyder said he was not shocked by the way 10-year Iowa State head coach Dan McCarney and his Cyclones have performed.

"I think it's a great story, it's one that's not a surprise to me," Snyder said. "Dan McCarney is a very talented football coach, and I've always said very positive things about him year in and year out."

The Iowa State defense has sparked the team of late, forcing 12 turnovers over the last four games.

"They're going to play as hard as they can, and they'll be a very physical and aggressive, hard-playing football team," Snyder said.

With little at stake as far as this season goes, some might think Snyder would put an increased emphasis on getting younger players playing time against the Cyclones. On the flipside, others might expect seniors to get more snaps in their last game.

However, Snyder said the determination of who plays and for how long will not change.

"I wouldn't take away from anyone, actually, whatever it is they deserve. A youngster works hard to get himself in a position to be a No. 1, and if he's a senior, then that's appropriate. I wouldn't cut back his playing time in his last game of the season if he's earned the right to be there," Snyder said. "By the same token, if it's an underclassman who is there, I would be sensitive to cutting back his playing time just because you want to get more time for a senior."

"The fairest and most consistent way is not to change anything."

Snyder said the coaching staff has been open with the team about the disappointment surrounding the season, but he expects his players to have the same level of desire heading into the ballgame that they always do.

"We are open about what their role is, as well as what the role of the coaches happen to be," Snyder said. "That being said, whether it's this ballgame or any other ballgame, from a motivational aspect, we are all in the same boat there."

"You just have to reach down inside and find that in which lights the fire."

GAMETIME

Edge — OFFENSE — Edge

The Wildcats' troubles center around the quarterback, or lack thereof, this week. Both sophomores Allen Webb and Dylan Meier are battling injuries, though Webb should be available on Saturday. Look for the bulk of the offense to go through senior running back Darren Sproles early in his last game for K-State. The play of the offensive line will determine how successful Sproles is against Iowa State's strong rushing defense. There also may be opportunities for the passing game against an Iowa State team geared to stop the run.

The Cyclones only average 19.8 points per game behind 122.4 yards rushing and 188.2 yards passing per game. Not extremely impressive numbers, but it's been enough for a three-game conference winning streak. Quarterback Bret Meyer has nine touchdown passes and five interceptions. His favorite target is a big one in freshman receiver Todd Blythe, who has nine touchdown grabs and three 100-yard receiving games. The Cyclones' leading rusher is running back Stevie Hicks, who averages 77.6 yards per game.

DEFENSE

The defense, like the rest of the team, has been inconsistent most of the season. Compared to K-State defenses of the past, the downs have outnumbered the ups in 2004. The Wildcats have not held a conference opponent under 24 points this season, and as evidenced by Colorado's late touchdown drive last week, have had trouble all year making stops when they need them. If there's any team the Wildcat defense can shut down, though, the 102nd-ranked Iowa State offense is it.

The Cyclones have held opponents to 22.9 points per game and only 127.2 rushing yards per game, giving up just 3.2 yards per carry. The defense has scored five touchdowns, snatched 13 interceptions, recovered five fumbles and forced 18 sacks. Cornerback Ellis Hobbs and safety Nik Moser have three picks apiece to lead the Cyclone secondary, and defensive end Shawn Morehead leads the team with five sacks. The only downside: Iowa State gives up 203.9 yards passing per game.

SPECIAL TEAMS

Senior kicker Joe Rheem has been a solid 12-of-14 (both misses were blocked) on field goals and is perfect on extra-points this season. The punting game continues to improve, with freshman Tim Reyer and junior Jesse Martinez kicking well the last two weeks to raise the season average to 40.1 yards per punt. The Wildcats average 22.1 yards per kickoff return and 6.6 yards per punt return.

The Cyclone special teams have blocked seven kicks, led by defensive lineman Nick Leaders, who has three blocks to his credit. The Cyclones average 23.7 yards per kickoff return and 39.3 yards per punt. Iowa State is 7-of-15 on field goals and 15-of-17 on extra point attempts. Current starting kicker Bret Culbertson is 4-of-4 on field goals and 8-of-8 on extra points since taking over as the starter.

PREDICTION: K-STATE 28 - IOWA STATE 21

Iowa State is still in contention for a bowl game and a Big 12 North title. K-State is not in contention for a championship or a bowl appearance for the first time since 1992. But it's Senior Day at KSU Stadium, and every Wildcat player is going to do his best to not see the seniors end their K-State careers with a loss. The home team takes this one in in a role its not used to being involved in — spoiler.

Out of the shadows

Clayton in for Sproles

Thomas Clayton is listed as the No. 2 running back on the depth chart for K-State. Of the three possible candidates, Clayton is the most likely to replace Darren Sproles next year.

Norwood in for Casey

Rashaad Norwood is the most likely player to take over for Brian Casey next year. Casey made 21 starts at tight end in his career and is third on the team in receptions and yards per catch this season.

Porter in for Williams

Maurice Porter has emerged this season as one of K-States shut down defensive backs. In eight games, the junior transfer from San Francisco City College has two interceptions.

Marso, Echols in for Berry

Derek Marso and Quintin Echols will anchor the interior of the defense next year in place of Jermaine Berry. Berry has played in 25 straight games and is fourth on the team in tackles this season.

Time to speculate about replacements

MATTHEW GIRARD

There comes a day every football season when we say "so long" and "thank you" to the players who have used up their eligibility. On Saturday, that day will have come for 22 K-State seniors.

Some of these players we may see on Sundays playing in the NFL, and others we will never see or hear from again. For those of us left behind, we look ahead to next season.

Unfortunately, with only one game left and no post-season play in store for the Wildcats, it's time to look forward and speculate who will fill the shoes of the departing seniors in 2005.

OFFENSIVE LINE

Through 10 games, the combination of seniors Mike Johnson, Malcolm Wooldridge, Michael Weiner and Jon Doty have played virtually every snap for K-State, leaving junior Jeromey Clary as the only returning starter for next season.

Losing four of your five offensive lineman is generally not a good thing, but Clary's two years of game experience and the emergence of freshman John Hafferty, who saw action in several games, will help next year's young offensive line.

Another advantage for the young group will be their size.

Several potential starters – Logan Robinson and Greg Wafford, among others – weigh more than 300 pounds, which should help create mammoth holes for the running backs and an impermeable wall for would-be pass rushers.

DEFENSIVE LINE

The front four will need to look for a new leader with senior tackle Jermaine Berry playing in his last game Saturday. The most likely candidate to step up and replace Berry, who was the heart and soul of the defense, will be sophomore Quintin Echols.

The 6-foot-2, 305-pound Echols gained valuable experience playing alongside Berry in 2004 and will be a force for opposing offensive lineman to contend with next year.

The Wildcat defense also loses senior defensive end Kevin Huntley, who created many a problem for opposing quarterbacks with his 6-foot-8 frame.

Junior Tearrius George will be K-State's logical replacement. George played in nine games registering 21 total tackles, three sacks and six tackles for loss, which leads the team.

TIGHT END

Some may argue the Wildcats didn't use one of their most valuable offensive players and one of the top tight ends in the nation, in senior Brian Casey, enough this season, but that is for K-State fans to speculate. The simple fact is Casey will not be in a Wildcat uniform in 2005.

But don't worry, faithful K-State fans; we have freshman Rashaad Norwood.

Norwood may have only caught one pass, but he has the size and skill to become the next great Wildcat tight end.

DEFENSIVE BACKS

Despite losing seniors Cedrick Williams and David Rose, junior Maurice Porter is an emerging talent who may make fans soon forget about the struggles of the cornerbacks. In eight games, Porter has shown he can be a shut-down corner and makes big plays when the team needs him. He has two interceptions coming into Saturdays game.

RUNNING BACKS

Of course, the biggest void to be left is that of the "Little Tank," senior Darren Sproles.

You just don't replace a back who can break defenders' ankles by merely walking. A three-time 1,000-yard rusher and the Big 12 Conference's all-time all-purpose yardage leader.

Even though Sproles is irreplaceable, the Wildcats will look to three running backs to try.

The front-runner is sophomore Thomas Clayton.

The Florida State transfer may not have the moves of Sproles, but he has shown he is a powerful runner and is capable of making a few big plays with his 4.32, 40-speed.

Sophomore Donnie Anders and junior Carlos Alsup will also vie for playing time in 2005.

So, it may be the last time we see the seniors, but here's looking to the future.

22 seniors to play their final game at KSU Stadium

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It was a year full of promise for the K-State senior class of 2004.

From the beginning, the expectations were high on the seniors, as the Wildcats were coming off their first Big 12 Conference title, their first Bowl Championship Series game and were returning a Heisman Trophy candidate.

It was not supposed to end like this – a sub .500 record and no post-season play for the first time in 12 years.

"You never think of having a losing record, and not going to a bowl game and ending that streak," senior tight end Brian Casey said. "We lost a lot of close games this year, and it just wasn't our season."

On Saturday, the Wildcats (4-6, 2-5) will say goodbye to 22 seniors who will play their final game in KSU Stadium, and their final game in the purple and silver, against Iowa State (5-4, 3-3).

Since beginning their collective careers at K-State, the class of 2004 has amassed a record of 32-18, helped the Wildcats to three post-season bowl game appearances and featured one of the nation's top running backs in senior Darren Sproles.

Since becoming a permanent fixture in the K-State backfield, Sproles has tallied 23 school records with five of those records coming in 2004.

Sproles most notable school records came in the touchdown category, passing former Wildcat quarterback Ell Roberson in career touchdowns (47) and career rushing touchdowns (44), this season. With his 1,151 yards rushing this season, Sproles registered his third-straight season with more than 1,000 yards. He has rushed for more than 100 yards four times in 2004, upping his school record for 100-yard games to 23.

Injuries sideline defense this year

Unit forced into numerous lineups throughout season

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This season, the injury bug hit the K-State defense like a blitzing linebacker.

Multiple starters were injured for extended periods of time at different points this season, making defensive continuity nearly impossible.

Senior cornerback David Rose said the defense has been worn thin because of injuries.

"There have been a lot of people in the lineup because of injuries," Rose said. "Twos and threes have been in there playing, and it's hard to win games when all your starters are hurt. It's been tough."

Senior defensive tackle Jermaine Berry said it is hard getting a back-up player prepared for an actual game.

"When a back-up comes in, it's not like we say, 'oh man, he's coming in, and he doesn't know what he's doing,'" Berry said. "But when you get in the game, it's different than in practice. That's when we start having problems."

Sophomore linebacker Ted Sims missed the first half of the season with a foot injury that still hasn't fully healed. Senior defensive end Kevin Huntley did not play against Colorado, and will miss the Iowa State game this Saturday, ending his collegiate career.

Other players hit by injuries this season include defensive tackle Andrew Bulman, defensive back Cedrick Williams, linebackers Matt Butler and Maurice Thurmond and defensive end Scott Edmonds.

Rose said when new players enter the lineup, the team has to adjust.

"The more you play with somebody, the more you anticipate what the guy next to you is going to do," Rose said. "You just have to learn on the go. Whoever is in there just has to step up."

The linebacker unit was hit the hardest by injuries, which forced a variety of different lineups. Even safety Jesse Tetuan and defensive end Tearrius George spent time at linebacker during practices.

Fans will remember Sproles as best ever

It is hard to believe, but when the clock shows zeros after this Saturday's game against Iowa State, it will be the end of the Darren Sproles era at K-State.

MICHAEL ASHFORD

What can you say about Sproles that hasn't already been said?

He is the greatest running back to ever wear the purple and white.

Since 1966, there have been eight seasons where a K-State running back has surpassed 1,000 yards rushing.

Sproles has three of those seasons – all in a row.

Other than Sproles, no other Wildcat has posted two-straight 1,000-yard seasons, let alone three.

Of the 11 times a K-State running back has rushed for more than 200 yards in a single game, five of those games belong to Sproles. That includes the K-State record of 292 yards, which he set against Louisiana-Lafayette earlier this season.

He is the Big 12 leader in career all-purpose yards. His total going into Saturday's game against Iowa State: 6,552.

He is the K-State career leader in touchdowns, consecutive 100-yard rushing games, career 100-yard rushing games and career rushing.

Sproles is an athlete like no other K-State has ever had.

For four years, he has dazzled K-State fans with his scintillating moves, his eye-popping cuts and his uncanny ability to make people miss.

Ask 100 K-State football fans to name their favorite Darren Sproles run, and you very well could get 100 different answers.

My personal favorite was against Southern California in 2002. Sproles took a pitch from quarterback Ell Roberson and went wide left. Waiting for him were three USC defenders, ready to tackle Sproles.

They never saw "the move" coming.

Sproles stopped on a dime, cut, did a 360-degree spin, and took off downfield as the three defenders fell over themselves, grasping for nothing but air.

To describe it in a word: magical.

But for every breathtaking move Sproles made on the field, he was even more magnificent off it.

The consummate team player, never once did Sproles bask in the glory of his accomplishments. He simply deferred all the praise to his offensive line, his quarterback, his coaches and his family.

Never once did Sproles boast, brag, or puff out his chest, even though he had every right to.

He simply went about his business, and let his play do

Human highlight reel

Darren Sproles has dazzled fans, teammates the last four years

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

He's not known as a man of many words.

Instead, he lets his actions paint a picture of who he is, on and off the field. And in his four years at K-State, that picture has been no less than a masterpiece.

This Saturday against Iowa State, senior running back and team captain Darren Sproles will put the finishing touches on a career that won't soon be forgotten.

He is K-State's all-time leading rusher with 4,812 yards. In his four-year career of rewriting the school record book, Sproles tops the list in virtually every rushing and all-purpose yard category. He has the most yards in a game (292) and in a season (1,986 in 2003). He's the leader in career all-purpose yards (6,552) and career touchdowns (47).

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN
Darren Sproles runs up the field for a short gain against Colorado last week in Colorado.

The numbers alone would leave a lasting legacy at K-State, but the people around Sproles are quick to say they'll remember much more.

Coach Bill Snyder said what will stick with him is Sproles the person as well as Sproles the player, and how the senior handled the death of his mother last spring.

"I will remember Darren the person," Snyder said. "Darren has overcome tragedy in his life at a very young age, and he did it with amazing fortitude. I will remember him as a young guy who always worked as hard as he possibly could. He is always very team-oriented and always cared more about the performances and successes of this football team, than he did about his own."

"I will remember him as a very loyal family person, and a loyal person period, whether it is his family, our football program or his teammates. I'll remember those types of things; just the value systems that have been implanted in his life."

Junior offensive lineman Jeromey Clary will do his best

End of the road

A disappointed Darren Sproles walks off the field after an end of the game touchdown by Colorado. The lost ended K-State's shot at a Big 12 title and a bowl appearance.

22 seniors to play their final game at KSU Stadium

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It was a year full of promise for the K-State senior class of 2004.

From the beginning, the expectations were high on the seniors, as the Wildcats were coming off their first Big 12 Conference title, their first Bowl Championship Series game and were returning a Heisman Trophy candidate.

It was not supposed to end like this – a sub .500 record and no post-season play for the first time in 12 years.

"You never think of having a losing record, and not going to a bowl game and ending that streak," senior tight end Brian Casey said. "We lost a lot of close games this year, and it just wasn't our season."

On Saturday, the Wildcats (4-6, 2-5) will say goodbye to 22 seniors who will play their final game in KSU Stadium, and their final game in the purple and silver, against Iowa State (5-4, 3-3).

Since beginning their collective careers at K-State, the class of 2004 has amassed a record of 32-18, helped the Wildcats to three post-season bowl game appearances and featured one of the nation's top running backs in senior Darren Sproles.

Since becoming a permanent fixture in the K-State backfield, Sproles has tallied 23 school records with five of those records coming in 2004.

Sproles most notable school records came in the touchdown category, passing former Wildcat quarterback Ell Roberson in career touchdowns (47) and career rushing touchdowns (44), this season. With his 1,151 yards rushing this season, Sproles registered his third-straight season with more than 1,000 yards. He has rushed for more than 100 yards four times in 2004, upping his school record for 100-yard games to 23.

Injuries sideline defense this year

Unit forced into numerous lineups throughout season

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This season, the injury bug hit the K-State defense like a blitzing linebacker.

Multiple starters were injured for extended periods of time at different points this season, making defensive continuity nearly impossible.

Senior cornerback David Rose said the defense has been worn thin because of injuries.

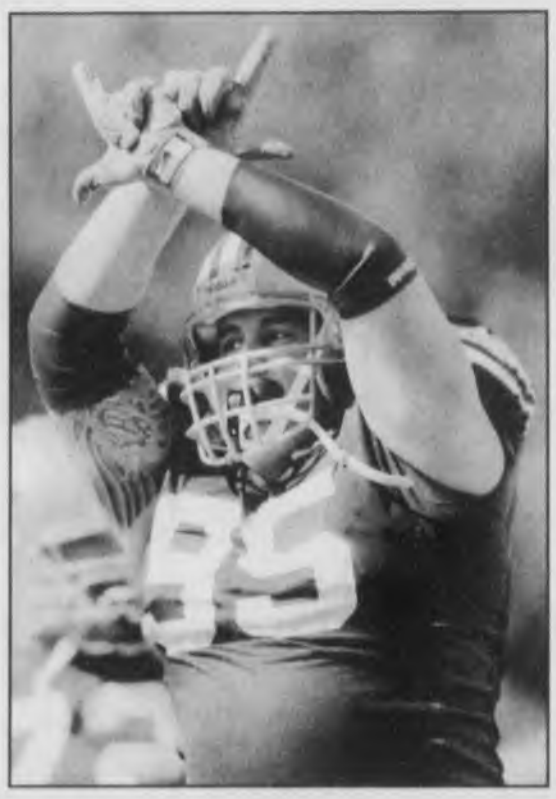
"There have been a lot of people in the lineup because of injuries," Rose said. "Twos and threes have been in there playing, and it's hard to win games when all your starters are hurt. It's been tough."

Senior defensive tackle Jermaine Berry said it is hard getting a back-up player prepared for an actual game.

"When a back-up comes in, it's not like we say, 'oh man, he's coming in, and he doesn't know what he's doing,'" Berry said. "But when you get in the game, it's different than in practice. That's when we start having problems."

Sophomore linebacker Ted Sims missed the first half of the season with a foot injury that still hasn't fully healed. Senior defensive end Kevin Huntley did not play against Colorado, and will miss the Iowa State game this Saturday, ending his collegiate career.

Other players hit by injuries this season include defensive tackle Andrew Bulman, defensive back Cedrick Williams, linebackers Matt Butler and Maurice Thurmond and defensive end Scott Edmonds.



Rose said when new players enter the lineup, the team has to adjust.

"The more you play with somebody, the more you anticipate what the guy next to you is going to do," Rose said. "You just have to learn on the go. Whoever is in there just has to step up."

The linebacker unit was hit the hardest by injuries, which forced a variety of different lineups. Even safety Jesse Tetuan and defensive end Tearrius George spent time at linebacker during practices.

Fans will remember Sproles as best ever

MICHAEL ASHFORD

It is hard to believe, but when the clock shows zeros after this Saturday's game against Iowa State, it will be the end of the Darren Sproles era at K-State.

What can you say about Sproles that hasn't already been said?

He is the greatest running back to ever wear the purple and white.

Since 1966, there have been eight seasons where a K-State running back has surpassed 1,000 yards rushing.

Sproles has three of those seasons – all in a row.

Other than Sproles, no other Wildcat has posted two-straight 1,000-yard seasons, let alone three.

Of the 11 times a K-State running back has rushed for more than 200 yards in a single game, five of those games belong to Sproles. That includes the K-State record of 292 yards, which he set against Louisiana-Lafayette earlier this season.

He is the Big 12 leader in career all-purpose yards. His total going into Saturday's game against Iowa State: 6,552.

He is the K-State career leader in touchdowns, consecutive 100-yard rushing games, career 100-yard rushing games and career rushing.

Sproles is an athlete like no other K-State has ever had.

For four years, he has dazzled K-State fans with his scintillating moves, his eye-popping cuts and his uncanny ability to make people miss.

Ask 100 K-State football fans to name their favorite Darren Sproles run, and you very well could get 100 different answers.

My personal favorite was against Southern California in 2002. Sproles took a pitch from quarterback Ell Roberson and went wide left. Waiting for him were three USC defenders, ready to tackle Sproles.

They never saw "the move" coming.

Sproles stopped on a dime, cut, did a 360-degree spin, and took off downfield as the three defenders fell over themselves, grasping for nothing but air.

To describe it in a word: magical.

But for every breathtaking move Sproles made on the field, he was even more magnificent off it.

The consummate team player, never once did Sproles bask in the glory of his accomplishments. He simply deferred all the praise to his offensive line, his quarterback, his coaches and his family.

Never once did Sproles boast, brag, or puff out his chest, even though he had every right to.

He simply went about his business, and let his play do

Human highlight reel

Darren Sproles has dazzled fans, teammates the last four years

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

He's not known as a man of many words.

Instead, he lets his actions paint a picture of who he is, on and off the field. And in his four years at K-State, that picture has been no less than a masterpiece.

This Saturday against Iowa State, senior running back and team captain Darren Sproles will put the finishing touches on a career that won't soon be forgotten.

He is K-State's all-time leading rusher with 4,812 yards. In his four-year career of rewriting the school record book, Sproles tops the list in virtually every rushing and all-purpose yard category. He has the most yards in a game (292) and in a season (1,986 in 2003). He's the leader in career all-purpose yards (6,552) and career touchdowns (47).

The numbers alone would leave a lasting legacy at K-State, but the people around Sproles are quick to say they'll remember much more.

Coach Bill Snyder said what will stick with him is Sproles the person as well as Sproles the player, and how the senior handled the death of his mother last spring.

"I will remember Darren the person," Snyder said. "Darren has overcome tragedy in his life at a very young age, and he did it with amazing fortitude. I will remember him as a young guy who always worked as hard as he possibly could. He is always very team-oriented and always cared more about the performances and successes of this football team, than he did about his own."

"I will remember him as a very loyal family person, and a loyal person period, whether it is his family, our football program or his teammates. I'll remember those types of things; just the value systems that have been implanted in his life."

Junior offensive lineman Jeromey Clary will do his best

NORTHERN EXPOSURE

Big 12 North division still up for grabs

By Anthony Mendoza | Collegian

Entering the final stretch of the Big 12 North, every team in the division outside of Kansas has a chance to win the championship. The Wildcats, last year's Big 12 Champions, were eliminated from the race and bowl contention after last week's loss to Colorado.

TEAMS	SCENARIO	PREDICTION
	Colorado can win the Big 12 North if they beat Nebraska, and Iowa State splits their final two games; or if they beat Nebraska, the Cyclones lose their final two games and Missouri loses to Kansas.	Colorado will not win the Big 12 North for two reasons. They have to travel to Lincoln to take on the Cornhuskers, and unfortunately for the Buffaloes, Iowa State will not lose its final two games.
	If Iowa State wins out, they win the Big 12 North; or if they beat Missouri, and Nebraska beats Colorado; or if the Cyclones beat K-State, the Cornhuskers beat the Buffs and Kansas beats Missouri.	The doormat of the Big 12 North, this is Iowa State's year to take the title. They will win their final two games of the year and Colorado will not beat Nebraska the day after Thanksgiving.
	Nebraska wins the Big 12 North if it beats Colorado next week, and Missouri wins out; or if it beats Colorado, Iowa State loses out and Kansas beats Missouri on Saturday.	Nebraska will win its final game when they host Colorado, but Iowa State will not lose its final two games and Missouri will not win its remaining games against Kansas and at Iowa State.
	The Tigers need to win their final two games against Kansas and Iowa State, and hope K-State beats the Cyclones and Colorado tops the Cornhuskers in order to win the North.	Missouri does not have a chance at the championship. Iowa State will not lose to K-State, and Colorado will not beat Nebraska at home. The Tigers will not even win another game this year.

K-State season in review

A season of ups and downs comes to an end on Saturday, and for the first time in 12 years, K-State is not bowl-bound.

Marcus Watts made the first big hit of the season for K-State, but the Wildcats struggled with Division I-AA Western Kentucky in their home opener, beating the Hilltoppers 27-13 behind 221 yards rushing by Darren Sproles.

Lindsey Bauman | COLLEGIAN

Darren Sproles rushed for a school record 292 yards and a touchdown in K-States 40-20 win over Louisiana-Lafayette. Still a strong Heisman Trophy candidate, Sproles also smashed the all-purpose yards mark in a game, racking up 351 yards. At halftime, Sproles had 195 yards rushing and one touchdown.

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

The K-State defense held freshman Adrian Peterson to 3.6 yards per carry, but senior quarterback Jason White tormented the secondary, throwing for 256 yards and four touchdowns in Oklahoma's 31-21 win over the Wildcats at KSU Stadium.

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

K-State took the early lead on a interception return for a touchdown by Bret Jones. K-State was then outscored by Fresno State 31-7 to finish the half. The Bulldogs dominated the game, holding the Wildcat offense to 180 yards in their 45-21 win.

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Starting for an injured Dylan Meier, Allen Webb passed for 124 yards and led the team in rushing, finishing with 147 yards and four touchdowns in K-State's 45-21 win over Nebraska. Darren Sproles rushed for 135 yards and two touchdowns.

Lindsey Bauman | COLLEGIAN

Dylan Meier returned to his starting position against Louisiana-Lafayette. He completed 7-of-10 passes and rushed for 37 yards in the Wildcats 40-20 win. The Ragin Cajuns racked up 342 yards of total offense against K-State.

Drew Rose | COLLEGIAN

In his first start at quarterback, Dylan Meier completed 12 of 18 passes for 183 yards against Western Kentucky. Meier also finished with 60 yards rushing on nine carries and a touchdown. Darren Sproles took most of the offensive load during the game, carrying the ball 42 times for 221 yards and a touchdown. Meier was replaced late in the game by backup Allen Webb.

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Sonny Cumbie passed for 326 yards and two touchdowns, and Taurean Henderson rushed for 93 yards and a pair of scores in Texas Tech's win over K-State, 35-25. The Wildcats trailed the whole game, falling behind 14-0 in the first quarter.

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

K-State was its own worst enemy in a 42-30 loss at Texas A&M in its Big 12 opener. The Wildcats turned the ball over four times, three inside their own territory, setting up three short touchdown drives for the Aggies.

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Allen Webb started at quarterback against Missouri in the second half, and the offense responded. K-State outscored the Tigers 28-3 to finish the game and keep their bowl hopes alive in a 35-24 win on the road.

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

K-State's second-half rally was not enough against Kansas, as John Randle's touchdown run in the fourth quarter sealed the game for the Jayhawks, 31-28. The win was KU's first over K-State in 11 years.

Lindsey Bauman | COLLEGIAN

After allowing 21 first-half points, the K-State defense responded, allowing three second-half points to Missouri in the Wildcats' 35-24 come-from-behind win in Columbia, Mo. Linebacker Brandon Archer's 25-yard interception return for a touchdown capped off the scoring for the Wildcats and kept their Big 12 North title and bowl hopes alive.

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Allen Webb had to leave the Colorado game due to injury, and despite a Dylan Meier to Jermaine Moreira touchdown pass to tie the game with 36 seconds left, the Buffaloes came back and scored with five seconds left, beating K-State 38-31 in Boulder.

Kansas' Rodney Harris tackles K-State's Darren Sproles during the Wildcats' loss to the Jayhawks on Oct. 9 in Lawrence.

the talking.

Darren Sproles is a role model to thousands of K-Staters, and I can think of no one better to fill the role.

He is humble, but strong. He doesn't speak a lot, but when he does, he speaks the truth. He never quits, and he never says 'I can't.'

Sproles had every reason to quit this year, though.

He had a stellar 2003 season in which he ran for 1,986 yards. He was at the top of his game and injury-free.

But then, Sproles suffered a tragic loss.

Before the season started, he lost his mother to cancer.

Any lesser man would have wilted under the pain, but not Sproles.

He came back, determined to keep a promise he made to his mother. He was going to get an education and finish school at K-State.

This season has been less than perfect for Sproles, but he still has produced some of the same magic.

He has rushed for 1,000 yards again, even though teams built their defenses around stopping him.

Any lesser man would have wilted under the pain, but not Sproles.

The team as a whole stumbled, but through it all, Sproles stood out, determined to finish what he started while chasing his goal of getting better one day at a time.

With one game left to go in his career as a Wildcat, it is hard to think what it will be like without No. 43 in the backfield.

As a K-State fan, I will miss watching his 5-foot-7 frame ram into a pile of defenders, only to have him burst out the other side and head downfield. I will miss the cuts so sharp, you would swear his ankles slipped out of place.

K-State is losing a remarkable football player, the likes of which may never be seen again at KSU Stadium.

But even more importantly, K-State is losing a truly great man and a wonderful representative of this university.

When Sproles walks out of the locker room and down the ramp for the last time, many true Wildcat fans, including myself, will find it hard to control their emotions.

When the game is over, and Sproles trots off the field for the last time, it will be the end of an era that will never be duplicated.

So to Darren Sproles, I say this:

Thank you. From every true K-State fan, young and old, big and small, and all those in between, thank you. You have no idea what you have meant to us as fans, and we have been remarkably blessed these last four years.

You are truly one of a kind.

SENIORS | Rheem says struggles made him stronger purpose yardage with 6,552 yards and will look to add to that total with one game remaining.

Other notable senior Wildcats playing in their final game are Casey, defensive tackle Jermaine Berry, cornerback Cedrick Williams, place-kicker Joe Rheem and center Mike Johnson.

In Casey's 21 career starts, the 6-foot-7, 270 pound, Gladstone, Mo. native, has snagged 40 passes for 619 yards and has caught four touchdowns.

Casey said despite the Wildcats' struggles, he wants to end his career on a high note.

"I don't want to end my senior year on a loss, and I want to go out with a win – go out with the memories of what I've had the past few years," Casey said.

On the defensive side, Berry and Williams will make their final starts for the Wildcats against Iowa State. Berry, a junior-college transfer, is currently fourth on the team with 49 total tackles, giving him 131 for his career.

Williams, also a junior-college transfer, has registered 70 total tackles and five interceptions.

Although Rheem had a shaky start to his career at K-State, he has become one of the Wildcats' most consistent players.

"Joe struggled a couple of years ago in the early stages of the season, but since that time he has been very, very good," Coach Bill Snyder said.

A semi-finalist for the Lou Groza Award, which is given to the nation's top place kicker, Rheem has connected on 12-of-14 field-goals and is 35-for-35 on extra-point attempts in 2004.

The Wichita, Kan. native is 37-of-48 on field-goal attempts in his career, with his career-long of 52-yards coming against Colorado, last Saturday. Rheem has a streak of 73 straight extra-points made since 2003.

Rheem said the past four years have gone by fast.

"I'll probably remember a lot of the struggles, because those were the times that really make you stronger," Rheem said. "I'm sure the good times will overshadow that, but it is some of that that keeps you grounded."

Johnson will make his 32nd-straight start for K-Sate on Saturday. This season, he made the switch to center after playing two years as a guard.

Johnson said there is still plenty to play for, and the team will be ready on Saturday.

"Obviously for us seniors, we want to start the underclassmen out on the right way, and for us to go out there and just have fun in front of our fans and our home stadium and leave here with a victory," Johnson said.

Saturday to open holes for the 5-foot-7 running back, who has earned the respect of everyone on the team.

"It's amazing to see someone with that kind of talent, that kind of ability, and he's just so humble," Clary said. "It's very humbling to myself to see someone with that much talent be an everyday, average guy and not take advantage of people or take advantage of his own talent and do things he shouldn't be doing."

Senior tight end Brian Casey said it's that humility that sets Sproles apart from other stars.

"Most of the all-stars sometimes won't talk to you and keep to themselves, but you can talk to him whenever, and he's a good guy," Casey said. "That's what I remember about him. He tries hard every game and gives 100 percent of his effort in practice and game-time."

Snyder, Clary and Casey, like other K-Staters, each have a favorite Sproles highlight.

For Snyder, it was Sproles dragging a Nebraska defender into the end zone in Lincoln last year.

For Clary and Casey, it was Sproles' lightning-quick spin on a Southern California defensive back two years that left the defender grasping at air.

Running backs coach Michael Smith has seen those highlights first-hand after working with Sproles the last four years.

He said he will be losing someone special after Saturday.

"He's the best, he really is," Smith said. "I've got a lot of good kids, but Darren is never on any list, does what I ask him to and plays his heart out for me every weekend. He is the epitome of a football player, and it's going to be a sad day Saturday when I have my last opportunity to coach him."

DEFENSE | Backups gain valuable experience

Archer said even with the injuries, the unit found a way to come together as the season progressed.

"Early on, it was hard getting a rhythm with whoever was in there," Archer said.

"Lately, whoever is in there, we know that we have a trust and a bond going on. At times, it's a little difficult to get a rhythm going, but for the most part, it's not too bad as far as not having a sure understanding of who is going to be playing."

With so many injuries on defense, many younger and inexperienced players have found their way onto the field.

Defensive end Blake Seiler and defensive backs Byron Garvin and Bryan Baldwin saw action on the field this season as the direct result of injuries to starters. All three are redshirt-freshmen and are expected to slip into starting roles next season.

Archer said many back-ups have gained valuable experience as a result of injuries.

"(Injuries to starters) present an opportunity for other guys that might not have been able to show their worth, and give them a chance to step up and hopefully get some things done," he said.

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN

Aubrey Johnson, freshman in life science, holds her daughter Jordin, 3, at her home Thursday evening. Jordin was born with a genetic disorder, Cri du-Chat, which is a disorder that runs in her family.

Student, inspired by daughter, studies to become pediatrician

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Aubrey and Ted Johnson didn't know their daughter, Jordin, would be disabled before she was born.

She was diagnosed with Cri du Chat, a genetic disorder, when she was born.

Babies born with Cri du Chat can have many symptoms including low birth weight, failure to grow at an expected rate and mental retardation according to webMD.com.

Aubrey said the disorder runs in her family, but the carrier of the disorder was always male.

"It's only been male carriers, so it was kind of awkward that I carried it," she said. "I did not expect it at all."

Since Jordin, 3, was born, Aubrey and Ted said they have had to take her to the hospital many times.

She said doctors would tell them that they knew what the couple was going through, but Aubrey says they wouldn't.

Aubrey, freshman in life science, now is going to school to become a pediatrician.

"If I could tell one family that I know what you're going through and mean it, then I've done my job," she said. "I just want to be that one doctor that can tell the family 'I know what you're going through' and mean it."

But before she did that Aubrey, 27, had to finish high school, so she enrolled in Open Door.

Open Door is a program within Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 that allows people to get their high school diploma, Kathy Hund, Open Door administrator, said.

The diplomas say Manhattan High School on them, and most of the work is done on the computer, she said.

The program allows students to work at their own pace, Hund said.

"It depends on the individual how long it takes," she said.

"We just try to be as flexible as possible."

Aubrey said she started the program in March 2003 and finished that year in September. Then she enrolled at K-State for the spring 2004 semester.

"I'm so glad they have that program, because I did not want a G.E.D.," she said.

She said she dropped out of school during her second semester of her senior year in 1996. She lived in North Carolina at the time.

"I moved out of my parent's house, because I was 18," Aubrey said. "Once I did that, all hell broke loose."

"I was more partying than I was going to school."

Aubrey moved to Manhattan in 1999 with her family, because her uncle had a brain tumor, she said.

"My uncle got sick with a brain tumor, so my family moved here to help my aunt take care of him," she said.

Her uncle died about six

Open Door offers another chance at diploma

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An alternative route toward getting a high school diploma is offered through Open Door.

Open Door is a program within Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 that allows students to take most of their courses on computers, Kathy Hund, Open Door administrator, said.

About 80 percent of coursework is done on computers and the other 20 percent is more normal coursework, such as giving a speech or writing a report, she said.

Students have various reasons for going through the program.

"They have lots of things going on," she said. "It's not because they are stupid. A lot of them are very smart."

She said the program is in its fourth year, and 23 students already have graduated this year. There are about 85 currently enrolled.

For more information
Open Door is housed with the Manhattan Workforce Center at 205 S. 4th St. It is open from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. Monday, Tuesday and Thursday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Wednesday and from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Friday. Those interested in the program can stop by or call 539-5691.

The diplomas say Manhattan High School on them, she said.

Open Door tries to help students prepare for the future, Hund said. They work with the Manhattan Workforce Center to help students find jobs, and they encourage students to take their education even further.

"We help them explore their next step," she said. "There's many ways to reach success in your life, and we are really pleased to provide this avenue."

Hund said employers

Kemp suspect charged with capital murder

By Matt Sedensky
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OLATHE, Kan. - Prosecutors paved the way Thursday for a possible death penalty trial for a man accused of the killing of a Kansas teenager.

A first-degree murder charge against Benjamin Appleby, 29, was upgraded to capital murder. He is accused of killing and trying to rape 19-year-old Ali Kemp of Leawood. Kemp had just finished her freshman year at K-State and was a member of Pi Beta Phi sorority.

Kemp

The new charge makes it possible for prosecutors to seek the death penalty, though Johnson County District Attorney Paul Morrison would not say what his plans were.

Prosecutors have five days from a suspect's arraignment to indicate their intent to seek the death penalty.

An arraignment hearing has not been set for Appleby, who made his first appearance in court Thursday by video.

Appleby, who is being held on $1 million bond, did not enter a plea during the hearing.

He does not yet have a lawyer but told the judge he was looking for a private attorney.

Kemp's father discovered his daughter strangled June 18, 2002. She was found in the pump room of the community pool where she worked in a suburb of spacious homes and prim lawns.

The murder was Leawood's first in years and one of only a handful in its history. It prompted widespread publicity, thousands of leads, and a relentless effort by the girl's family and investigators to find the culprit.

Appleby was arrested Nov. 8 in Connecticut, where he was living under an alias. He later confessed to the crimes, according to an affidavit filed by Connecticut State Police.

Outside court Thursday, Appleby's father, Gary Appleby, expressed sympathy toward the victim's friends and family members.

"It's tragic," Gary Appleby said. "They're going to have to go through it all over again."

Benjamin Appleby's next hearing is set for Dec. 3.

Authorities said a tip pointed them to Appleby several months ago, but he was let go, not considered a central suspect.

Another tip was received in the last month, though, which reignited investigators' interest in Appleby, who authorities said had a small pool-cleaning business in the region at the time Kemp was killed.

E-mail scam asks for bank information

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The phishing scam has become a local threat.

Emails that look like they are from Commerce Bank are being sent to people in the area. They are asking students to update their account information.

Tim Ramsey, information technology security coordinator at K-State, said K-State students have received these emails, so students should be careful.

"These scams either want to steal your identity, clean out your bank account or both," he said. "You can't believe everything you read in emails."

Ramsey said students should watch out for emails with generic greeting, formatting or grammatical errors and an urgency of a needed response.

He said these emails hide where the information is sent from and using a different browser besides Internet Explorer might be safer.

Det. Brad Schlerf, with the Riley County Police Department, said the RCPD is investigating to see if K-State students are being targeted.

The emails will likely have a phone number to call and have a Web site to enter in account information. The Web sites look like they are the bank's, but they aren't, Schlerf said.

"In some cases it's a legitimate phone number," he said. "When you respond to the email, it's rerouted to some place else."

Schlerf said if a student receives the scam email they should report it to the police, their internet provider and the bank.

Although Commerce is the only known bank affected, Schlerf said every email should be treated with suspicion, because any bank could be affected by the scam.

Cindy Tetrault, manager of online banking and commercebank.com, said the phishing scam has been around for about 2 years, but it originally targeted bigger banks on the coasts.

She said Commerce Bank, which is located only in the Midwest, began to be targeted nine or 10 months ago.

Commerce Bank is just

Rice to replace Powell

Chuck Kennedy | KRT

National Security Advisor Condoleezza Rice talks with U.S. Secretary of State Colin Powell May 28, 2004, outside of the Oval Office at the White House in Washington, D.C.

Staff and wire reports

National Security Adviser Condoleezza Rice will replace Colin Powell as secretary of state, President Bush announced Tuesday.

The Senate must confirm Rice's appointment before she can begin her official duties.

Other moves in Bush's Cabinet included the resignations of Education Secretary Rod Paige, Secretary of Agriculture Ann Veneman and Secretary of Energy Spencer Abraham.

IRAN BOMB

Iran has the blueprints to make a nuclear bomb, and the country continued to enrich uranium that would enable it to do so.

Despite commitments to suspend the technology to build atomic weapons, Iran's weapons program continued.

Iran is believed to have bought plans for the bomb from the same black-market group that sold similar plans to Libya.

NASA JET

The U.S. space agency NASA fell short of its lofty goal on Tuesday but still managed to set the speed record for a man-made craft.

Officials had hoped NASA's jet could reach Mach-10, or 10 times the speed of sound, which is about 7,000 miles per hour.

The unmanned plane, about 15 feet long, peaked at about 6,700 mph.

RETAILERS MERGE

After facing bankruptcy for several years, Kmart made a move to become the nation's third-largest retailer when it acquired Sears.

The new company formed in the $11 billion deal will be called Sears Holdings Corp.

CLINTON LIBRARY

Former President Bill Clinton's presidential library was dedicated in Little Rock, Ark.

The library's exhibits point to many of Clinton's successes, and one small display covers his impeachment hearings and Monica Lewinsky's infamous blue dress.

IRAQ VIOLENCE

The month of November continued as one of the deadliest months in the war in Iraq. More than 1,200 U.S. soldiers have died in the war.

The U.S.-led assault on Fallujah also contributed to the death count, as forces worked to quell insurgent fighting in the city.

LOCAL MAN DROWNS

A 69-year-old man drowned in Tuttle Creek Lake Wednesday after a boating accident.

Franklin D. Johnson was canoeing with his wife when the boat capsized, and Franklin Johnson became tangled in a rope. His wife was able to free him from the rope, but he was unable to stay above water.

Survey to measure students' costs

By Nathan Ryerson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"The Office of Student Financial Assistance wants to hear students' concerns.

The office has sent out surveys to students via e-mail and hope to determine how students pay for college.

"We are trying to get a good base-line of information we can use in determining the cost of attending K-State," said Tanya McGee, associate director of Financial Assistance.

"We want to make sure that what we think it costs to attend K-State actually matches up with what students have to spend," McGee said.

"We aren't just talking about the big items that everyone already knows about."

Students pay for more than just books, tuition and living expenses. The other expenses are the ones that the survey is supposed to show.

"The price of gas has gone up a lot of the past year," McGee said. "Many students drive home on the weekends and drive to class everyday.

"It is good to know the amount of money being spent on these types of expenditures."

By looking at the average cost of attending the university, financial aid can be adjusted to compensate for increases in the price of going to K-State.

"We review the data collected from the survey, and if we find that the average spending to attend K-State has increased, our office will definitely look at increasing the cost of attendance," said McGee. "The cost of attendance for each student determines the maximum amount of aid, grants, work study, scholarships, and student loans we can offer to students."

Many other items are also in the surveys that also figure in to students expenses. The survey includes questions on entertainment costs per month and car insurance.

"We want to know this information, so that we can make sure that next year students have enough money to live on," McGee said.

This survey process is not new to K-State.

"A few years ago we did a web-based survey similar to this one, and a few years before that we used a written survey," McGee said.

"We see the Web-based surveys as being simpler and less time consuming." "We can also process the data faster and give you immediate results."

Students have until the end of the semester to complete the survey, which should have been sent to their e-mail accounts.

"We are looking to use the information in the next academic year starting in the fall of 2005," said McGee.

500 athletes compete in Special Olympics tourney

By Jeremy Dautenhahn
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Hundreds of Special Olympics athletes gathered at the Chester E. Peters Recreational Complex Saturday to test their bumping, setting and spiking skills.

Fifty-five teams, consisting of 500 athletes, from all over Kansas participated in the 2004 Special Olympics Volleyball Tournament Saturday.

Adrienne Folkerts, Special Olympics public relations director, said she enjoys the tournament, because she does not see the athletes very often.

"I don't get to see the athletes every day, so it is really nice to come to an event like this and be around all of them," she said. "They all know my name. They come up to me with smiles and high fives."

There are 23 official Special Olympics sports in Kansas. As soon as the volleyball season is over then the basketball season will begin.

"A lot of these athletes participate year-round. They are always busy," Folkerts said.

The Manhattan teams include athletes from all over Riley County. The youngest participant on the team is 13, and the oldest is 56.

Kim Schnee, a 21-year veteran of the Special Olympics and local special education teacher, coached the three Manhattan teams that participated this year.

"The enthusiasm of the athletes is the best part about coaching Special Olympics," Schnee said.

"They could be winning or losing, but they don't really even care," she said.

The Manhattan Special Olympic teams are funded through private donations. They also sell programs at K-State home football games to raise money.

More than 100 volunteers helped with the event. Jessica Blasi volunteered with a group of girls from her high school dance team.

"I feel great, I love helping other people," Blasi said.

Public records often make citizens' Social Security numbers visible

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Social Security numbers continue to be visible to the general population in a variety of public records, according to a report issued by the United States Government Accountability Office.

An estimated 80 to 94 percent of U.S. counties display Social Security numbers in public records, raising concerns about identity theft, the GAO report stated.

The report, issued to the chairman of the U.S. House of Representatives Subcommittee on Social Security, Rep. Clay Shaw, earlier this month, surveyed counties across the country on the issue.

The GAO estimated in its report that 15 to 28 percent of the nation's 3,141 counties placed public records, sometimes including Social Security numbers, on the Internet.

Riley County District Court Administrator Becky Topliff said Riley County does not include Social Security numbers on records accessible to the public on the Internet.

"They are not on there," Topliff said.

Court records were found to be the most common local government records with Social Security numbers in which the public could access, as 63 percent of court systems responding to the GAO's survey said the numbers could be visible to the public.

Lynda Wickstrum, Clerk of the Riley County District Court, said Social Security numbers are necessary for identification.

"We still need the Social Security number, because that's how we track people, because many people have the same

OPINION

TO THE POINT

K-State enrollment research should include biracial, multiracial groups

If K-State wants to paint a more accurate and detailed picture of the university demographics, then the Office of Planning and Analysis needs to develop a research category for biracial and multiracial students.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

The office's enrollment statistics help university recruiters identify groups whose on-campus representation is not on par with peer institutions, including Colorado State University, Iowa State University, North Carolina State University, Oklahoma State University and Oregon State University.

Closer to home, the availability of thorough and complete demographic information helps the Office of Student Life better serve potential and current students.

But the reasons for this proposal go beyond improved research and recruitment opportunities.

If K-State researchers offered a category to include biracial and multiracial students, this would provide an alternative to the status quo of forcing biracial and multiracial students to choose between one race or another, or just checking the box for race/ethnicity unknown.

Of course, it is not ideal to label someone as biracial or multiracial without following up with more detailed questions about that person's ethnic heritage.

But having more options – at least on paper – brings us a step closer to gaining a better understanding of the individual people who make up the community in which we live.

And the change sends a progressive message that society does value the unique identities of biracial and multiracial students.

Out of their element

Non-military critics often lose focus on realities of war

JONAS HOGG

It comes as a great surprise to me how utterly ignorant the world is when it comes to the brutality of war. For too long we've had this John Waynian idea that war should be good, right, honorable, etc.

But with the coming of the digital age and the ability to send information around the globe, the world has had to come face-to-face with just how dumb it really is. No where is this evidenced more than the crucifying of a young Marine in Fallujah who is accused of shooting an innocent man.

As a veteran, I am frothing at the mouth every time more fat activists wave the penalty flag, calling for the blood of this man, completely blissful in their ignorance of the real world.

Strangely enough, they have yet to cry foul for the fact that these insurgents were shooting at Marines from inside a mosque. They have yet to wave the penalty flag for Margaret Hassan, the charity worker, Muslim and Iraqi citizen who was likely murdered by the self-proclaimed leaders of a religion of "peace and tolerance."

The god-awful, nasty, bare-boned truth, is that these Marines have, for the last few days, eaten, breathed and drank the things that the FCC won't allow network television to show. They have lived their own personal "Saving Private Ryan."

But this doesn't matter to the armchair generals who – despite never having served in the military, been trained to do so or probably never even considered the possibility of enlisting – are self proclaimed officials on all things war. They go to whatever event is occurring that includes nothing but people who think exactly as they do and vomit forth condemnation of men and women whose bravery they could not begin to fathom.

Illustrations by Jordan Mizell | COLLEGIAN

Does this sound too harsh? Too mean? But Jonas, what he did was wrong!

Maybe that's for the military courts to decide. I'm not asserting that our troops should be given a green light to do anything they please. But I'll give anyone who risks his or her life on a daily basis the benefit of the doubt until proven otherwise. That's the way it's supposed to work: innocent until proven guilty.

Sadly, much of our nation's news media has convinced the peanut gallery this is an unnecessary formality. All that is needed is a pixelated 30-second video clip, and that it should be the people who decide right and wrong.

But as I've said before, the people don't know a damned thing about what they're talking about. Of those chomping at the bit to see this Marine nailed to the wall, I can only imagine what a minuscule percentage know what it's like to go for days on end with hardly any food and probably even less sleep.

I can scarcely imagine who among them knows what it is like to be shot at. And I would be floored to learn that a single one of them would be willing to endure all these things and still resolve themselves to get up, ruck up and do the best job they could, knowing full well that the lives of all those around them depend on them doing their job damn near flawlessly.

But to whoever the nameless Marine is, I would like to say thank you. Your service has not gone unnoticed, and you can rest assured that for every 10 idiots calling for your head, there is at least one pissed off veteran ready to watch your back. Ten to one, I like those odds.

Cinema competition helps Manhattan

JEREMY PARKER

Recently, The Manhattan Mercury reported that Warren Theaters, based out of Wichita, is negotiating building a multiplex in the area. What's that, you say? Somebody other than crappy Carmike Cinemas might be coming to town?

Oh, fabulous day!

The theater would most likely be attached to the mall, though right now, officials are keeping their lips zipped about specifics.

It also has been rumored the theaters will offer the option of ordering food from your seat, so you don't have to miss a single moment of "Kazaam 2" – assuming God ever decides to answer my prayers and gets Shaq back on the silver screen.

A different and less awful theater company is exactly what Manhattan needs. For far too long, movie-going Manhattanites have had no choice but to suckle on the bloated, rotten teat of Carmike Cinemas.

I know you think I'm just bitter because, many moons ago, they busted me for buying tickets to "Star Wars" and sneaking into "Private Parts."

Still, ticket prices keep going up, and they don't offer student discounts like other college-town theaters. Their bathrooms are constantly out of order. Oh, and there's that whole "not bringing movies to town unless they're 100 percent mainstream" thing.

Take "Napoleon Dynamite," for example. This is easily the most rad flick in the universe, but did the local Carmike bring it to town when it opened?

Nope. And why would they? After all, it was only written and directed by Jared Hess, who spent a substantial portion of his childhood growing up here in Manhattan.

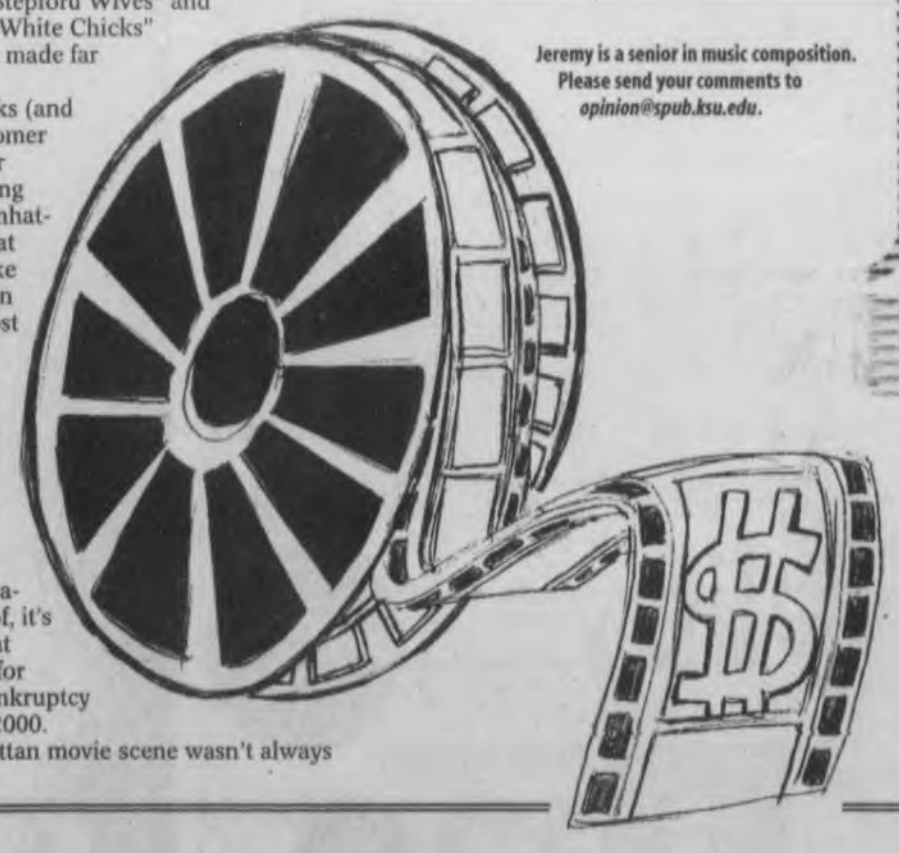
You might think the local Carmike would want to showcase the home-grown talent, since popular movies directed by Manhattanites see nationwide success roughly once every never.

Instead, they decided to show the monumentally stupid "Garfield: The Movie" in two different theaters. (Quick side note: is "The Movie" really necessary in the title? Isn't it rather obvious?).

Five months after the movie was released, Carmike finally brought it here. Of course, by that point, everyone who wanted to see it had already done so in a different theater somewhere else. It showed here for a whole week.

The same thing happened with "Fahrenheit 911." Like it or not, this was a wildly successful movie, but (of course) Carmike displayed awful business sense as usual. Instead, they preferred to show "The Stepford Wives" and the atrocious "White Chicks" (both of which made far less money).

It took weeks (and hordes of customer complaints) for Carmike to bring the film to Manhattan. And by that point, much like with "Napoleon Dynamite," most of us had already gone to see it in someone else's theater.



So after looking at the boneheaded business blunders this company is capable of, it's no surprise that Carmike filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection in 2000.

The Manhattan movie scene wasn't always this appalling. Years ago, we had a much wider variety of theaters from which to choose. Carmike didn't always have a monopoly in Manhattan, and they weren't always able to hike ticket prices on a whim.

There used to be a lovely little dollar theater just down the block in Aggieville, until a price-gouging monopoly of a different sort (let's just say it was a bookstore we all know and loathe) declared manifest destiny on Manhattan and bought out its space.

So keep your fingers crossed that Warren Theaters will come to town. It's the only thing that would make Manhattan a less awful place to see a movie.

Jeremy is a senior in music composition. Please send your comments to opinion@spub.ksu.edu.

CAMPUS FOURUM | 395-4444 -or- fourum@spub.ksu.edu

Dear Santa, please bring me a school newspaper worth reading.

Yeah, I just killed a possum with a 2x4, it was great.

I wish all the people who drive even though they live close to campus would stop complaining about parking. It's no wonder why we're the laziest, fattest country in the world.

Is it just me, or are there a lot of giant dogs around Manhattan lately?

Will the Phi-Delts please stop calling the Fourum and trying to get good P.R.?

To the girl in the tie-dyed sweatshirt yesterday: you ruined my week.

My roommate's dad drunk-dialed me during a test. Is that normal?

Dancing is something you do alone, in your room, at 3 in the morning.

I'm going to wallow in my sorrows when I realize Sproles isn't going to be here any more. I just might have an emotional breakdown.

To the boy in my 7:30 Calc class: Stop pounding on the desk, or I'll rip your hands off. Have a great day.

Joe Rheem is still my boyfriend, but he still doesn't know it yet.

Just wanted to say good luck to all the senior football players. They deserve to go out with a win. Go K-State!

I haven't had a cigarette today, but after reading the article on the Smoke Out and seeing the gas-for-less sale prices on cigarettes, I think I'll go buy myself a pack.

My roommate likes to leave me notes right in front of the toilet so I can read them while I'm going pee.

So, Incubus, you better be worth missing Thanksgiving dinner.

Nothing gets the point across like a dead duck on the windshield.

Oh, I want a hippopotamus for Christmas.

Umm, yes, to the guy in the Mustang that tried to peel out in front of me just now: You're definitely not cool.

I was so hungry in class today that my teacher's head started to look like a turnip.

Flint Hills Breadbasket to sponsor Thanksgiving dinner

By Loni Woolery
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State students and community members are invited to a Thanksgiving dinner Thursday.

The Flint Hills Breadbasket will sponsor the annual Community Thanksgiving Dinner from noon to 2 p.m. on Thanksgiving Day.

Tacha Philip, who works for the Breadbasket, encouraged students who are unable to go home for Thanksgiving to participate in the event. The traditional meal is offered free of charge to anyone who wants to attend.

The turnout in the past few years has been very successful, she said. More than 1,200 meals were prepared last year.

"This is a great opportunity for students to get out and meet community members," Philip said.

Several local businesses have donated food for the event including Dillon's, K-State Grain Science and Industry, and Bocker's Two Catering. Volunteers have offered to work at the event on Thanksgiving.

"This year we are doing something new. We are delivering to the Kansas State Police Department and those officers who are on duty," Philip said.

The Breadbasket also offers the Riley County Police Department and Fire Department free lunch, but they haven't confirmed whether they will accept.

"This isn't just for the low-income families," Philip said. "It is for the entire community."

Professor named to committee

DeGroat to serve Army Education Advisory group

By Heather Bunch
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A K-State professor will soon be affecting learning at a national level.

Lt. Colonel Arthur DeGroat has been named to the Army Education Advisory Committee.

A nationally successful program, the Army ROTC helps to meet the nation's need for commissioning high-quality officers for the armed forces.

"This is a system we have an opportunity to improve and make more relevant for the future," DeGroat said.

Of the 272 schools in the nation that have ROTC programs, only four chairs are held by people from those schools.

"I think that a K-State faculty member holding one of those chairs is pretty significant," DeGroat said.

"It's wonderful for us to have someone from our institution be on a national committee like that and interface with the high level Pentagon officials, and I think it's also recognition that we have a very strong program here," said Sue Peterson, assistant to the president of K- State and director of governmental relations.

DeGroat said he strives to make the program more progressive and contemporary.

"I now have a voice at the national level to get some ideas on the table and hopefully stimulate some changes to the Army ROTC program nationwide," DeGroat said. We want to make it a little more responsive to the needs of our country."

DeGroat said he hopes to bring curriculum enhancements to the council, offering solutions for meeting resource needs, taking a new look at recruiting practices, and possibly restructuring the way that scholarship students are selected.

"There are probably some areas in just about every function of our process here that could stand a little healthy debate with some outside ideas," DeGroat said.

Career counseling is one initiative DeGroat said he hopes to bring to the council. The counseling has been pioneered by K-State.

"The programs we've instituted here with our students I think could be expanded to the national level to help them make a wise choice as to what part of the military they want to serve in as an officer," DeGroat said.

"Lt. Colonel DeGroat has made enormous contributions to our army ROTC program over his tenure (at K-State). This appointment is most deserved for a job well done," said Dean of Student Life Pat Bosco.

DeGroat said the council will not take him away from his duties as a professor.

"I anticipate two or three group trips to the Washington, D.C. area followed by a lot of solitary work to bring things forward," DeGroat said.

"I have the energy for it. I have the passion for it, and we have done so much ground work here at Kansas State that it's just sharing what we have done in our innovative programs here with others," DeGroat said.

"I look at this as a validating event for the work that has been going on in this department for the last five years, bringing our army ROTC program back in to the nationally ranked program that it had been historically."

Student panel discusses biracial issues

By Patrice R. Holderbach
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Growing up as a biracial child, Kara Wilder always felt like a dandelion in the garden of humanity.

"I always use the analogy of a dandelion, because it's a flower and a weed at the same time," Wilder said, as she spoke Friday about issues affecting biracial students.

"As an adult now, I am accepted into the black community, for the most part, but there are still those who don't think I'm black enough or white enough," Wilder, sophomore in speech, said.

Wilder was one of several students participating on the panel called "Between the Color Lines: Identity Issues Facing Biracial Students."

The American Ethnic Studies Student Association and two students from an American Ethnic Studies leadership recitation – Alicia Edison, senior in psychology, and Traci Smith, senior in social sciences – sponsored the panel, which explored topics ranging from current perceptions about biracial heritage among students, to experiencing childhood as a minority in a rural Kansas town.

Edison pointed out K-State offers no organizations devoted specifically to the developmental needs of biracial students.

"There isn't any safe haven for students like these on this campus," Edison said.

It is almost impossible to say how many biracial students attend K-State, because the Office of Planning and Analysis does not maintain data on biracial students. Rather, students might be classified within the race/ethnicity unknown category of research. The other categories include nonresident alien, black non-Hispanic, American Indian or Alaskan Native, Asian or Pacific Islander, Hispanic or white non-Hispanic.

Edison – whose mother's ancestry is English, Irish and German and whose father's is African, Native American and French – revealed the confusion about identity that had accompanied her childhood.

"We moved to Wisconsin in a small community 80 miles south of Canada, and for the first time I was black. I was 7 years old when I found out. Before that, I was golden," Edison said.

"My mom had always told me I was beautiful and golden."

Sheryl Edison, Alicia Edison's mother, emerged from the crowd in the Union Courtyard to embrace her daughter after the presentation.

"The most beautiful babies are biracial babies – you always get the best of both worlds," Sheryl said.

But problems can arise if parents don't take time to help children understand their heritage, said Alexandra Carter, sophomore in theater.

"We were always surrounded by both the cultures in the home, and I think that helped," Carter said. "My kids are going to have Korean in them, and I want them to know their heritage, their background."

For Roy Shaffer, sophomore in sociology, growing up in Scott City, Kan., sometimes meant having to choose between favoring his two ethnic backgrounds.

But like many on the panel, Shaffer plans to use his experience to help educate others about biracial diversity.

"When you face discrimination, then you know the evils in the world, and you can do something about them," he said.

Team needs to change before next season

JOSH WITT

On Saturday, a season that few thought could get any worse did, as K-State blew a two-touchdown, fourth quarter lead in a loss to Iowa State.

This was a classic "play for pride" game, and for more than three quarters it looked like the Wildcats were doing just that.

No, it wasn't pretty, but the offense and defense were providing enough to get by.

Defensive end Scott Edmonds was harassing Cyclone quarterback Bret Meyer all day. Darren Sproles was doing things that only Darren Sproles can do, as the 5-foot-7 running back and the offensive line looked to be wearing down Iowa State.

A win, and a little relief from a hard season, was a sure thing.

Or not.

The Cyclones scored 28 points in the fourth quarter on their way to a win.

28 points?!

Now, the fault of two of those touchdowns can be attributed to quarterback Allen Webb – one pass was picked off for a touchdown and his fumble quickly led to a score.

But that still leaves two touchdowns scored by the No. 103 scoring offense in the nation.

To put it nicely: that's really, really bad.

The Wildcats complete collapse put an exclamation point on a 4-7 year that is the worst K-State football record since Coach Bill Snyder's first season in 1989.

Asked if the season was the most frustrating months of his coaching career, Snyder had a simple response.

"Yes."

Rest-assured there is going to be some house-cleaning this offseason.

Following the game, Snyder said the team was going to have to take a long, hard look at itself in the coming weeks and months. Several players said many Wildcats didn't carry their weight and bring enough desire to the team this season.

There is little doubt Snyder is going to push his players, mentally and physically, to the limit this offseason.

Don't be the least bit surprised if some players are demoted and maybe some transfer or

Heartbreaking ending

Cats blow lead over Cyclones on Senior Day

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It was K-State's game to lose, and the Wildcats did just that.

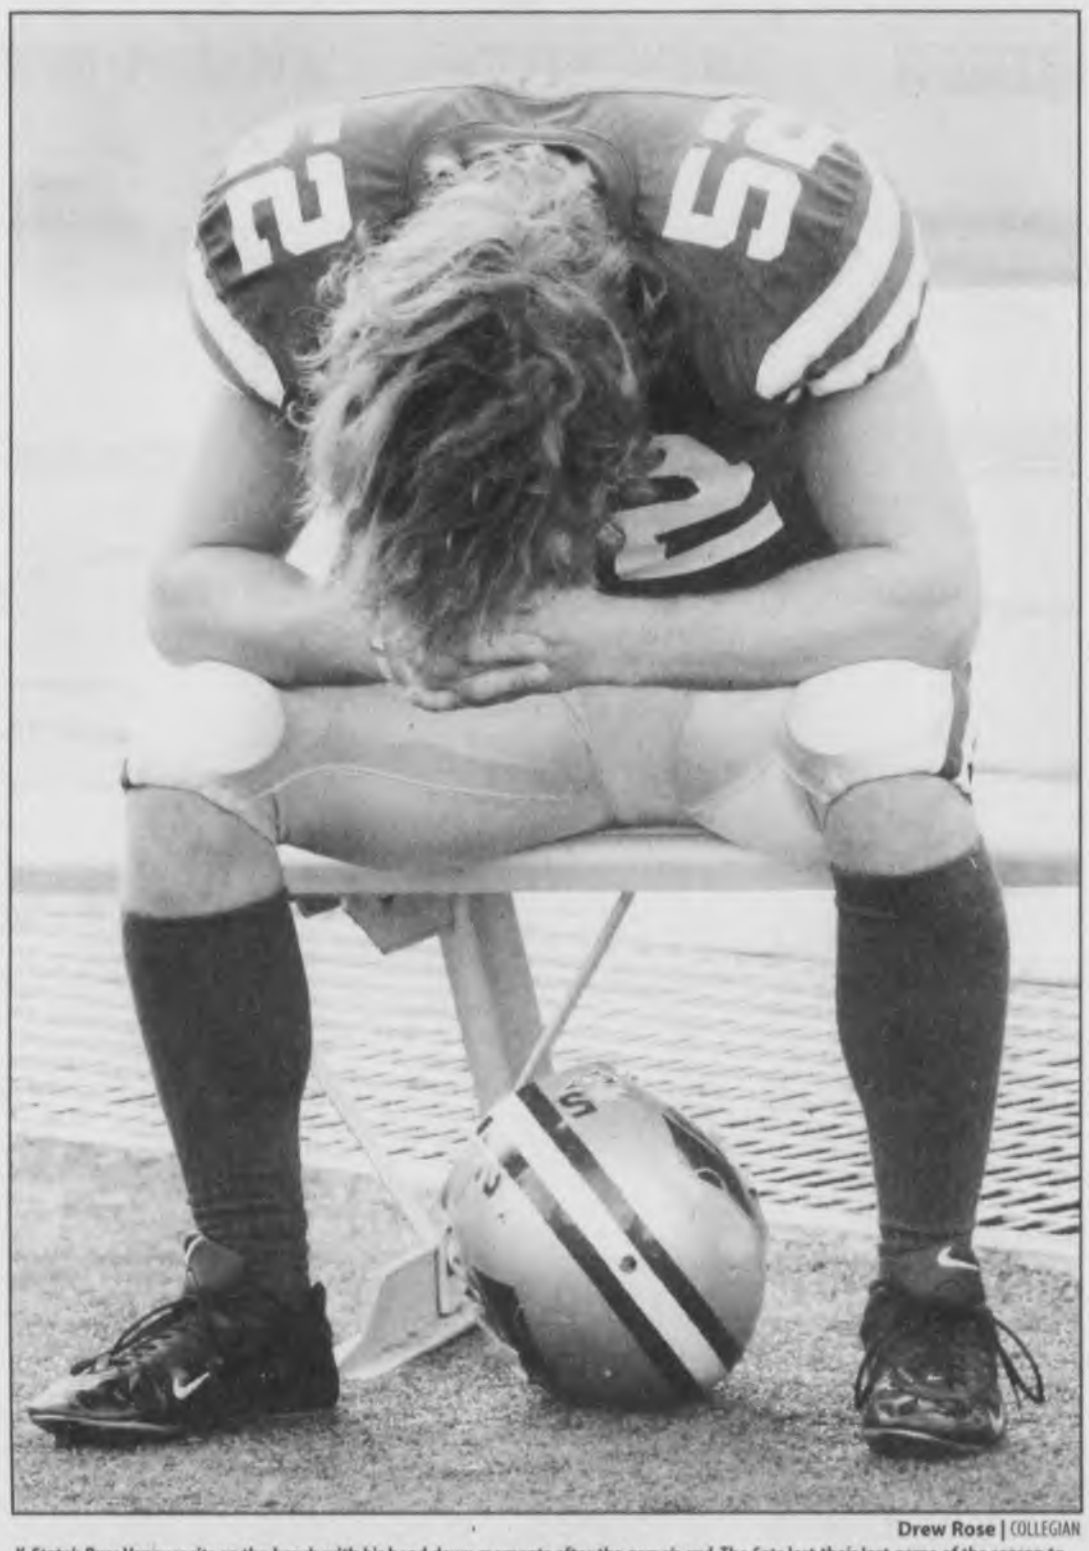
On Saturday, the Wildcats (4-7, 2-6) were a quarter away from sending the senior class of 2004 out with a win and setting back Iowa State's (6-4, 4-3) hopes of a division title, but were unable to hold on to a 14-point fourth quarter lead, losing to the Cyclones 37-23.

Senior place-kicker Joe Rheem had trouble describing the Wildcat's fourth-quarter collapse.

"I would never imagine that happening." Rheem said. "It is really hard and frustrating for us blow a huge lead like that."

With 14:17 left in the game, sophomore quarterback Allen Webb plunged across the goal line to give the Wildcats a 23-9 lead. On the ensuing extra-point attempt, Rheem's kick was blocked by the Cyclones, giving the Wildcats a 14-point lead instead of a 15-point lead.

"The blocked extra point was big at that time, because you are looking at the potential that they have to score twice and get a two-point conversion," Coach Bill Snyder said.



Iowa State then drove 60 yards down the field in 11 plays to pull within a touchdown, 23-16. After two unsuccessful Wildcat drives, the Cyclones struck again, tying the game at 23-23 with 3:24 left.

Forty-seven seconds later, Webb fumbled on the K-State 35-yard line and Iowa State capitalized with the go-ahead touchdown, making it 30-23. The Cyclones finished off the Wildcats with a interception return for a touchdown with 1:48 left in the game.

Snyder said the Cyclones' comeback was a combination of things.

"Obviously, we turned the ball over and that is going to put you in jeopardy, and it did," Snyder said. "You better be able to hold onto the football and respond when the opportunity arises. We've just not been able to answer."

Iowa State's 28 fourth quarter points were the most given up by a Wildcat defense since giving up 21 to Oklahoma in 1996.

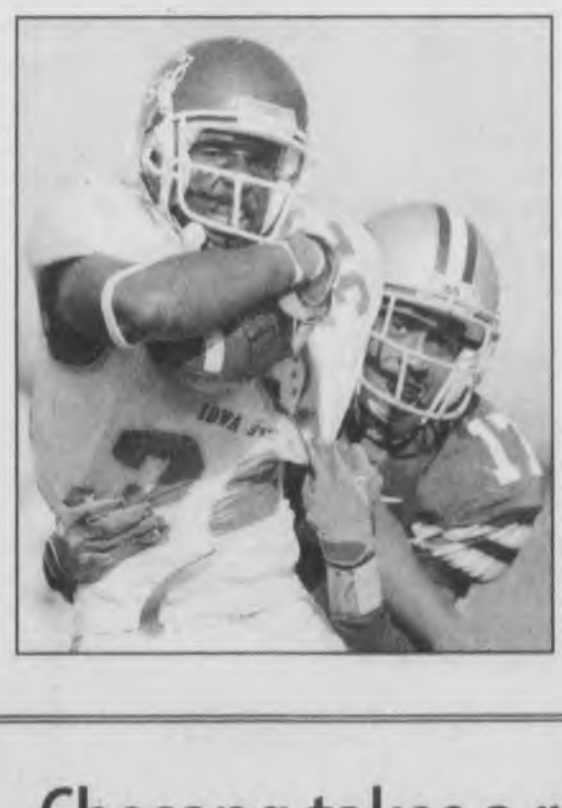
K-State's Russ Vanover sits on the bench with his head down moments after the game's end. The Cats lost their last game of the season to Iowa State, 37-23.



The Cyclones were led by freshman quarterback Bret Meyer and freshman running back Stevie Hicks. Meyer was 16-of-30 for 234 yards with a touchdown, while Hicks rushed for 156 yards on 29 carries and a touchdown.

Senior running back Darren Sproles, who played in his final game at K-State, was the lone bright spot for the Wildcats.

Sproles rushed for 167 yards on 21 carries with a touchdown, caught two passes for 13 yards and cemented himself into the NCAA record books.

Senior center Brie Madden had a career game, scoring 18 points, 14 of them in the first half in the Wildcats 85-53 win over Pepperdine on Sunday night. Read the story at www.kstatecollegian.com.

NBA | Artest suspended for remainder of the season

Ron Artest of the Indiana Pacers was suspended for the rest of the season Sunday, and two of his teammates received suspensions of at least 25 games for fighting with fans towards the end of its game with the Detroit Pistons on Friday.

Artest

Nine players were banned for a combined 143 games. Artest is the first player to be suspended for nearly an entire season for a fight during a game.

The fight began after Artest was shoved by Detroit's Ben Wallace after he committed a hard foul on him with less than a minute remaining. The situation seemed to under control until a fan threw and hit Artest with a drink, causing him to jump over the scorers' table and into the stands.

Indiana's Stephen Jackson was suspended for 30 games, Jermaine O'Neal for 25 and Anthony Johnson is serving a five game suspension which they began serving on Saturday.

Detroit's Wallace drew a six-game suspension for his part in the fight.

Four other players were suspended for one game apiece. All the suspensions are without pay.

NASCAR | Busch wins Nextel Cup championship

Kurt Busch overcame a broken wheel early in the race and four extra laps forced by a late restart, to win the closest championship in NASCAR history on Sunday.

Busch came into the the finale of the 10-man, 10-race Chase for the Nextel cup Championship leading Jimmie Johnson by only eight points.

Madden has career day against Pepperdine

Brie Madden scored a career-high 18 points Sunday night to power No. 19 K-State to an 85-53 win over Pepperdine.

Madden also added seven rebounds, two blocked shots and two steals to help the Wildcats shut down Pepperdine's aggressive attack.

Head Coach Deb Patterson said Madden's play was a good sign for her team.

"It was really encouraging to see the play of our post players tonight and Brie in particular, I thought, came out with a very aggressive mindset," Patterson said. "I hope that is just the beginning of what we are going to see from her. The fact that she took the floor today and really established herself consistently on both ends is just absolutely a great positive for our basketball team."

Madden said she was happy with her overall play and the team's play against Pepperdine.

"I am happy, but I'm more happy with the way I played defense and the way my teammates played defense and the way Shana (Wheeler) played all along," Madden said. "I am more worried about my rebounding and blocking shots and keeping the posts from scoring. I really worked hard."

Chesang takes a run at history at NCAA tourney

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When Mathew Chesang approaches the starting line today at the NCAA Championships in Terre Haute, Ind., it will be the end result of a season of determination and desire.

Chesang

Chesang fought back from injury to qualify for the national meet, and now has the chance to become K-State's first All-American since Francis O'Neill in 1992.

Back in September, things did not look good for Chesang.

After a car accident left him bruised and battered, the outlook was bleak for the senior cross country runner.

Coach Michael Smith said after the accident, the odds were against Chesang.

"No one but him and I know how hurt he was," Smith said. "He bashed his knee pretty bad, and he had whiplash. It's tough enough to run. It's even tougher when body parts don't feel good."

Smith said Chesang's desire to compete is the reason he has been able to fight back.

"He's got a tremendous amount of competitive spirit," Smith said. "For him to overcome that and reach this level – that is awesome."

After the accident, Chesang began the recovery process in training.

Smith said at times, it was hard on Chesang.

"In the back of his mind, I'm sure he's really disappointed that he hasn't reached the level that he could have had he not had to miss two to three weeks because of that accident," Smith said.

However, at the Big 12 Championships, Chesang burst back onto the scene. In his first race in almost two months, and just his second of the season, he finished third.

Then, at the Midwest Regionals on Nov. 13, Chesang earned his bid to the NCAA Championships by finishing second to Minnesota's Andrew Carlson.

Poker night

144 players participate in Hold 'Em tournament

By Paul Suter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Several people didn't know when to fold 'em at the first Texas Hold 'Em poker tournament at the K-State Student Union.

There were 144 entries for the tournament, which was part of After Hours, sponsored by the Union Program Council, Wildcat Warmup and the National Broadcast Association.

The event started at 8:30 p.m. and continued through midnight on Friday in the Flint Hills and Cottonwood rooms on the second floor concourse. The top place prize was a 20-inch flat-screen television, and second place prize was a five-disc CD player.

Other prizes at the event included a DVD player, three-disc CD player, various K-State apparel and gift certificates.

The tournament featured many veteran poker players, as well as some amateurs. For Mario Pereira, junior in construction science and management, this was his first tournament he participated in.

"I came today to support my friends that taught me. We have been having a poker night every Thursday for the past month," Pereira said. "I give credit to my 'dawgz' Jeremy and Keith for teaching me how to play."

As a first time player, Pereira did not really have much of a strategy for the event.

"I didn't really have a strategy and did not place, but was just fun. I just went with the flow," Pereira said. "I would probably enter this event next year and hopefully be a lot better with all the poker on TV now."

Kelsey Harpster, sophomore in biology and pre-medicine and director of Wildcat Warmup, said she thought the tournament was a complete success.

"I liked to watch the competitive spirit of the players. It was also a chance to learn something new. The event was really fun and everyone enjoyed it," Harpster said. "We even had to call up other dealers, because all the spots were full."

Although being the first time the event was held, Harpster is already suggesting ideas to make it better in the future and hoping the poker tournament will be an annual event and try to make it a tradition.

"We need to be able to have more tables and more space. Maybe have it in the ballroom instead of separate rooms. We could also try to reach over the Listserv to get people, and reach out and find more supplies," Harpster said.

The tournament also featured Pat Bosco, the dean of student life, as a volunteer dealer along with many other volunteers.

"It was nice to have support from the faculty and the university," Harpster said.

Steven Wignall, fifth place finisher, and senior in business and administrative marketing, said he was happy to make the final table that included seven men and one woman.

"I was ahead most in the beginning," Wignall said. "I won on back-to-back hands with a high straight and then a full house knocking out two guys. Toward the end, I was short stacked, and had to play conservative."

Wignall said he had a great time and probably would participate in the event if if they have one next semester.

"The tournament was really good and pretty well run," Wignall said. "I heard about it around 5:30 p.m. the night of the event, and had to be waitlisted to play. I got to play as some entries didn't show up."

Wainwright focused, driven on 'Want Two'

"Want Two"
Album review by Jessica Grant

Rufus Wainwright is here to make a statement, one note at a time.

"Want Two" is the followup installment of 2003's highly acclaimed "Want One."

Courtesy Art

In "Want Two" Wainwright appears as a long-haired maiden in a flowing gown – an image that not only plays into his campy, dramatic personal style, but also makes a statement about Wainwright's position as a homosexual icon.

And this ambitious young man is not afraid to make statements with his music.

In a recent interview with Rolling Stone magazine, Wainwright explained his choice of opening "Want Two" with the brooding and abstract violin driven "Agnus Dei," which is a Latin peace prayer.

"One of the things that fascinates me about this time period is that with the conservative-American attitude out there, it's considered that if you're not super-religious or heterosexual, you have no spirituality and you don't really care about the well-being of America and the world," Wainwright said.

Showing us the way is precisely what "Want Two" does for the listener. The album is about perspectives outside of the mainstream and frankly, it's a gorgeous place to be.

Overall, "Want Two" is even more focused, lush and driven than "Want One." Wainwright has a unique lyrical voice tough to compare to any contemporary musician.

While the album begins with the heavy "Agnus Dei," Wainwright masterfully offsets this piece with the upbeat and melodic "The One You Love."

"The Art Teacher" is a phenomenal piano-driven piece about unrequited love.

The most interesting track is "Gay Messiah." In it, he makes a powerful statement about religion and his lifestyle.

The lyrics "He will be reborn/From 1970's porn/Wearing tube socks with style/And such an innocent smile," are comic, yet the tone of the song also laments his inability to become any sort of homosexual icon. "No it will not be me/Rufus the Baptist I be."

"Want Two" is a lush, lyrical, orchestral album that is complex and beautiful. Wainwright proves his staying power as a pop musician.

Eminem mixes the serious with silly on latest album

"Encore"
Album review by Matt Groneman

I would like to believe Eminem is a great artist.

Eminem's first two albums were excellent beyond belief, and "The Eminem Show" was almost up to their level – "Encore," Eminem's latest release, is not.

There are two types of great artists.

The first type of artist is the kind who revisits the same issues over and over again but does so in a seemingly infinite amount of styles, like Prince.

The other type of artist is one who explores many different themes in their career, though their sound stays relatively the same, like Johnny Cash.

Eminem falls between the categories.

Every Eminem album will discuss the hate he feels for Kim and whine about the difficulties of being famous. Yet, every new album also sees Eminem pushing into new territory, and on this album it is politics, Bush and Iraq.

Stylistically the samples and beats on this album spread themselves wide between Middle Eastern rhythms and girl-pop groups. Still, Eminem is a rap artist and won't abandon rap to tackle country or blues or jazz.

Eminem is growing as an artist, and that's great news for his fans. He is tackling new issues and expanding his sound, even if he's not completely reinventing himself.

One of the problems with growing is that sometimes artists don't grow at the same pace as their art. They have great ideas of what they want art to do, but don't know how to make it happen.

Eminem isn't boring and preachy, but I think he is worried about losing his sense of humor. Politics are serious, and to lighten the mood, he overloads the album with burp and fart noises and Pee-Wee-Hermanesque laughs, and fart jokes haven't been cool since middle school.

In the past, Eminem's beats would lay the foundation, but his voice would do all of the work. His voice can bend and crack to show all the nuances of emotion.

On this album he's rapping so fast, trying to fit in all he wants to say, that he forgets to take the time to let his voice show heartache and anger all at the same time, and that pathos has been as much of a defining factor of Eminem's music as his humor. Now, it's the beats hooking the audience and not Eminem's voice.

Prince turned "Controversy" into a success by following what he wanted and emerging with "1999."

I believe in Eminem's ability to explore political themes without the use of fart noises.

Buck surrenders to police

Rapper, Young Buck, surrendered Friday to face charges that he stabbed a man who had punched hip-hop superstar Dr. Dre during the taping of a music awards show.

Young Buck, whose real name is David Darnell Brown, turned himself in at police headquarters and was arrested for investigation of one count of attempted murder and one count of assault with a deadly weapon.

Brown, wearing a knit cap and heavy chain necklace, was released on $500,000 bail after being ordered to appear at a Dec. 20 arraignment.

Brown was identified on a videotape of the melee that erupted during the taping of the Vibe Awards on Monday.

The tape appears to show Brown wielding a knife, but his attorney, Scott Leemon, warned against jumping to conclusions.

"Remember one thing, pictures may be deceiving," Leemon said.

Station rejects promo spot for 'Kinsey'

The New York television station WNET has rejected a promotion for "Kinsey," a film that has triggered protests among some conservative groups, because it is too provocative, the station said on Friday.

Fox Searchlight Pictures, which is distributing the movie on pioneering sex researcher Alfred Kinsey, called the decision "shocking" and said no other station in the country has rejected commercials for it.

"New York is the most sophisticated city in the country," said Nancy Utley, marketing chief for Fox Searchlight. "It would never occur to me that a censorship issue would come up in New York."

OutKast top winner at MTV Europe Awards

OutKast topped the winners list at the MTV Europe Music Awards, picking up three prizes, including best group. The hip-hop stars from Atlanta also won best video and song for "Hey Ya!"

Andre 3000

"I hope you don't get tired of us. We only do what we do," said OutKast's Andre 3000 while thanking the crowd of about 6,000 Thursday at the Tor di Valle hippodrome.

Winners also included Usher, best album for "Confessions" and best male; Alicia Keys, best R&B; Britney Spears, best female; Black Eyed Peas, best pop; and Linkin Park, best rock.

The ceremony featured performances by Usher and Keys, Eminem, Scottish rockers Franz Ferdinand, Swedish punk band the Hives and Gwen Stefani.

Thurman, boyfriend buy Guccione estate

The former Hudson Valley estate of Penthouse magazine founder Bob Guccione is being sold to hotelier Andres Balazs and actress Uma Thurman, according to the property's auctioneer.

George Cole Auctions sold off the contents of Guccione's former summer house at the end of the summer. Cole, who is also a licensed real estate broker, said Balazs and Thurman attended the auction, expressed interest in the property and have a contract to buy it.

The 55-acre estate and 16-room mansion in the hamlet of Staatsburg are 60 miles south of Albany.

FOOTBALL | Loss to Iowa State leaves players upset

all-purpose yardage with 6,812 and also the top 10 of career rushing yardage with 4,979.

But Sproles said the records didn't matter.

"I'm hurt because we had them and then we lost again in the last two minutes of the game," Sproles said. "We just couldn't finish."

The Wildcat's final record of 4-7 is the worst finish under Snyder since 1989, when K-State ended the season at 1-10.

Junior tackle Jeromey Clary said the loss summed up the season for him.

"It upsets me that we have to send our seniors off like that," Clary said. "We just never played as a team. We had little slip-ups and once we slipped, we (were) never able to get it back, and today we showed that again."

After the game, Snyder said he thanked the seniors for their efforts and told the underclassman what he expects next season.

"I told our underclassman what was going to take place in the future," Snyder said.

"That they needed to take some time now, and really put things in order for themselves and make some decisions about what they are willing to do and what kind of sacrifices they are willing to make when we come back and put this thing back together again."

COLUMN | Football team must make big changes

Snyder is not going to mess around.

And there should be some big moves made.

Although this team had a ton to deal with this season in terms of injuries, Saturday's game showed that banged-up players were not the Wildcats' main problem.

This team could never finish what it started.

Whether it was putting together a winning streak – K-State never won two games in a row this season – holding on to a fourth-quarter lead or getting a critical third-down stop/conversion, this team just didn't have it.

Yes, the Wildcats did have heart.

Guys like Darren Sproles put it all out there everyday, and fans acknowledged that with cheers after the loss.

But Darren's gone.

More individuals in that K-State locker room must step up not just by example, but vocally.

Saturday was the final "wake-up call", in a season full of them, that the Wildcats can't just show up and expect the big plays to come to them.

After the program's worst season since the 1980s, hopefully the team is finally awake.

CROSS COUNTRY | Chesang has chance at history

What seemed like a distant goal has now become a distinct possibility – Chesang has a chance to make K-State history.

With a top-30 finish at the Championships, Chesang will become an All-American. In K-State's history, there have only been seven cross country All-Americans.

Smith said it will not be an easy task, but he has no doubt Chesang will run the race at his very best.

"He'll be running against the best people in the United States and possibly the world," Smith said. "If he gets to the starting line, he will compete with his absolute best. I know if he gets to the line, and he competes well, he'll perform well."

Smith said Chesang could go out as one of the best cross country runners in K-State history.

"He's one of the best if he finishes it off," Smith said. "He could be considered one of the best distance runners to come through Kansas State University. He's already pleased me beyond expectations given what happened. I hope, for him, that he goes out and gets in the top 30."

BASKETBALL | Cats clamp down on Pepperdine

in double figures.

Megan Mahoney scored 15, Claire Coggins added 11 and Wheeler, in just her second collegiate game, scored a career-high 10 points.

Meanwhile, Pepperdine (0-2) was led by Jennifer Lacy's 13 points. Daphanie Kennedy chipped in 11 points.

Patterson said Pepperdine gave her team a great test physically.

"I like the way this Pepperdine team approached the game," Patterson said. "I thought they presented a good inside-outside attack. They had some quickness and some physical play, both inside and out. It's a basketball team I'm glad we had the opportunity to play."

Megan Mahoney said playing aggressive defense is a daily goal for the Wildcats.

"I think, definitely, our defense has to be something that we have to try and be consistent with," Mahoney said.

On Friday night, the Wildcats beat Wyoming 85-42 in the season opener for both teams.

Kendra Wecker led K-State with 21 points and nine rebounds in a game that saw all but two Wildcats score.

Wyoming Head Coach Joe Legerski said K-State's style of play was hard to prepare for.

"Coming into this game, we knew what kind of intensity that K-State was going to bring, both offensively and defensively," Legerski said. "We cannot simulate that in practice. I knew that this was going to be a hard opener for us, and it proved to be more than that."

Western riders finish season with Black Hawk victories

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Western squad of the K-State equestrian team wrapped up its season with a victory over the weekend at the Black Hawk Western Show in Kewanee, Ill.

Senior Kristin Tanney said winning was all about the mindset.

"I think that we did really well as a team. We did a good job on defense blocking the points from other teams, and it really showed up," Tanney said. "The biggest challenge was just making sure we stayed together as a team and kept up the competitive spirit."

During the first show on Saturday, the team captured three first-place and six second-place finishes.

The Reserve High Point Rider was awarded to sophomore Amanda Smith, leading the Wildcats to receive the Reserve High Point Team award.

K-State finished just behind Black Hawk, the host team.

The riders who finished first were Smith in Reining, senior Melissa Becking in Advanced Horsemanship and Nicole Ruff in Open Horsemanship A.

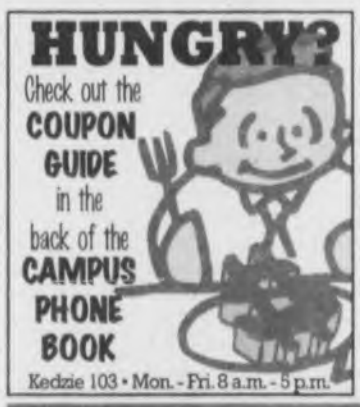
The team came back with a winning mentality to beat Black Hawk to capture High Point Team at the second show on Saturday.

High Point Rider was sophomore Sara Weller and Reserve High Point Rider was Ruff.

Assistant Coach Nichole Tiffany said much of the team's success was due to the high level of preparation.

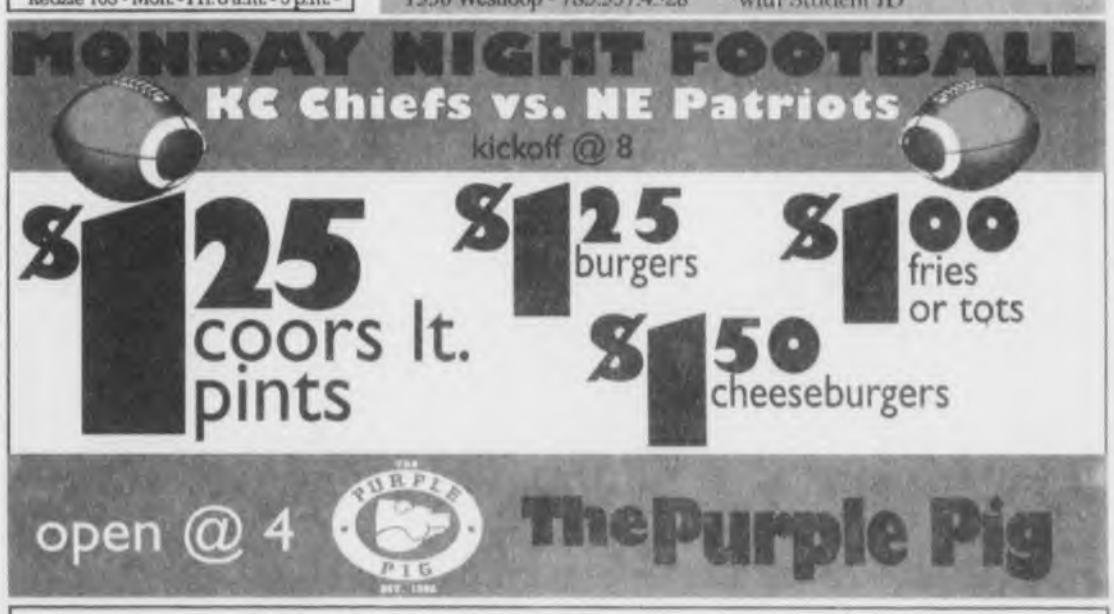
"Quite frankly, we were one of the more prepared teams, and it paid off," Tiffany said. "The girls were both mentally prepared, as well as talent wise. I am very pleased that we had such a great weekend."

On Sunday, K-State won the final show.



"We went back Saturday with the want to win, and it really helped us out because we did win. Then, on Sunday, we came back again wanting and thinking of a win, and we did," Tanney said.

Black Hawk again fell short to the K-State riders as High Point Individual was awarded to Ruff.



Tiffany said although the fall shows are over, the team will not let up on practices. The Wildcats will be back in the barn for practices until winter break and start up again shortly following.

"We have got to go home and work. We need to work on how to maneuver in the pin and put ourselves in positions that reflect the actual horse show scene," Tiffany said.

The team's next show is March 5-6, 2005 in Springfield, Mo.

Red Raiders upset Wildcats

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After winning the first two games of its match against Texas Tech, K-State seemed to be cruising to a fourth-straight win. Then everything started to fall apart.

The No. 20 Wildcats tumbled to the unranked Red Raiders on Saturday at Ahearn Field House, dropping their last three games to lose the match 30-27, 30-24, 28-30, 25-30 and 12-15. K-State falls to 18-9 overall with the loss, and 12-6 in the Big 12 Conference. Texas Tech moves to 10-14 and 6-12 in the Big 12.

"We were incredibly unfocused coming out in game three," Coach Suzie Fritz said. "It's unbelievable that we can blow a two-game lead, and I take responsibility for that. We obviously didn't have (the team) prepared."

K-State did out-block and out-dig the Red Raiders, but the Cats had 15 service errors on the night and gave up eight aces to Texas Tech. They also never had an answer for outside hitter Kelly Johnson, who led the Red Raiders with 33 kills on .386 hitting.
